THE SPIRIT OF THE SPHINX!

By Edwin Thanhouser

NO TWO human beings on earth experience the same sensation when they look down from the top of the Woolworth Tower. It's the same way when you look at the Sphinx, only that it plays on your imagination instead of your physical fibre.

As you stand before that old stone monarch of the desert, a monument to the genius of a day long forgotten, it sends a sensation into your brain that you can never forget. Just think of it! The man in whose brain that mastodonic engineering feat was born returned to his dust centuries ago, but his work still stands! You just feel all about you the spirit of the men who toiled to build it!

The Sphinx tells you plainly that you're welcome to pass your judgment on it—that the old Egyptians who put it there were satisfied to stake their reputations as engineers on that work.

And so it stands there, a silent sentinel throughout the ages, reminding every man who views it that whatever is worth doing at all is worth every ounce of brain and heart and MUSCLE that the Almighty gave you!

Thrilling? Inspiring? Manalive—it just overwhelms you! I want it to help you understand what I have gained in my three years of travel. New inspiration, new energy, new IDEAS! And you will see it all in the new Thanhouser releases.

It will not be advertised value alone that will give you reason to use my pictures, but a high quality of art on which I am heartily willing to stake my past reputation as well as my future one as a picture producer.

My work and your ledger will make you my friend!

Edwin Thanhouser

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 10

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

A big Broadway success advertises for days before it opens, then has a continued run to capacity business whenever the play is really good.

The feature picture—if it is good—and World Film features are 90% good, requires the same careful treatment and attention that the legitimate stage receives. The public must be educated by advertising to appreciate good features. Then, they will gladly pay 25c admission or more and you can run the feature for three days a week and make more money in that period of time than you could in any other way.

Here is a letter from the Regent Theatre, New York

"Your pictures have attracted a remarkable volume of business to the Regent Theatre. The Sunday after New Year's we beat our previous house record by over $60.00 with Wilton Lackaye in "THE PIT." Last Sunday, January 10th, we played "MRS. WIGGS" to a fine house in the afternoon and a packed house at night. We have been showing and advertising your pictures about four months now.

"I consider your pictures the cream of the market at the present time and contemplate changing the day of exhibition from Sunday to week days. Just as soon as I have time I shall discuss with you the matter of changing my contract so as to give me two or three days instead of one.

"Yours very cordially,
"REGENT THEATRE,
"116th St. and 7th Avenue, New York City."

Nobody knows that you have a good thing unless you advertise it. When you spend money advertising a good thing and run it for one day, a great many people will want to see it who find it impossible to go there that day. That means that a percentage of your advertising is wasted.

On the other hand, if you run it for one day and do not advertise, only a very small percentage of the people whom you should get—and would get—come to see the play.

To make money, you should run features for at least three days—advertise them at least three days—and make people glad to pay from 10 to 50c admission.

That time is coming fast. Live theatre managers all over the country are awakening to the possibilities of that system. We have letters by the dozens from men who are following exactly this program and find that it pays bigger dividends than the old hit and miss advertising and showing.

Not only does it mean more business in the beginning of a campaign like this, but it also means that every week's advertising and showing strengthens the drawing power of your house and its reputation as the home of high class photo plays.

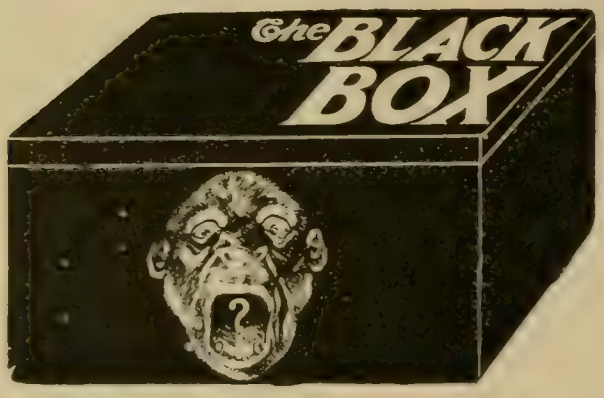
Making Good with the PUBLIC

Plot---Interest---Action

The BLACK BOX was written by the world's greatest living mystery story writer—E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Realism---Ingenuity ---Plausibility

The BLACK BOX was staged and directed by the Dean of Directors—whose name guarantees QUALITY —OTIS TURNER.



Acting---Staging---Facilities

The BLACK BOX was staged and acted at Universal City, Cal., in the world's greatest studios, with an unexcelled cast.

Advertising---Prestige ---Plausibility

The BLACK BOX is backed by the unequalled capital, resources, brains and organization of the UNIVERSAL.

For the Benefit of Exhibitors

Everywhere you go you hear timid, financially weak producers whispering among themselves:

"Serials are dead." "The public is tired of serials." "You can't put over a 15 episode serial any more."

Remember, they whisper it because it is their own failures they are talking about. In their case, all they say is true. THEN, to prove that QUALITY ALWAYS WINS the Universal produced "THE BLACK BOX" Serial, which immediately smashed all booking records, all attendance records and all artistic records. It set a standard for serials that will never be surpassed by any other producer. The public DOES want serials. It will pay to see a connected, plausible, ingenious and realistic, interest-holding story of 15 episodes. It does NOT want 30 reels of disconnected incidents, forced action, weak climaxes, or preposterous plots. The "BLACK BOX" wins through qualities possible only to a perfected organization, using every conceivable facility; backed by unlimited capital, fearless initiative and men who can and do "use the brains God gave them."

When the Universal does it, it's huge
When the Universal says it, it's true

You can share in the record-breaking advantages of "THE BLACK BOX," the serial masterpiece, by wiring your Exchange for a booking today—TOMORROW MAY BE TOO LATE.

"And Still They COME"

Another important announcement for Universal Exhibitors. "The Smalleys," two of the most famous artists in the movies, have rejoined the Universal and are now actively engaged on their first production, soon to be announced, at Universal City, Cal. As actors, scenario writers, directors and producers, the "Smalleys" (Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber) have long been at the head of their profession. After an absence from the ranks of the Universal they have returned, satisfied that their first love offers them greater opportunities than can be had anywhere else in the world. Consequently

"The Smalleys"

Phillips Smalley are Lois Weber

NOW with the Universal

Lois Weber is known wherever moving pictures are shown as the gifted writer of the scenario form of Clara Louise Burnham's great novel, "The Opened Shutters," of which President Carl Laemmle has said: "It was wrought into scenario form by one of the brightest minds I have ever come in contact with," a deserved tribute to Lois Weber's genius. The Smalleys are also known for their marvelous production of the "The Merchant of Venice," of "Hypocrites," and an almost endless list of unusual multiple reel films.

Again we wish to impress upon the Exhibitor the value in dollars and cents—the box office value—of the marvelous Universal Program. Every week it gives you features which, if produced by a so-called "special feature" producer would cost you $25 to $50 as an "extra." Every week sees some notable mark of progress on the part of the Universal. Every week there is added to its already stupendous list of attractions splendid actors, great writers, unique facilities that put and keep the Universal miles in the lead of all other producers. The Exhibitors who are booking the regular Universal Program are not only getting the best to be had in the world, but they are MAKING MORE MONEY than the Exhibitors who are "picking their own programs." Think it over. Write your Exchange. It's up to you.

PROGRAM

Another Unprecedented Achievement

was attained by the Famous Players Film Co. during the past week, when the two principal photoplay theatres in New York City, the Strand Theatre and the Broadway Theatre, simultaneously presented, for the complete week, our two current releases, John Barrymore in "Are You a Mason?" and Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green." This is the first time since feature photoplays were first presented that one producing company's current productions occupied, for the entire week, Broadway's two foremost picture theatres.

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, moreover, the daily newspapers reviewed in the same issue two photoplays produced by one company.

The New York Evening Sun,

one of the most conservative metropolitan journals, said:

FUNNY FARCE AT STRAND

"Are You a Mason?" Side-Splitting on Film

Although next week is to be Anniversary Week at the Strand, Manager Rothapfel might easily mistake the present programme for that celebrating the completion of the house's first year. The combination of John Barrymore with the farcical "Are You a Mason?" is responsible for the most excruciatingly funny comedy this house has given its patrons. Mr. Barrymore simply compels laughter by his pathetic facial expressions and the clever touches he adds to the impersonation of the model husband who is swept into wrong-doing by grip and whiskey.

"GRETNA GREEN" ATTRACTIVE

Marguerite Clark, whose wildflower-like beauty made a big film success, is the star of "Gretna Green," a screen adaptation of the romantic comedy that is to be seen all this week at the Broadway Theatre. This is one of the most sympathetically produced of recent film plays, the director having preserved the atmosphere of England in early Victorian days and found settings in keeping with the general effect. Besides producing illusion the pictures have a distinctly artistic touch. . . . Miss Clark is a delightful figure. She is piquant enough to deserve the titled husband she captures.

YOUR audiences will emphatically agree with these reviews!

Get your

Forty-eight free trips to the California Fairs as guests of Runaway June!

Think of spending a happy, care-free week in lovely California—seeing the wonderful sights of the two great Fairs—not as the usual visitor will see them, but with all the privileges that come to special guests. Think of being taken, if you wish, in a special moving picture with Runaway June herself. And all this without a penny of expense—without a thought or a worry about traveling.

Forty-eight young women—one from each state—will be chosen by their friends who vote for them at showings of

Runaway June

George Randolph Chester's thrilling motion picture serial now running at moving picture theatres throughout the country.

YOU, yourself, may be the lucky one—you never realize how many friends you have till they begin gathering coupons for you. Or, why not get your friends together and select one among your number as your candidate—then all try to win for her.

Quite aside from the enjoyment of the California trip—made in Pullman cars with all the luxuries you can imagine—the contest itself is no end of fun. For there's excitement at every showing of the film as to which young women will win the three votes for that installment.

Remember, this is not a contest of actresses or other well-known women; it's a friendly neighborhood competition among your own friends.

We are going to the great expense of the Runaway June California Trip Contest for good business reasons:

We want every woman to see this fascinating serial, in which George Randolph Chester's genius for interesting situations and exciting incidents is concentrated on the money problem between man and wife. The struggle begins before the rice has been shaken from the traveling dress of the lovely bride, and carries through scene after daring scene—from the fashionable suburbs of New York to the mysteriously beautiful sea caves of Bermuda. Sometimes you find yourself in Rector's famous restaurant, amid the real crowds of real people who, more than chefs and orchestras, make the fame of restaurants; again, slipping quietly and swiftly between the little islands of the bay, you see a sleek white motorboat, manned only by a frightened girl, eluding the pursuit of the powerful racer which drags a great wave in its wake by its speed.

No description of the stirring drama that unfolds itself in episode after episode could possibly bring you to realize the fascination of this pictured story as you will realize it when you have seen even one installment. So our first business reason for the Runaway June California Trip Contest is to make acquaintances for Runaway June—which will ripen into friendships that will make this the most popular motion picture serial ever shown.

Let us repeat—every motion picture theatre which shows a Runaway June film can enter the Runaway June Californ Trip Contest and cast its votes according to the wishes of its patrons.

If the theatre which you attend is not showing the film, ask the manager to get it, so that you may see this most interesting serial. If the theatre is not entered in the Runaway June contest, ask the manager to enter his theatre so that you or one of your friends may go to the California Fairs as a guest of Runaway June.

Watch the newspapers for announcements showing where and when the film appears. Also for further particulars as to the distinguished people who will accompany the party, dates of the trips, and the like.

Theatres entered in the Runaway June contest are supplied with pamphlets giving complete rules under which the contest is conducted, or, we shall be glad to send a booklet with a portrait of Runaway June and full particulars about her California Trip Contest if you will ask us for it.

Do not delay—every installment of Runaway June counts for three votes. Speak to the manager of your theatre the day you see this advertisement.

How to Vote

Theatres entered in this contest will each have three votes for each installment of the picture. Coupons will be given out at the box office—one with every ticket; at every installment after the first, these coupons will be collected and counted for the candidate indicated by persons turning them in; the three ladies receiving the highest number of coupons during each installment will each have one vote in the contest. The lady who receives the greatest number of votes in each state will go to the Fairs free as the guest of Runaway June.

In case of a tie, the candidate whose votes represent the greatest number of coupons will win. If there still be a tie, all candidates receiving the same number of votes and the same number of coupons will be declared winners and shall go to the Fairs.

No matter how small the theatre—its votes count for as much as those of the largest.

The contest will close at midnight, September 30th, 1915. Votes will be counted by Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, New York, certified public accountants. The decision will be announced through moving picture theatres and daily papers by October 10th. The forty-eight lucky winners will start immediately thereafter for beautiful California as the guests of Runaway June Runaway June may be booked by any theatre through any one of the fifty-six branch offices of the Mutual Film Corporation.

A triumph in production and characterization!

Viola Dana

The Broadway Star

in the Feature

"THE STONING"

Released in regular service Friday, April 9—3,000 feet.

A Star and a play that gives the screen an undying "Camille" in power of appeal

Viola Dana, the Broadway star, who riveted the country's attention as the child actress in the title role of "The Poor Little Rich Girl," has stamped indelibly on the screen, in "The Stoning," a characterization of young innocence, betrayed, that shall live as long as memory lives—as long as mother love shall live!

"The Stoning" is a play of life as it is—life in all its selfishness, in its purity, betrayed devotion, unselfish mother love, of fathers who grievously—tragically—err in the intensity of their love for their children.

Viola Dana, in "The Stoning," gives to the screen a characterization that ensures her name, not merely as a screen favorite, but as a great actress—exhibiting an art that, in its heart-reaching power, is more than "acting"—she lives the part. Great, too, are the characterizations of Robert Conness, Helen Strickland, as the mother, and Charles Sutton.

"The Stoning" has been pronounced by those, nationally known and intimately acquainted with the country's entire output, to be "the greatest play ever seen on the screen." Edison, in this one play, has earned an enviable prestige. To describe this play in all its wonderful power would be only to be thought exaggerating—if words could describe it. See it and we will rest with your judgment.

From the story by James Oppenheim, Director Charles Brabin, in his sympathetic treatment, has made this play a masterpiece of production.

Funny Waddy and Arty at it Again!

THE LAUGH CATCHER, "A CLEAN SWEEP"

(Released Tuesday, April 6th—1000 feet.)

One of the best of the Waddy and Arty comedies, "A Clean Sweep," with the darndest and most laughable situations ever hatched, gives Wadsworth and Housman a real chance to start agoing all their fun-making and uproarious antics.

Waddy, the papa, starts to take down the stove, just as the lover, Arty, hides in the fireplace and the chimney sweep overhead starts to clean out the chimney! Slap stick isn't in it with this soot-stick comedy, that gives you riotous comedy before they enter the blackface ranks from the soot collected—and then the fun and laughs zip off with gatling gun snap and speed. "A Clean Sweep" makes a clean sweep of it when it comes to laughs.

Herbert Prior in the Snappy Comedy, "Snap Shots," by Mark Swan

Herbert Prior is at home—at the home plate scoring hits—with this pipe dream comedy of a timid bachelor with a harem of pretty girls and a photograph gallery thrust on his hands. Prior's quaint comedy gets free rein in refreshing fun. Released Wednesday, April 7—1000 feet.

AUGUSTUS PHILLIPS AND BESSIE LEARN IN "AN UNPAID RANSOM"

A corking good story swiftly told in action that leads up to the telling climax. Augustus Phillips, as the detective chauffeur in a hunt for a kidnapped girl, is convincing. Released Saturday, April 10th—1000 feet.

PAT O'MALLEY AND GLADYS HULETTE IN "WON THROUGH MERIT"

Produced in conjunction with the United States Civil Service Commission, telling of the wonderful system, a pretty love story, and showing well-known Washington buildings and personages. Released Monday, April 5th—1000 feet.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY'S SPECIAL SERVICE

By Arrangement with Broadway Star Feature Co. (Inc.)

Dear Sir:-

The exhibitor has asked, "Why hasn't the Vitagraph Company released in the regular service more one-part pictures produced by Ralph Ince, featuring Earle Williams and Anita Stewart?"

These three artists stand paramount in the motion picture art and their salaries have reached such large proportions that it does not pay to employ them in one-part productions. The Vitagraph Company, however, respecting the wishes of the exhibitor, will release on Wednesday, April 14th, in the regular service a one-part comedy-drama, entitled "His Phantom Sweetheart," and another one-part comedy, "The-Sort-of-Girl-Who-Came-From-Heaven," on Friday, April 30th. In both these pictures, Mr. Earle Williams and Miss Anita Stewart are featured under the direction of Mr. Ralph Ince. If the results warrant a continuance of these one-part Ince, Stewart and Williams pictures in the regular service and the exhibitors will do their part to make them mutually profitable, the Vitagraph Company will be only too pleased to continue them.

We are giving due notice of our intention and invite your co-operation in the experiment.

Yours very truly,

Facts and Comments

IT is most gratifying to learn that the vigorous and intelligent position of motion picture exhibitors has defeated censorship bills in eight states. The lesson is obvious. Union and cooperation among exhibitors has never failed to achieve results beneficial to all. We feel justified in urging every exhibitor to join the league and to pay his per capita tax promptly and cheerfully. The benefits that are bound to accrue from organization are well worth the money. Aside from such immediate and tangible benefits as the defeat of censorship we must count the mutual gain in exchanging ideas. The new administration of the league is now fully under way and has shown itself worthy of the confidence of exhibitors everywhere. This is the appointed time for joining the league and reaping the advantages of belonging to a good strong, well led organization.

It now looks as if the fight against censorship would have to be carried on chiefly by the exhibitors. Perhaps the other interests in the industry will eventually bestir themselves and bear their share of the burden. However this may be, the men conducting the fight on the firing line have to go on with the battle. Reinforcements will eventually be necessary and we earnestly hope that they will come, but whatever the situation may develop into the duty to persevere to the last ditch is plain.

THERE is not a successful exhibitor in the country today who does not give his very best attention and judgment to the selection of courteous and intelligent employees. In spite of the utmost care, however, it will happen that some brainless underling is put in a position where he can do infinite harm to his employer. A case has come to the notice of this paper where a young wife with her child was treated most discourteously at one of the prominent moving picture theatres on Broadway. The show on the inside was above criticism. All the more reason to blame the incompetent employee that was suffered to exercise authority in the lobby. We believe we are doing our exhibiting readers a favor by again reminding them of the absolute necessity of having courteous and intelligent employees. A courteous and intelligent employee is one of the greatest assets of a moving picture house, but he is not easy to find and there must be good raw material in the first place to train and develop. The only way to deal with stupid or impertinent employees is by way of summary dismissal.

IN another part of the Moving Picture World the reader will find a review of one of the most interesting books published on the subject of censorship. We refer to the volume entitled "Censorship in England." The authors are Messrs. Frank Fowell and Frank Palmer. The book deals very exhaustively with historic aspects of censorship and confirms the experience of history, showing that censorship of all kinds and at all times is founded on folly and is bound to result in injury.

ARBITRARY power invariably leads to abuses. The experience of the English speaking races has plainly shown that no single man can be entrusted with irresponsible power. It does not matter who the incumbent of the office is. If the office gives him unlimited authority and he is accountable to no one, he quickly loses all sense of proportion, all thought of self-restraint and discipline and it does not take long for him to become a tyrant. We are moved to make these remarks by the recent incident in Philadelphia where an exhibitor was arrested in what the press of that city stigmatized as an arbitrary proceeding. Censorship means inquisition and the inquisitor from time immemorial has been an enemy to the best interests of the state.

WE ARE not surprised to see a bill for the censorship of art and literature appear in the legislature of the Empire State. The modern trend seems to be toward an indiscriminate and absurd use of the legislative power. Note the plan to censor literature. Can you imagine the great writers of fiction humbly coming before a commission and asking the official stamp of approval for their latest novels? The term literature comprises more than fiction. Poetry, too, will hereafter have to pass through the ordeal of censorship, if this latest bill for regulating literature becomes a law. The sculptor and the painter must consult the censor before they dare to listen to the inspiration of the muse. We have suffered much from war-poetry in the last few months, but censorship will never suppress it. Such poets may be killed but they never surrender.

To Revive, or to Beget?

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHAT shall be done to make moving pictures more popular than ever, to bring all classes to the exhibitions and establish this method of expression in the respect of our most intelligent people? All other such arts, that of printing excepted, date back more than twenty centuries. Great examples have been preserved to indicate classic lines for those who would use them, or for those who would avoid them, but we are exploring our way into the picturing of thought, emotion and beauty without guides. Probably, on this account, so much attention has been given to the restoration of old plays and novels—producers felt that they were on surer ground.

At first glance it looks all right. We will picturize this fine old work of fiction or that well-known play. It looks easy, and it is in some cases, but they are comparatively few. In transforming novels and stage productions for screen presentation, I have had to examine hundreds of them, supposedly suitable. Having previously written a large number of original photoplays, throughout the whole range, from tragedy to farce-comedy, I feel instinctively what will be of service on the screen. Not to be arbitrary, but to exercise whatever judgment I have, both as author and as critic, I do not find more than one in ten of supposedly suitable stories worth transformation. This may sound as though it was not characterized by overruling principles, so I will attempt to make it reasonable.

There are certain methods of construction of striking similarity in all forms of giving expression to the story. In the novel, in the short story, in the story acted and uttered, in that visualized on the screen, there is a certain routine of composition necessary for the attainment of a logical and well-knit work of power, but this is far from meaning that the work is a geometrical demonstration. In all three forms there is a fine art in arousing interest during the period of preparation. In all three forms that preparation includes a clear characterization of principles and the faintest suggestion of events to follow. There is expectation to be aroused. Then comes that important part of the general structure which arouses suspense. All these are so interwoven that they are only to be separated in a work on the subject.

The general structure of all three is similar in many other respects, and that is what most deceives those who believe the transformation from one to the other to be an easy matter. We have the blocks to build our little play houses—why are they not as useful in one form as in another?

Let us imagine that we are at the theater. There is a love scene on. The man is middle-aged, a gentle cynic, an entertaining philosopher, who has settled down into established bachelordom when a young girl he has greatly befriended is brought into intimate relations with him. He thinks she will find the best expression of her heart's desire in mating with some young man, a matter of natural selection, and he is sore at heart that he has passed the time when he can link his life to hers. To her that man of middle age is the noblest and sweetest she has ever known. He brightens all her days, gives new flavor to her existence, yet he is so far above her that there is no hope in her heart that he will ever care for her.

These two, each loving the other, each suppressing any manifestation of that love, are seated in chairs by the fireside. They generalize and idealize, hovering always near the dominant emotion within their hearts—it is delightful. How plaintive her voice! We close our eyes and listen, while she speaks, our ears receiving more than the significance of her words, her tones start within us those sympathetic vibrations which only the human voice, with its cello-like notes, can set in motion. How much would be lost in merely picturing these two by the fireside and sub-titling a few of the words they utter! Yet that moment is supreme in the stage version.

We are reading a novel, in which the same scene is given, and the author manages by lucid explanation in masterly style to convey some of that feeling which found its natural vehicle in the human voice, or perhaps the novelist is demonstrating how a great lawyer is extricating his client from peril. He is pointing out distinctions between true and false testimony. All of his brilliant reasoning powers are brought to bear on the subject, and his lucid presentation, his masterly argument, all told in words which adequately clothe a thought, are fascinating, but they would be as difficult to visualize on the screen as Hamlet's cynical self-analysis.

The arts of expression are intertwined—a thousand little tendrils bind them together—but I am inclined to think that each is unique in its way. Each has that individuality which causes the will of man to transcend custom. Codes and conventions may influence conduct, but the mainspring of action is largely individual. So with the screen story. It may be powerfully influenced by the older arts, but it has a character all its own. It is real when it is itself. It becomes artificial as a mere reflection of some other art, and that is what it is apt to be in most revivals of printed or uttered dramas.

I have often been reminded that there is a commercial as well as an artistic contribution to the success of moving pictures. Quite obvious! The incentive to production was that of making money, and commercialism preceded artistic production, but we are no longer marketing the mere visualization of movement. Then why devote capital and business ability to an inferior product when a superior one can be made by better methods? The desideratum is to link the best possible distributive schemes and close attention to costs of production, to making what is worth while. The great novel, the great play, the great photo-drama, each needs the support of highly intelligent handling in the market to be appreciated and to reap a just reward for effort.

My attention is devoted to the initial creation, and I am inclined to think that it will have to be a veritable creation, begotten of genius, to suit the modern era, with its new ideas, with its new customs, with even its changing system of ethics. We are not standing still. The democratic spirit which pervades our institutions, that is shown in our broadening treatment of one another, rarely finds inspiration in stage plays and novels—why not permit this latest means of expression to become typical of our day, the characters ourselves, the incidents those of the hour, the theme in accord with our finest ideals? Let us interpret what is and become a factor in what is to be, by producing today the motion-picture classics of tomorrow, scattering widespread among all classes the finest ideas and inspirations of human kind, whether revived or begotten.

No Surrender

By W. Stephen Bush.

MOVING picture circles were amazed to read a report that a meeting of motion picture manufacturers recently went on record as recognizing a public demand for censorship. We are speaking of the action taken by the meeting held about a week ago in the Hotel Astor and attended by practically all the big producers of motion pictures, it was said. A committee, it appears, "recommended that the film interests support a movement for a Federal Motion Picture Commission."

Amazement at this action must grow into warrantable apprehension when we read that the chairman of the meeting was a well-known theatrical manager belonging to a firm whose conversion to the motion picture has been of the latest. The other member of the firm is still remembered for his unmeasured contempt of motion pictures and the pains he took to give these pessimistic unflattering views the widest publicity possible. The secretary of the meeting was the attorney of the "United Managers Protective Association." It is well-known that these men look upon the motion picture as a minor factor in the world of amusements. With them the legitimate theater is first and foremost. They look askance at the idea of a motion picture organization which is entirely independent of them and their interests. They are willing to absorb any now existing motion picture organization into the United Managers Protective Association and to give to such an organization a seat in the extreme rear. In their judgment the film interests ought at all times be subordinate to the theatrical interests.

Now it is quite possible that the interests of the film men and the theatrical managers may on ocassions be identical, though it is equally plain that upon occasions these interests might be divergent if not conflicting. If the presence and activity of the theatrical managers in motion picture councils result in nothing better than a surrender of our principles in the matter of legalized censorship the alliance is not likely to be profitable to the motion picture interests. We have been told that on the question of censorship the theatrical managers would fight with us. We have been told that their organization has been the means of preventing the establishment of a stage censor in this country. If this contention is correct why advocate censorship in any form for motion pictures? Will it be maintained that the stage plays of to-day or yesterday are or have been cleaner than motion pictures. The subject is not open to discussion. In point of morality the pictures are, to say the very least, fully as free from objection as the stage plays. Indeed we might go further and submit proof of a good deal of over-emphasized sex-problems and a plain glorification of sensualism on the speaking stage.

Why then do our friends of the Theatrical Managers Protective Association come forward with this strange proposition to endorse a federal scheme of censorship? Why this strange assertion that public opinion demands censorship of some kind?

The Moving Picture World, which has no axe to grind and which is actuated solely by what it believes to be the best interests of the industry, has never been able to discover any public demand for official censorship. The clamor of professional reformers and of self-appointed censors can easily be distinguished from a sound and honest public demand. The Smith-Hughes bill in Congress is admittedly the result of one man's shrewd and systematic agitation. There is absolutely no spontaneous sentiment back of the Smith-Hughes bill. All the sentiment has been stimulated and accelerated by one man. Nothing is back of it but postage and carefully prepared printed matter. There is no pretence that censorship in Pennsylvania came in response to a public demand. The bill was a legislative abortion which had not even an appropriation clause attached to it. There had been no public notice or discussion of the bill. Censorship in Ohio was forced on the statute books by the efforts of one man, whose motives may have been honest, but whose judgment was woefully bad. The fact is that public opinion in both states is distinctly against censorship. The press of Pennsylvania is conducting a campaign against censorship at this very minute. A number of public bodies such as the various labor organizations and the Federation of Churches have protested against official censorship in Ohio. In eight states bills for legalized censorship of motion pictures have been killed in committee by the vigorous and intelligent opposition of exhibitors in those states. This would have been utterly impossible if there existed any genuine public demand for censorship.

This is no time to preach compromise or surrender in the fight against legalized censorship.

It is exasperating to hear men of presumed intelligence speak of a scheme of Federal Censorship as a means of eliminating all other varieties of censorship. The writer attended the meeting of the committee on Education which had charge of the Smith-Hughes bill in the lower house. But one of the advocates of the bill ventured a faint little chirp about Federal censorship doing away with state and other censorship. He was squelched on the spot, all the members of the committee taking turns in pointing out his ridiculous error. Of course the Federal government derives all the power it has in the premises from its authority "to regulate commerce between the states." It may bar the film from the channels of interstate commerce, but even the infant class in civics must know that a film tolerated in the channels of interstate commerce may be suppressed within any given individual state.

Of course this quest for a Federal scheme of Censorship will prove its Quixotic nature soon enough. It might not have been worth while to say any thing on the subject, but for one very serious aspect of the matter. The men who have so far conducted the fight against censorship with the organized exhibitors in the forefront of the battle may be embarrassed by this strange attitude of the Hotel Astor meeting. If the producers come out into the public crying out: "We are naked, give us something wherewith to cover our nakedness," it will be pretty hard to answer the legislator when he says to us: "Why your own people feel the need of censorship, they are not fighting censorship on principle, they are only concerned about the brand of censorship."

We are in this fight to vindicate a right and to assert a principle. Compromise or surrender is impossible. The producers have so far supported the fight against censorship though often without much enthusiasm. We hope that they will not forget their own true interests in the pursuit of entangling alliances. We thought William A. Brady, by a recent brilliant essay on moving pictures from the theatrical viewpoint had opened the eyes of the motion picture men sufficiently to obviate any further ophthalmic operations. PUT NONE BUT MOVING PICTURE MEN ON GUARD.

Blaisdell Runs Into a Cattleman's Convention at "San Antone" and Witnesses a Texas Snowstorm—Sees Some Picture Men, Too.

(By the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.)

Los Angeles, California.

SITTING near the six-foot-wide window in one of these marvelously compact Los Angeles apartments, looking down on four giant palms across the street, looking up at a forenoon sky without a trace of cloud, it seem many more than six days since I left New Orleans on my way to "San Antone." It was a nine-hour run to the Texas state line, through the swamps and bayous of Louisiana. There was an abundance of water. Old Father Mississippi was in a restless mood. There looked to be a margin of but ten feet between the surface of the yellow river and the crown of the levee. Out of the swamps, with their great trees covered, adorned, with drooping moss, into the sugar country. Then came the rice fields. San Antonio was reached at 8 o'clock in the morning.

It did not take long to discover that something unusual was stirring in the town that boasts the biggest population in the Lone Star State. It did not require to determine the fact the regretful assurance of four different hotel clerks that there was not an available room. Everywhere there were big men, wearing big hats. Somehow, I had been under the belief, or the delusion, that the wide-brimmed hat as typical of the West was a motion picture fiction—a portrayal of what had once been but had passed away. My mistake! The pictures have the hats right.

Speaking about big men: There was a convention in San Antonio of cattlemen. The stockmen came from all over. A six-footer attracted no attention. If a man could beat that by a couple of inches you'd take a second glance, but there seemed quite a goodly number who had under their hat 6:4. Those who lacked height had width. They were all mighty good to look at. There were no boisterous ones—that is, not in the morning. There was a dignity in their manner that was impressive. It was a singular blending of strength, of frankness, of unconsciousness of the proximity of another human being. You felt you were in touch with the men that Remington painted and modeled and described, "the men with the bark on," the Americanism of the wide outdoors. You might sense the bark, you might feel it, but you could not see it. Very likely, snugly stowed away in hip-pockets there were concentrated barks of another and of a sinister sort. A San Antonian assured me that undoubtedly they were there. The remark interested, but did not alarm. One could not help feeling that if one of these barks exploded the man who provided the billet for the bullet would get what was coming to him.

As the day wore on a little of the native reserve of some of the cattlemen was alcoholically removed. While in the lobbies of the hotels several hundred men would be gathered, in the bar-rooms there would be several dozen. In one of these latter a well-dressed, broad-shouldered chap, clean-skinned and clear-eyed, periodically emitted a deep-throated yell that appeared to be entirely comprehensible to his amused and quieter conferes. The clear eye lighted on the humble 150 pounds of an Easterner. With one arm pointed toward the bar and with an inclusive snap of the other he shouted in a voice that implied a threat as well as a promise (the Easterner really was itching to get in contact with the big fellow): "Come here!" There was a singular admixture of valor as well as of discretion in the answer that promptly went across the intervening ten feet: "Very sorry, my friend, I am lashed to the mast here." There was perfect cordiality in the responding "Al—l—l right!" At 7 o'clock that evening I met the enthusiastic ranchman as he emerged from the hotel. He was walking as straight as a judge, his eye was still clear. As he swung up his arm to salute I noticed that each wrist was in the restraining and protecting custody of a companion as big as himself.

[Note to Editor—Please don't strain your eye looking for film stuff in this story of San Antonio. For in the Texas city on that Monday, March 8, there warn't no such animal. There was there on that day even a greater event than a cattlemen's convention. There was a snowstorm—a real one, the first in twenty years. The flakes began falling at 10 o'clock in the forenoon. They continued to fall until around 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening. The business section was one continuous snowball riot. Crowds lined the sidewalks; snowballs were made and pelted at those across the street. Drivers of vehicles, motor-driven as well as horse-hauled, were the prey of pedestrians. If a "pesticated" unfortunate lost his temper the hilarity was increased. Perfectly good windows were smashed. Guardians of the peace, mounted and afoot, seldom made even perfunctory efforts to stem the torrent. The temperature was down to freezing. Standing under the gray and crumbling walls of the Alamo—they have been there 197 years—sacred to the memory of Bowie and Crockett and of their avenger, Sam Houston, it was a sight to be remembered as one noted the great leaves of the palm trees in Alamo Plaza covered with snow.]

After spending several hours in trying to find a place to bunk for part of a night, in securing railroad reservations which had been hanging fire since Joe Marentette, back in Atlanta, mussed up the itinerary so carefully laid out in placid ignorance of the bumps it was going to encounter when its designer met up with these whole-souled film men—and there's a fine democracy permeating the big clan—after doing these things, I repeat, I dropped in for a chat with Manager Phillips, of the Consolidated. He said there were thirteen picture shows in the town and he intimated the Universal was getting its share of the business. It was right here we met W. F. Box, proprietor of the Petitclerq, a house recently opened. Mr. Phillips said the town was crazy about features.

Exhibitor Box took the writer over to his house, on which he has expended $10,000. There are 300 seats. By the way, Mr. Box is proud of these seats, and justly so. They are the real goods. The Petitclerq is prettily decorated and well ventilated. One of the features of the theater is the illumination. Mr. Box is a believer in a well-lighted house, taking the ground that if harm may come to eyesight in a dark theater the trouble is avoided in a well-lighted one.

Mr. Box escorted me over to the Empire, owned by Opostolon, Lytle & Papanikola. William J. Lytle is manager and A. Kornmann is house manager. Mr. Lytle is the film man of the town. Someone told me he had seven sets of partners. He directs the Wigwam No. 1 and Wigwam No. 2, of which Campbell, Lytle & Winch are the proprietors. I didn't realize when I made note of this firm name I was going to get pretty well acquainted with Campbell and Winch in far-off El Paso. That's another story, as you may see later. These two Wigwams seat 700 and 600 respectively. Then there is the Pike Theater, with 500 seats, of which Mr. Lytle is the manager. About May 1 Mr. Lytle will open the Soledad Theater. There will be 2,000 seats in the theater proper and on the roof there will be the same number. The latter part of the house will be operated as a picture entertainment between May 1 and November 1. The main theater will be devoted to pictures and vaudeville the year around. Each division will be equipped with two Powers machines.

In Mr. Lytle's office I met Henry B. Lappe, president of the Lappe-Tighe Amusement Company, of Kansas City, owner, among other houses, of the Willis Wood Theater. When Mr. Lappe learned the identity of the writer he intimated there was a rod in pickle for him in Kansas City and that Joe Gilday was supervising the preparations. Forewarned is forearmed. In training henceforth. Mr. Lappe was accompanied by his young nephew, Fred Lappe.

It seemed good to shake hands with a man from old New York. B. L. Hadfield, of 29 Union Square, manager of Reliance and Majestic features, dropped in on Mr. Lytle, accompanied by H. A. Shaw, traveling from Dallas as the Texas representative of "Runaway June." A little party was made up to look over the $150,000 Empire Theater. There are 901 seats in the orchestra, 525 in the balcony and 256 in the gallery. The house was built for the spoken drama. The program at the Empire includes Paramount productions and Kleine, World Film and Mutual features. The subject on the screen on the day in question was Gaby Deslys in "Her Triumph." The program usually runs an hour and a half.

The Empire has fourteen six-foot exits. There is an elaborate Johnson heating and ventilation system. In the ceiling are two sixty-inch exhaust fans. C. E. Rupard, who asked to be recorded as one of the followers of Brother Richardson, is chief operator. Mr. Rupard is assisted by A. C. Herndon. The writer had noted the height of the projection room and had complimented Mr. Lytle on the absence of the Keystone effect. Mr. Lytle passed it on to Mr. Rupard, who admitted he had given the problem much thought and study. It would be a major fault to pass this reference to the Empire without alluding to the music. A Hope-Jones unit furnishes the accompaniment. At the keys on Monday was the associate organist, and I was ashamed to admit I can't find his name in my notes. The "Meditation" from "Thais" was the selection employed by the organist to accompany "Her Triumph." His work added to the atmosphere of the house and the performance, and it was notable.

In the evening I visited the Queen Theater, which, out of compliment to the visiting cattlemen, was showing the Sill production of "Walla Walla Days and the Round-Up." H. V. Wiggins, house manager of the two Wigwams, showed me over his theaters. Later I again met Mr. Lytle and also F. R. Peterson, representing the American Seating Company.

Freuler in New York

Comes East to Complete Arrangements for Big American Company's Feature.

JOHN R. FREULER, acting for the North American Film Corporation and the American Film Co., was in New York recently to complete arrangements for the distribution of the Flying "A," continued photoplay, "The Diamond from the Sky." Mr. Freuler as President of the new distributing organization, the North American, will personally direct the merchandising of the serial. The Mutual Film Corporation will give Mr. Freuler the facilities of its offices throughout the country and in addition he will have between 75 and 100 representatives who will be in constant touch with the exhibitors.

The Flying "A" is planning to furnish exhibitors and moving picture fans with an entirely new type of continued story. It is described as a picturized romantic novel in chapters. The story has been written from the prize scenario that was selected from among 19,000 in the contest conducted December and January by the Chicago Tribune Syndicate of newspapers in co-operation with the American Film Company.

The identity of the winner of this contest will not be revealed until the first installment is thrown on the screen May 3rd. The Flying "A" and the big metropolitan newspapers convinced that they had a theme assuring sustained interest are offering a further prize of $10,000 to the person who will furnish the most acceptable solution.

S. S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Company, has been at their studios at Santa Barbara, California, ever since the first of the year making arrangements for this project which promises to set a new record in filmdom. Mr. Freuler in discussing their plans had this to say:

"Without disparaging anything that has been done in the way of a continued story, I believe that the American this time will furnish the public with something distinctively different than what has been provided heretofore. We have gone at this proposition with the greatest deliberation. We have had plenty of time to procure a wonderful theme and all the facilities necessary to supply the very highest quality both from the standpoint of the photoplay and the novelization.

"For the first time since serials began we had a complete working scenario for the entire proposition. The newspapers knew exactly what they have got in the narrative itself. The continued photoplay heretofore has been a serial of adventures, any one of which could be eliminated without destroying the unity of the proposition. In the "Diamond from the Sky" we have a perfectly natural story with a logical beginning furnishing a development of intense interest and a climax that naturally suggests a sequel or solution. The whole is so carefully interwoven that you could not eliminate a half a dozen scenes, let alone a complete installment. The story is entirely American and modern in every sense of the term. It has love and adventure to be sure, and suspense that will carry you over with keen anticipation for what is to come. The thrills, however, are perfectly logical and a real development of what has happened in the preliminary chapters.

"We believe that we have hit on a unique plan of keeping the public right up to date on this photoplay novel—those who have not seen preceding chapters, as well as others who would like to have their memory revived. Just how we will accomplish this will be revealed in the first release. We will give the exhibitor three reels instead of two as a starter. The first thousand feet will, of course, reveal the name of the $10,000 prize winner in the scenario contest, as well as furnish details of the second $10,000 offer.

"The American, of course, feels highly flattered over its selection by the powerful Chicago Tribune Syndicate of newspapers to produce this continued photoplay. I regard Mr. Hutchinson as one of the master producers in moving pictures. He is the type of a man who will allow nothing but the best to go to the public. If a reel or more does not come up to his standard of excellence that material will be destroyed and nobody will know anything about it, except himself.

"On the distributing end we have certainly profited through the experience of others. We are determined to serve the exhibitor. Any theater may get this continued photoplay, no matter what its program affiliations may be. We will not ask any iron-clad agreement with the exhibitor. We realize that the manufacturer must stand back of his product. If what we give the exhibitor does not make good it would be the height of folly to expect him to go along to an unsatisfactory finish. We know that this picturized romantic novel will be the biggest box office attraction yet and the exhibitor realizes that our organization heretofore has carried out its assurances to the letter."

Neither the newspapers nor the moving picture theaters will indicate in advance just how long the America's picturized novel will run. Both Mr. Freuler and Mr. Hutchinson are strong advocates of the so-called natural length of pictures. The installments will be of sufficient length to carry the story along to a climax where the public will be given an opportunity of furnishing a solution. There will be no limit to the number of words in the sequel, but it is suggested that contributors confine themselves to 1,000 words.

The promotion and publicity are in the hands of the Nichols-Finn Advertising Company, who handled two of the most successful moving picture projects, the "Million Dollar Mystery" and the Belgian War Pictures.

BALBOA WITH ALLIANCE.

Last week Andrew J. Cobe, President of the Alliance Films Corporation and E. D. Horkheimer signed contracts which will place the Balboa Amusement Producing Company in the ranks of the contributors of the Alliance Programme. The first Balboa subject to reach the exhibitor through the new channel will be Henry B. Walthall, in a six-part production of "Beulah." This will be followed by Miss Jackie Saunders in "The Ill Starred Babbie." While in New York Mr. Horkheimer and Mr. Cobe secured the film rights to several novels and work upon them will soon be started.

New Feature Combination

Four Licensed Manufacturers Combine to Create an Outlet for Big Productions.

FOR the past several weeks rumors have been circulating that there was to be a combination of some of the so-called licensed manufacturers for the purpose of handling large feature productions independently of the General Film Company, which has been the medium of distribution for licensed manufacturers since it was organized. The plans of those interested in this new combination have so far matured as to enable them to make the statement that the companies interested are the Vitagraph, Selig, Spoor and Lubin, and that offices will be opened immediately at 1600 Broadway, New York, for this territory. Eventually other offices will be opened at strategic points throughout the United States.

It is explained by those participating in this new feature distribution plan that the move was not to be construed as a break in their relations with the General Film Company. The companies interested will continue to place their regular subjects with the General Film as heretofore, but with respect to the distribution of large feature productions, they believe that better and consequently more satisfactory service can be secured by the new plan. Hence the departure.

When the demand for features first began to assert itself an effort was made to meet it through the machinery of the General Film Company. While the fact has never been tacitly admitted by those interested, it is well known to the trade that the efforts of that company to handle feature productions independently of the regular program have never been satisfactory. The best evidence that that statement is correct is found in the early withdrawal of the Kleine features from the General Film distribution scheme.

Other manufacturers in the licensed group discovered that there was great difficulty in placing features and regular program releases through the same exchanges, and that their efforts to produce pretentious subjects did not receive proper remuneration when thus distributed. Consequently it was decided by the companies represented in the new combination that the only thing to do was to separate their feature service from the regular program. Recently the Lubin and the Vitagraph Companies announced that they would book their features direct. This determination probably led the Selig and Essanay companies to consider a similar plan and the combination of interests resulted naturally.

Further announcements in this connection will be made as the plans of the promoters develop.

Manufacturers Talk Censorship

Meeting of Leading Picture Makers at Hotel Astor Favors a Federal Motion Picture Commission.

A MEETING was held at the Astor Hotel Wednesday afternoon, March 24, at which a large majority of the motion picture interests of the United States were present. The meeting was called to hear the report of the special committee on censorship of motion pictures and upon prospective legislation and plans in this connection. Marc Klaw presided at the meeting. The members of this committee were J. J. Kennedy, H. E. Aitken, P. A. Powers, Adolph Zukor and J. E. Brulatour.

The committee, through its chairman, Mr. Kennedy, after commenting upon the general situation, rendered a report in which it was stated that while there could be no legal reason for any censorship, in deference to public opinion, the motion picture interests should institute a movement for a Federal Motion Picture Commission.

This the meeting unanimously voted to do and the report and recommendations of the committee were approved by the meeting. On motion of William Fox, the committee was tendered a vote of thanks for its work.

A further general meeting will be called at a later date to consider detailed plans along the lines adopted by the meeting.

Those present at the meeting were: J. J. Kennedy, General Film Co. ;H. E. Aitken, Mutual Film Co.; Joseph Brant, Universal Film Mfg. Co.; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players Film Co.; Mark Brock, Paramount Film Co.; J. E. Brulatour, Peerless Film Co. & Raw Stock Supply Co.; William Fox, Fox Film Corp.; C. Livingston, Thanhouser Film Co.; W. W. Irvine, Vitagraph Co.; J. A. McKinney, Universal Film Co.; Richard A. Roland, Metro Film Co.; E. D. McGovern, New York Motion Picture Corp.; Robt. T. Kane, Prohibition Film Co.; Wm. Steiner, Photo Drama Co.; Wm. Schimpf, General Film Producing Co.; A. Polacoff, Quality Feature Film Co.; P. A. Parsons, Pathe Exchange; P. G. Melies, Melies Mfg. Co.; Wm. J. Lee, Picture Playhouse Film Co.; Harry R. Raver, Itala Film Co.; Samuel Goldfish, Lasky Feature Film Co.; F. E. Kahn, Mutual Film Co.; J. R. Freuler, American Film Mfg. Co.; J. P. Dunning. Reliance Film Co.; A. J. Cobe, Alliance Film Co.; Aubrey Mittenthal, Mittenthal Film Co.; D. W. Griffith, Majestic Film Co.; Chas. S. Jamison, Equitable Film Producing Co.; A. Blinkhorn, Blinkhorn Photo Play Corp.; E. M. Saunders, Metro Film Co.; D. MacDonald and H. G. Kosch, Alliance Film Co.; E. D. Horkheimer, Balboa Amusement Co.; H. J. Streyckman, Progressive Motion Picture Co.; F. C. Liebow, Liebow & Apple Feature Film Co.; E. J. Doolittle, Blinkhorn Photo Play Co.; M. E. Marsh, E. & W. Laboratory; Philip Lewis, Lewis Pennant Features.

Big "Runaway June" Contest

New and Cleverly Contrived Method of Conducting Most Popular Woman Voting Contest to Advertise Mutual Serial.

FORTY-EIGHT most popular women, one from each state, will visit the Panama-Pacific Exposition, the San Diego Exposition, and will see picturesque California at the expense of "Runaway June." The trip will be thoroughly de luxe; the fortunate winners will travel without expense at all in the best possible manner. Millionaires could travel no better.

Those in the big cities will have little better chance of winning the trip than those in small towns, for the votes are to be cast by theaters and only indirectly by the coupons that the theaters showing "Runaway June" will issue. At each of these houses one particular performance will be announced as a "Runaway June" contest show and at that show the three women whose friends vote the most coupons will win each one elective vote towards the trip. No matter how big the house is it will have three votes for each installment and no more.

To enter the contest collect ten coupons issued by any one theater showing "Runaway June" and these will entitle you to have the name and address of your favorite entered at its box office. Then get as many of the coupons as possible. As you enter the house at the "contest" show tell how many votes you have to the person in the box office and the number will be recorded in your favorite's name. But you must still keep your coupons. If your favorite is one of the three winners, her name will be announced and then the coupons must be voted to prove the right. If she is not a winner at that time, you may keep the coupons, for they are still good, and can be used at the next contest show at which time you may have more to add to them. So you see the coupons will be many, but the elective votes will be few. But you may enter at any number of theaters, though the coupons for every theater will be issued by it.

The widest efforts are being made to attract attention to the contest. Not only have thousands of newspapers been running the story, but full page advertisements are about to appear in The Saturday Evening Post, The Ladies' Home Journal, The Delineator, The New Idea, The Women's Magazine, The Ladies' World, and many other high-class weeklies and monthlies of enormous circulation.

NEW STRAND AT LYNN.

A new Strand theater is now under construction in Lynn, Mass. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 2,000 and represents an expenditure of $250,000. It is located on Union street and takes in an entire block measuring 22,500 square feet. Thomas W. Lamb, who drew the plans for the Strand theater in Manhattan, is the architect, and Moe Mark is the president of the company controlling the theater which will open September 1. The building will be similar to the New York Strand and will contain stores and offices. Mr. Mark will also erect a new Strand theater in Worcester, Mass., which will have a seating capacity of 2,000. The operations will commence early in April.

FILM MANUFACTURING IN HONGKONG.

(Consul General George E. Anderson, Hongkong, China, January 23.)

The manufacture of cinematograph films for the Chinese trade is to be undertaken in Hongkong. An American expert in film making has left for the United States to secure equipment for making films, and the making of picture plays by Chinese actors will be undertaken on an extensive scale. Recently two film plays were made in Shanghai from the work of two well-known Chinese theatrical companies. They have been put on in Hongkong and vicinity and are very popular with the Chinese, and the new enterprise is based upon their success.

(The address of the American representative of the new company may be had from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce at Washington, D. C., and its branches.)

W. C. Toomey Back From England

Director of N. Y. Motion Picture Co. and Vice-President of the Greenwich Lithographing Co. Studies Foreign Conditions.

By Lynde Denig.

WHEN W. C. Toomey contemplated a wedding trip early in January, the New York Motion Picture Company offered an acceptable suggestion. He was to visit England and study trade conditions. Incidentally he was commissioned to give British buyers a glimpse at "Tillie's Punctured Romance," not, however, with a view to immediate release. But insistent exhibitors—we have Mr. Toomey's word for it—would not be denied. They found Tillie so much to their liking, so emphatically an antidote for the dark days of war, that withholding the picture seemed like an unpatriotic act. April 12, therefore, was decided upon as a suitable day for release and Mr. Toomey returned to America—happy and a few pounds to the good.

W. C. Toomey.

He landed in New York just in time to celebrate St. Patrick's day on shore, and to offer a little prayer of thanksgiving for his deliverance from German submarines. They chased the "Lapland" through the Irish Sea on the way to Liverpool, and, returning on the "Philadelphia," the passengers, on the first night out, thought it wise to sleep with their clothes on and life preservers strapped around their waists. But nothing happened. Nor did anything very exciting happen in lightless London, except that the traveler looking for familiar illuminations on hotels and theaters occasionally lost his way.

Before leaving Liverpool, Mr. Toomey, reinforced by letters from Secretary of State Bryan, and working through the American Embassy, convinced the port officials that something should be done about the delays of from six to eight weeks to which pictures shipped from this country are being subjected. With the ports at Dover and Southampton closed, the business at Liverpool is far in excess of the facilities for handling it, and, as exporters are well aware, the delivery of films has been seriously handicapped. Mr. Toomey's arguments about the injustice of tieing up money invested in pictures for so long a time were listened to, and he received assurances of more considerate treatment for film men. If the Englishmen meant what they said, and he believes they did, this one mission would justify the trip.

Instead of settling down to enjoy life in a London hotel—they still have gay times in London—Mr. Toomey visited cities, towns and suburbs without number. Birmingham, Manchester and Crewe were among them, and everywhere he went he trailed pictures from their highest to their lowest state, from the best houses charging the equivalent of 48 and 72 cents, American money, to the humble cinemas asking 36 cents for a nickel's worth of American comfort. "The trail was marked by Keystone, Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino pictures," Mr. Toomey remarked in an off-hand way, consequently he had no difficulty in following it.

"England," he will say, if pressed to summarize the lessons learned, "stands today where America stood three years ago in the treatment of pictures." And then, lest you pass it off as a snap judgment, he will tell you just what the trip signified to an American film man. First take the houses. Most of them are comfortably furnished; but they are dark, as were our hole-in-the-wall affairs of recent history. Smoking is always allowed. Sunday performances are permitted occasionally, but only in the evening, and on week days it is not customary to open the doors until 2 o'clock. Next, Mr. Toomey noted the contents of the average program, which always runs for three days without change and frequently longer. It comprises six or eight reels, ninety per cent. American, before the war, and now, with the demand for military subjects, it is about eighty per cent. American. And what of the audiences? Mr. Toomey touched on a salient English characteristic in explaining why, with admission prices higher than those charged in this country, exhibitors were limited to low rentals. The habit of living by the clock is one important reason. At 12:55 an English restaurant is empty, at 1 o'clock people pour in, because 1 o'clock is the time to eat. At 2:30 and 8 o'clock the lobby of a theater is filled, because for generations back Englishmen have been taught that those are the suitable hours for public entertainment. The idea of dropping in late of an afternoon, or in the middle of the evening, seldom occurs to them and the suggestion of opening the doors for morning business would impress an exhibitor as being unseemly. The effect of English punctuality on box office receipts is evident. A house is well filled at two performances a day; for the rest, the seats go begging.

Of the character of an English audience Mr. Toomey had this to say: "It is middle and lower class and very exacting in demanding clear photography, good printing and a live story. The playgoers in London—and plays and plays are filling the houses, by the way—are not patrons of the cinemas, and they are not being reached by newspaper publicity and advertising campaigns such as those being carried on here. In accounting for the conservative Englishman's failure to recognize the value of pictures, I think one important factor is the lack of financiers with investments in the industry. When the bankers and brokers venture money in the making of photoplays, the audiences will automatically become more diversified, as they have become in America. Pictures will receive word of mouth advertising in the offices of Lombard Street and a new class of people will be curious to know more about the entertainment that has attracted investors. Wall Street's entrance into our own game has certainly had that effect. There is an inviting opportunity for the man who enters the English market with large capital."

Mr. Toomey was impressed by the advances being made by two producing companies, whose progress is under the guidance of American directors. The popularity of American subjects, however, is in no way endangered. When an English exhibitor was asked why audiences favored films from this country, his reply was, "Because the photography is better, the acting is better and they have more 'go'."

Who Wants This "I. W. W."

THE accompanying engraving is from a snapshot of Fred Sweigart, of 284 Academy street, Newark, N. J. He is out of work and after looking at some Keystone comedies it occurred to him that he might get a job posing for pictures. He says: "I aint five foot; weigh 236 pounds and am but 24 years old." Look at that picture. Where does Fatty Arbuckle or Hughie Mack get off in comparison with this little Jumbo? And that face: looks as if there were more laughs in it than any other of similar dimensions we have seen.

Fred Sweigart.

Also he is an orphan and says that he has no money, which is a bad way for a 236-pound youngster to be in during these war times. Look him over, you ambitious directors who are trying to make Keystone stuff; he is your one best bet. Look at that pair of shoulders; what a load of responsibility they would carry. And that "tummy"; any ordinary actor could jump on it with impunity, and from the front elevation we would surmise that there was a vast expanse of trousers in the rear to which any number of boots might be applied.

Better get this infant prodigy before Ad. Kessell and Mack Sennet set eyes on him.

"WOMAN WHO DARED" BOOKS HEAVILY.

George Kleine's latest five-part feature, "The Woman Who Dared," is having a splendid run, according to reports from the various Kleine branch offices. The story is one of unusual grip and possesses the virtue of leaving the final issue in doubt to the very last scene. The subject features that beautiful and gifted artiste, Miss Francesca Bertini.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Confiscatory Tax on Films in Australia.

HARRY G. MUSGROVE, of the Australian Films, Ltd., Sydney, Australia, was in the city last week, arriving Wednesday, March 17, and leaving for New York City the following Friday. He left Sydney February 13 and arrived in San Francisco March 3, going direct from that point to Los Angeles, where he visited all the studios during his week's stay, and met all the screen favorites and leaders in the producing departments.

Mr. Musgrove informed me that his visit to the United States was concerned chiefly in calling on the New York and English buyers for his concern, especially Millard Johnson, chief American buyer, with offices at 15 East 26th street. He stated that the trade in his home country had been only slightly affected by the European war, but very seriously by the imposition of a duty of four cents per foot by the Australian government on all imported films. Strange to say, this tax, he stated, was levied in order to stimulate and create the production of film subjects in Australia.

As the tax is exactly equal to fifty per cent. of the cost of the films imported, and that it must be borne almost entirely by the exchanges, seeing that exhibitors are in low circumstances owing to the war, it almost amounts to the confiscation of investments made by importing and distributing concerns, as dividends have been practically wiped out.

Every effort has been made to repeal or modify the act, but without effect, thus far. Certain influences, which I am not at liberty to reveal, have been responsible for the confiscatory tax; but I may state that they have emanated from sources within the Australian film industry itself.

Mr. Musgrove was much pleased to meet Stan Twist, an old friend of his, out in Los Angeles. Stan's many friends will be glad to learn that he has fully recovered from his recent serious illness, and that he is now assistant to General Manager Bernstein at Universal City. Mr. Musgrove spoke highly of the work done by Mr. Twist during his visit to Australia and regretted that changes in the ownership and policy of the concern, while Mr. Twist was on his way to Australia, had prevented the carrying out of the original plans.

Since the opening of the European war, all films from the United States for Australia are shipped from San Francisco. In view of the heavy tax already referred to, it is hoped by Mr. Musgrove that American film manufacturers will be able to make a reduction in price that will enable his company to tide over the present crisis.

Essanay Engages Viola Allen.

Viola Allen, famous actress, after years of success on the legitimate stage, playing leading classical, Shakespearean and comedy roles, has decided to make her debut in photoplays. She has been engaged by Essanay at a large figure and will soon engage in the production of "The White Sister," adapted from the novel of that name by F. Marion Crawford.

Viola Allen is declared by photoplay experts to be an excellent photographic subject, and with her beauty and genius in acting, there is no question of her success in photoplay work.

Miss Allen needs no introduction to the public, having had a long and successful stage career. She made her debut in Boston in "Esmeralda" at the age of 15. She played leading roles with Joseph Jefferson, Lawrence Barrett, Tommaso Salvini and William J. Florence. She starred in Hall Caine's "The Christian," "In the Palace of the King," and "The Eternal City." Later she took up Shakespearean drama.

Look Out for This Man!

The following information and warning has been received at this office from Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company:

Please be advised that a camera man by the name of C. W. Randall, recently engaged to take moving pictures in Florida by a syndicate in which we are interested, has used our name without authority and has absconded with money belonging to the syndicate. The last heard of this man Randall was at Tampa, Florida.

The police in all cities have been notified to apprehend him, and we will materially appreciate any information given as to his whereabouts.

To guard others in the trade against this man's crookedness, we would like to have this information published in the Moving Picture World.

Rare Animals for Selig Zoo.

The animal quarters out at the Selig plant, this city, have been very quiet of late, but things were stirred up to a lively pitch recently by the arrival of some rare animals from various parts of the world. There were nine bear cats in special charge of Umdele Khan, who had brought them all the way from the Himalayas. There were also in charge of Umdele Khan a pair of clouded leopards, a black leopard, a young elephant, two kangaroos and three tigers.

The animals, however, only stopped over in Chicago on their way from Carl Hagenbeck's animal headquarters to the Selig Zoo out in Los Angeles, where they will be added to the great collection already there.

Reel Fellow's Club Elects Officers for Current Year.

The Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago met at the Sherman House Wednesday, March 17th, and elected officers for the ensuing year.

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Manufacturing Company, on the motion of Richard C. Travers, was unanimously elected to succeed himself.

There were three nominations for the office of vice president, namely: Ralph E. Bradford, branch manager of the Mutual; Walter R. Early, general manager of the Miss Follome Daly Film Co., and O. F. Spahr, manager of the Enterprise Optical Co. Mr. Spahr withdrew and the result of the balloting showed that Mr. Bradford was elected.

Captain Lewis A. Boening was re-elected treasurer by a unanimous vote, and Walter D. Hildreth, Chicago manager of the Billboard, was elected secretary unanimously.

The members of the board of governors were held over for the current year, as they hold office for two years. The members are: Warren A. Patrick, chairman, Richard C. Travers, Omar Doud, Charles Nixon and Watterson R. Rothacker.

Eight new members were taken in at the meeting.

CHICAGO FILM BREVITIES.

Douglas H. Bergh, traveling personal representative for George Kleine, was in the city a few days last week and left for Los Angeles Saturday, March 20th.

F. O. Nielson has purchased the Kimball Theater, 3318 Fullerton avenue, which he sold several years ago, and is gradually bringing the business back to what it was under his former management. Mr. Nielson is also owner of the Parkway, North Clark Street, near Diversey Blvd., and the Stevens, Broadway, near Irving Park Blvd. He is a pretty busy man nowadays, as in addition to managing the three theaters mentioned, he is also supervising the weekly bookings of "The Spoilers."

It is understood from authentic sources that Orchestra Hall has been leased for a period of five months, beginning May 1st, for the presentation of moving pictures. E. C. Devine is named as the lessor, but it is believed that some men of considerable prominence in the amusement field are back of the enterprise. Seeing that Orchestra Hall is usually rented at $300 daily, the money back of the enterprise is considerable.

Harold Brown of the Chicago Herald Weekly left for Minneapolis Tuesday, March 23d, to assist as camera man and in other capacities in some initial productions of the Minnehaha Film Corporation, a new organization that has entered the manufacturing field. Mr. Brown will be gone for about two weeks.

C. C. Whelan recently sold the Washington Theater, Cottage Grove Avenue and 43d Street, which he has owned and run successfully for five years, to H. Loebe. Mr. Whelan is now associated with Tom L. Diggens in the promotion of amusement enterprises. They have purchased the state rights for Indiana and Kentucky to "Les Miserables," and have offices at 54 W. Lake Street, this city. Mr. Whelan reports very fair business.

H. G. Innenhausen, owner of the Standard Theatre, 750 N. Clark Street, this city, has informed this office that about a month ago Mr. Deere of the Photogram Publishing Co., called at his theatre and was given an order, together with a check dated in advance, and has not since been seen or heard from. Mr. Innenhausen gave the information because of the brevity in my Chicago letter of March 13th relating the experience of Arthur Lowy, owner of the Lowy Theatre, this city, with the same man. It is evident that the scheme of this would-be advertising manager, Mr. Deere, is fraudulent. Chicago exhibitors are warned to beware of him.

Salisbury's Wild Life moving pictures have entered their last week at the Studebaker Theater. On April 2nd the first presentation in this city will be given at the Studebaker of "The Eternal City," produced under the direction of Daniel Frohman, Hugh Ford and Edwin S. Porter. Pauline Frederick appears as Donna Roma, supported by a cast of noted players.

"Uncle Sam at Work," which was originally booked at the Auditorium for a two weeks' engagement, will be shown for another week, making five in all. It is said by the management that a total attendance of 150,000 people marked the presentations up to and including Saturday, March 20th. The Auditorium, in order to meet the tremendous demand, has been giving three performances on Saturday, one in the forenoon at 10.30 in addition to the two regular exhibitions.

Daniel Frohman, who was in the city several days recently looking after the management of the Actors' Fund Benefit given at the Auditorium Friday afternoon, March 19th, was made a member of the Forty Club, at the monthly dinner given Tuesday evening, March 16th. In appreciation of the honor, Mr. Frohman extended an invitation to the entire club to view a private exhibition of "The Eternal City" at the Studebaker Theater, Thursday night, April 1st.

"The Governor's Lady" at the Ziegfeld Theater was succeeded by "Are You a Mason," and "The Wizard of Oz" Saturday, March 20th. This big double bill, in which John Barrymore appears in the first named subject, and Violet MacMillan and Frank Moore in the last named, should draw record-breaking crowds. Alfred Hamburger will open the Fine Arts Theater on April 10th with photoplay attractions, but has not yet announced the list. This week is children's week at the Ziegfeld and those accompanied by their parents will be admitted to all exhibitions, except Saturday's, at a reduced admission charge. "The Wizard of Oz" is popular with children, as it is a delightful fairy tale.

Captain Morgan Collins of the South Chicago police station, has started a movement to exhibit moving pictures in the Armstrong School, Greenleaf Avenue and Pinegree Street, every Friday afternoon, beginning March 19th. Five and ten cents admission will be charged, and the proceeds will be used to enlarge the work of the social center. Captain Collins is president of the local neighborhood association, which, with the sanction of the Board of Education, arranged to give these exhibitions.

The making of moving pictures has introduced many innovations in business and otherwise. One of the latest is that in which William Farnum figures. His manager, in order to insure himself against the loss that would come to him through the marring of Mr. Farnum's features by an accident, has taken out a policy for $100,000. The insurance company has agreed to pay that sum to Mr. Farnum's manager if the actor should suffer an accident that would prevent him from being a successful moving picture player. The terms of the policy forbid the actor to drive his own automobile, to sail his own yacht, or to indulge in any other form of sport that might result in disfiguring or disabling him.

Harry A. Mestaver, who made such a pronounced hit in George Kleine's "Stop Thief," and who is now playing at Cohan's Grand Opera House, this city, in "On Trial," has been engaged by the Selig Polyscope Co. It is understood that work on a six-reel special feature will be begun at once, with Mr. Mestaver in the stellar role. The title of the subject is "The Millionaire's Baby," the story of the photoplay being adapted from Anna Katherine Green's popular novel of that name. Mr. Mestayer has achieved great popularity by his photodramatic characterization of Jack Doogan, in the rollicking farce comedy mentioned.

OES ON WESTERN TRIP.

Ingvald C. Oes, general manager of the Great Northern Film Company, took a flying trip to Chicago last week, and on his way will visit Cleveland and Pittsburgh. An unusual demand is manifested throughout the country for features of the Great Northern Film Company, which is largely due to the efficient management of Mr. Oes, as also to the fact that the product of this concern is noted for its high standard of quality, and its superb, Americanlike execution of the themes.

Lee Arthur With Edison

LEE ARTHUR, the noted dramatist, who has been especially engaged to write exclusively for the Edison company, has contributed his first three-reeler, "The Greater Love," which will be one of the features which Edison is now releasing every week on its regular program. The story is a strong one, that of a young woman who sacrifices her honor for art and then falls in love with another young man for whose success she sacrifices her future. Mr. Arthur has given his best thought to make this play fully as powerful as the stage plays for which he is well known. Gertrude McCoy will play "the girl," Duncan McRea the heavy, Bigelow Cooper, her father, and Edward Earle the man lead. The play will be released in April. Two of his photoplays, "The Last of the Hargroves," and "From a Life of Crime," have already been produced by Edison. Mr. Arthur is now working at fever heat, throwing off a three-reeler every ten days. His task, he says, is made more difficult by endeavoring to make the plays models of compactness, for if there is one evil that Mr. Arthur is explosive on—like all successful dramatists—it is the "padded story."

Lee Arthur.

Mr. Arthur's story is one of finding indirectly his life's work. Educated as an attorney, for he is a graduate L. L.D. of Tulane University, he practiced several years in New Orleans when his success as dramatist drew him to the stage. His first play, "The Gay Mr. Lightfoot," was accorded a New York reception that left no doubt about his future.

He is still writing for the legitimate stage, having recently placed plays with Dan Frohman and the Shuberts for production. As Mr. Arthur is still a young man he is regarded as one of the most promising of playwrights who will give to the screen a type and standard of drama that will make for an improvement and enlargement of the photoplay's scope and influence.

SYRACUSE GETS A STRAND THEATER.

A new motion picture theater of the type of the Strand, and bearing the same name, was opened a few days ago in Syracuse, Samuel L. Rothapfel, the managing director of the Strand, taking personal charge of the "first night." Mr. Rothapfel, in speaking of the event, described the affair as a wonderful success. The Syracuse Strand Theater is a replica in miniature of the original institution on Broadway. All the social leaders and the most prominent city officials attended the opening. Mr. Rothapfel had personally superintended the staging and himself conducted the orchestra. The local manager is Edgar Weil. The corporation controlling the Strand and of which Mitchell Mark is president has, since the opening of the New York Strand, erected theaters of the same type and with the same ideas of management in Buffalo, in Newark, N. J., Worcester, Mass., and Lynn, Mass. Other theaters are under contemplation.

MACE WILL TAKE BIG FIGHT PICTURES.

Fred Mace and a corps of cameramen have gone to Havana to take motion pictures of the big Johnson-Willard fight which is scheduled to be pulled off somewhere in Cuba April 18. Owing to prohibitive laws it will not be possible to exhibit these fight pictures in the United States, but the promoters expect to get their returns from sales in other countries where no prohibition exists.

Doings at Los Angeles.

THE LETTER this week is robbed of its biggest news feature by a telegram sent by Mr. George Blaisdell of the World who is now here visiting the many studios. Of course you have already read of the opening of Universal City, the Laemmle party, special train, banquets, ovations, and all that went to make up the auspicious opening, and starting of operations at the big new Universal plant. And you read too of the deplorable accident which marked the second day's festivities, the untimely death of Frank Stites, the brave birdman who fell to his death. The news was a shock to many picture people here. Stites was a well liked man and a good aviator.

Mr. Blaisdell is busy visiting the many studios in and around this city, in fact there are nearly thirty different plants here and it is quite a task to visit them all in two weeks and do justice to each. He says that he likes the West all right, but that there are too many automobiles in Los Angeles to make it healthy for one, even if the climate is excellent. He promises a good story of the studios which will be given out in a few weeks.

However there are a few new things around here. For one thing the rain has apparently deserted Southern California for we have been blest with bright days for two weeks, and the prospects are for continued brightness.

Two clubs were formally organized this week. Here the Scream Club was formally put on its feet, while the Film Club was organized at the Premier studio. Malcolm Blevins was made president, Walter Rodgers vice-president, Karl R. Coolidge secretary and Miss Elsie Foster treasurer. Sergeant-at-arms is Horace Young.

When the Scream Club started, there were but four organizers. Now there are many members. Here is the official announcement as made at the time of organization: "The first annual meeting of the Scream Club was held at the lowly bungaloo of George Reehm, when officers were elected, by-laws erected and a general organization of the club made.

"The idea of the Scream Club is to furnish an outlet for the surplus mental calculations of moving picture writers, such as scenarioists, publicists, press agents and representatives of the various magazines and newspapers.

"The primary qualification for membership in this club is simple insanity. Even if a member is bugs he is not eligible, nor acceptable, until he has demonstrated his insanity, and proved it by sending in a press notice of some action of his which denotes him as a loon."

The following officers were elected: Bennie Lubinville Zeidman, Mutual, president, Screamer Supremer; Ford I. Beebe, Universal, vice-president, Screamer Supreme; Clarke Irvine, World, secretary, Screamer Scribbler; Clem. W. Pope, Telegraph, treasurer, Screamer Skinnum; Chester Withey, Mutual, sergeant-at-arms, Screamer Scrapper; Geo. Reehm, Biograph, advisor, Screamer Sage; Wm. E. Wing, Mirror, janitor, Screamer Scrubber; Don Meaney, Universal, assistant janitor, Screamer Sweeper; J. C. Jessen, News, chairman Membership Committee, Screamer Solicitor; Wm. G. Bitzer, Mutual, cameraman, Screamer Shooter; Bert Glassmire, Biograph, sleuth, Screamer Snooper; Richard Willis, Publicity, chaplain, Screamer Saint; Russel E. Smith, Mutual, scenarios, Screamer Scripter; Jean Lowry, Universal, garbage gentleman, Screamer Scavenger.

Initiation is to be self-inflicted, suicides excepted, and each member sending in press notice of same will be accepted, if his action is foolish enough to warrant it.

Miss Augusta Anderson is the only woman in the club, to be known as the Screamer Sewer, she having made the Screamer Serviettes.

Douglas Gerrard has received a postal card from the trenches in France signed by Lieutenant Anthony E. Hammond, formerly of the Kalem Co., and a member of the Photoplayers' Club, who was sent to the front some months ago. All that he could do was to sign his name and check a sentence which said "I am quite well." Gerrard has received several letters from his relatives and friends who are now engaged in the war.

J. A. Berst, general manager and vice president of the Selig Company, accompanied by Mrs. Berst, are here for a couple of weeks. He is looking over the plants here and visiting the western film headquarters. The opening of the new Selig zoo is still indefinite.

B. A. Rolfe announces the addition of a new company which will start work in the east in a few days. After completing one picture the players will come west and join the other two companies now working here. Olive Wyndham and Lionel Barrymore are the two new Rolfe stars who are working in the eastern made film. The title of the picture is not known.

"By Fair Means or Fowl" is the title of a funnigraph being screened by Eddie Dillon of Mutual fame. Fay Tincher and the usual cast of comic players are seen in this rural fun picture.

Bert Bracken, formerly with Balboa, has gone to the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company and is busy producing dramas for that company, his latest being "When the Fiddler Came to Big Horn." Bert was in town this week for a few days and told of much building at the mountain studio. He says they are erecting several buildings and laying a new stage, besides giving the whole plant a general overhauling.

George Melford and his Lasky players have gone to San Francisco for a week to shoot some new scenes for a forthcoming release. The company will take in the big Expo. Mr. Lasky is expected back in a week and when he does arrive some new plans are sure to be announced. It is expected that the company will film the great picture, "The Arab" in a few weeks.

Since the spring has come it seems that the sporting blood of many players has boiled up, for out at the Mutual they are organizing a baseball league to play everyone under the sun. The Universal team is on the field after the winter session indoors, and several other nines are to be on the turf soon. Other players who are not fans are being interviewed by sweet voiced automobile salesmen who have shiny wares for sale, and before long a big list of gasoline goers will be demolishing the boulevards.

Carlyle Blackwell returned home on St. Patrick's Day. The big leader of the Favorite Players was welcomed back once more by everyone. He will start work next week on another feature picture with Wm. D. Taylor in the director's role. While he was away the studio was overhauled and cleaned up for the summer rush of picture making.

Interesting View of New Studio Plant of

C. Elliott Griffin who was with the Biograph, has been transferred to the American and will be seen in Beauty brand pictures. The film, "The Divinity of Motherhood," has been changed again to "Babe o' Dreams." It was at first called "The Dream Baby." It is by Olga Printzlau Clark and is in four reels. Henry Otto has just finished "The Castle Ranch," not the dancing couple, but a good clean comedy, half English and half western, with Eddie Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood featured.

Of course St. Patrick's Day could not pass without some appropriate observance at the club, and as a big green poster announced on all the bulletin boards "There will gather at the Blarney Castle, familiarly known as the Photo-players' Club, a distinguished throng who will feast and in other ways assassinate old Colonial Stifle Pleasure. On this occasion the Honorable John Thomas Dillon, B. E.-B. W., will officiate. Nationalists and Ulsterites will please keep at safe distances. Neutrals may go as far as they please." The above brought out a good old Irish crowd and the dinner was a merry one indeed. Everything was green, but one of the waiters and he was an old and experienced one. The dinner even cost a greenback.

We had the Glendale Kalem studio on the wire this date and got some good news. The whole place is being given a thorough overhauling for the spring opening. A new stage is being laid, dressing rooms put up and several other buildings and additions erected. Many small improvements are being made and the whole place put in shape for the coming season. James Horne is busy producing "The Empty Well." What kind of a well was asked and they said they did not know. It is either a water, oil or ink well, and it might be either as it is a detective story.

The Famous Players are finishing "May Blossom" with Gertrude Robinson, Marshal Neilan, and Donald Crisp. Mary Pickford is being shown in a film, the name of which has not been announced.

Dick Stanton, actor-director, with Ince features, witnessed the fatal plunge of Lincoln Beachey at the exposition in San Francisco a few days ago. Stanton had been talking to Beachey but a few minutes before he flew, and saw him fall a few moments later. He wrote a vivid account of the accident which was run in a daily paper the next morning.

Mr. Blaisdell of the World was present when Frank Stites was killed at Universal City, and his account has been wired to the World already, and has appeared before this is even received in New York .

The Keystonian players have boated over to Catalina to get some fun scenes on the sea. Syd Chaplin and his followers made the perilous trip across the channel to the famous island of scenic beauty. Billy Sheer has left the Balboa and joined the New York studios to appear in comedies.

C. B. DeMille has started a new picture, title unknown, with Ina Claire, Tom Foreman, Jim Neale, and Theo. Roberts. The cast is a big one and the film is a feature already. The script is by W. C. DeMille, and is a story of college life.

"Ham," that comical man named Lloyd V. Hamilton, is suffering a painfully damaged finger as the result of a fall on the stage and catching of his hand in a trap door. The big Kalem funny man is laid off for a few days to allow the injured ring finger to partially heal.

We had some big races at Venice on the day of Ireland. Barney Oldfield made first place with Billy Carlson second. Both were on Maxwell cars. G. E. Ruckstell on a Mercer made third position. Cameras galore were on the three-mile track and some good weekly stuff was made. J. A. Quinn, always out with something new, had the film on his screen four hours after the finish of the race, and it showed the finish at that. The film was good and clear and drew quite a house. Dave Lewis, ex-Keystone man, won the race but for the last lap when he was ahead, but went out with engine trouble. Alas!

Miss Vera Michelena, sister of Beatriz, the famous star of the California Motion Picture Company, has been bitten by the fotocus animaticus bacillus, and is liable to surrender to the little germs and appear in some pictures here. She is with a company now playing a local theater.

New York Motion Picture Company cameramen are rejoicing. The new studio in town is to have a complete laboratory. Heretofore all film was done at the Edendale studios and the beach cameramen had no chance to see their film. The new studios will be started in a few weeks, as soon as the plants are ready for the workers.

Homer Croy, famed in "Life," "Judge," and other publications, visited the Mutual Studios this week and saw the production of pictures. Mr. Humorist was accompanied by his wife, who was only a short time ago Miss Mae Savelle.

CLARKE IRVINE.

WALTHALL IN "BEULAH."

President Cobe of the Alliance was very much elated when he announced that the next offering on the Alliance Programme would be Henry B. Walthall in the Balboa Company's six part production of "Beulah."

The novel from which this film was adapted is the work of the late Augusta J. Evans, the brilliant Southern authoress, and since it first came off the press several years ago it has gone through repeated editions and among the fiction reading public "Beulah" is as well known as "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The film follows the original story in every detail and Mr. Walthall and his associate players have made every effort by their acting to preserve the finely drawn characters of the book.

Miss Joyce Moore, the distinguished English artist, was especially engaged by the Horkheimer Brothers to play the part of Beulah, while Mae Prestell, Clifford Gray, Margaret Nichols and several other well known players, appear in important roles.

Selig Athletic Series

The First Reel of This Novel Series Contains Three Interesting Athletic Events and Will Be Released April 5.

By James S. McQuade.

THE first reel of the Selig Athletic Series, which has received wide publicity in the daily press throughout the country, will be released April 5th, through the General Film Co., and thereafter, one reel weekly, every Monday, until concluded. The production of this series is under the direction of Jack Hermann, one of the best known promoters of athletics in this country and in Europe. Mr. Hermann has devoted several months to preparations and actual work in the production of the films of this series.

I saw the first reel of the series, the other day, in Selig's private projection room and was much interested in the athletic exercises shown on the screen. The first shows Oscar Egg, winner of the six-day bicycle race at Chicago, breaking the world's indoor record by riding a mile in one minute and 44 seconds. The speed is registered by means of mechanical contrivances, as it was not possible to have the run on a regular course when the pictures were taken.

The second number was a brilliant display of billiard science between Koji Yomada, the Japanese billiard champion, and Albert Cutler, of Boston, the Yankee champion. These two players are conceded by experts to be among the leading exponents of the game now before the public, and the most difficult and trick shots successfully made by them hold the attention and interest of the spectator.

The third event, the most exciting of all, was a championship wrestling match to a finish between Dr. B. F. Roller of Seattle, and Frank Dalkus, the herculean Lithuanian champion. The two bouts showed very clever work on the part of both men; but Roller won both bouts.

Director Hermann, in a conversation, informed me that the Selig Athletic Series will also include a complete course of physical culture exercises, demonstrated by Bernarr McFadden, conceded to be one of the foremost men in that line in the country. These exercises will be valuable, in an educational sense, for members of both sexes.

New Policy at Hippodrome

"The Heart of Maryland" is Fine Photoplay Attraction.—Opening Performance in the Big Theater Lacks Smoothness.

WITH the Tiffany Company's production of "The Heart of Maryland," featuring Mrs. Leslie Carter, as the principal attraction, the new policy of motion pictures, music and stage spectacles was inaugurated at the New York Hippodrome on Saturday, March 20th. The large audience appeared to enjoy the novel mingling of pictures and a stage display typical of the Hippodrome. In the foreground, colored lights played on the fountains shooting up from the tank. Immediately back of the tank the orchestra was seated, and at the extreme rear of the stage an abnormally large screen had been stretched between the portals of an elaborate structure devised by the scenic artist.

Many of the errors in the performance of Saturday night may be avoided in the future. The long throw and the large screen did not produce a clear cut picture; the orchestral accompaniment for "The Heart of Maryland" was fragmentary and at times almost ridiculously crude. It sounded like a rehearsal. The showing of Kriterion Komic Kartoons on the circular drop surrounding the immense stage was worse than useless, for the pictures were distorted into an offense against eyesight. These are mistakes that may be rectified; unlike another feature of the entertainment that appears to be wrong in principle.

While "The Barcarole" was being sung by a soprano and a contralto floating about the tank in a gondola, a picture of a woman on a couch and a man bending over her was shown on the screen, and reaching from the screen to the wings of the stage there appeared a chorus of young women in costumes designed to attract the eye. The stage spectacle was prettily arranged, but had nothing in common with the picture, which looked incongruous under the circumstances. To make matters worse, the lips of the two figures on the screen continued to move after the orchestra and singers had been silenced. It was like a talking picture that did not synchronize. In the Toreador song from "Carmen" the picture of excited peasants was unnecessary in conjunction with a chorus of active men and women occupying the stage.

When the Hippodrome management has arranged the motion picture end of the program more judiciously, the popular appeal for the entertainment should be wide; for there is plenty of variety and color in the stage effects.

Emily Stevens

EMILY STEVENS, best remembered as the star of last season's biggest dramatic success, "To-day," which played an entire season at Brady's Forty-eighth Street Theater, has been engaged by B. R. Rolfe for appearance in the former Fiske play "Cora," which will be released on the Metro program early in May.

Emily Stevens.

Miss Stevens, a niece of Minnie Madden Fiske, is without doubt one of the leading of the younger dramatic stars. At the end of the 1913-1914 season Miss Stevens withdrew from the cast of "To-day" and journeyed to Palestine and Assyria in order to study the natures and characteristics of the peoples there preparatory to assuming the leading role in The Leibler Company's production of "The Garden of Paradise," the gigantic spectacle which played an engagement at the Park Theater, New York.

In selecting "Cora" for Miss Steven's first appearance in motion pictures, Mr. Rolfe showed more than excellent judgment. The piece affords this excellent actress ample opportunity to display her powers of acting and at the same time, being a society play, will permit of the wearing of the gowns which long ago have earned for Miss Stevens the title of the handsomest gowned leading woman.

Work has begun on "Cora" and under the able direction of Jack Noble, the superb material should work itself into a most attractive screen subject.

"Cora" will be staged at the Rolfe studios, Hollywood, California.

VITAGRAPH EMPLOYEES' FIRST GRAND ANNUAL BALL.

On Wednesday evening, April 7th, 1915, the Vitagraph Company employees will hold their first grand annual ball at Stauch's dancing palace, Coney Island. This promises to be one of the biggest social events of the year. The grand march will be led by Maurice Costello and Miss Estelle Mardo of the Vitagraph Players. There will be dancing for silver loving cups that have been offered by different members of the Vitagraph Stock Company. The proceeds of this affair will go towards the founding of a benevolent association.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

THE progress of the moving picture has been so great since the last world's fair that a vast and new field has been opened up. All educational processes worth considering will be seen this year either actual or pictured by means of the film.

Some half dozen picture places are installed in the Palace of Education and Social Economy. This pleasant method is to be used to portray in the most thorough and elaborate manner theories and experiments in educational developments, with the accompaniment of lectures.

From the exhibition authorities comes the prediction that the pedagogues of half the world will no doubt be there during the nine months of the fair, hence there can be no doubt about the advance of educational kinematograph in all its branches.

That large results will follow needs no prediction, they will come as a natural result, and, despite the rapid strides made hitherto, the future suggests that the educational usefulness of the moving picture will be by leaps and bounds.

The commercial side of the educational film will be greatly increased; indeed, it seems that the whole business of picture making will be more successful and profitable through the educational picture than from any other branch of the art.

Readers of the "Educator" page of the Moving Picture World should know that reviews of educational films are to be found on other pages of the paper. For this purpose, especial attention is directed to: "When the Mountains Call," on page 1450 of the issue of March 6th, also "Wild Life in Films," on page 1462 of the same issue.

These are most exceptional films, undoubtedly the best in their class, and are a splendid study in many branches and should not be overlooked. Another recent and valuable release is "The life History of a Silkworm" (Edison). Again this is a film which teaches a great lesson in one complete study, giving more information in fifteen minutes than could otherwise be obtained in several hours of study, it will readily be added to the school lists of most helpful films.

EDUCATIONAL PROVINGS.

The moving picture as an educator is now an established fact. From now on the uses of the educational pictures will grow by experience and adaptability; the process of elimination has already been going on, and the "survival of the fittest" is the foundation of the perfect future. Recent issues of catalogues by those firms dealing only in educational films, are being highly commended in pedagogical circles and in the public press; one paper expressing the opinion thereon, says, "even the most skeptical is now convinced of the immense possibilities of the moving picture as an adjunct to educational work."

A Teacher's Experience. Writing of the value of the pictures, a leading teacher says: "It has been my custom to devote one language period per week to oral expression and story-telling. Of their own accord the pupils began to tell me of the stories seen at the photoplay, convincing me that nothing I had yet done, had brought such enthusiastic response, or unflagging interest; I have kept that period for oral and written reproductions of such beneficial pictures as the children have seen, and the results have been beyond imagination."

For Limited Opportunities. One educator points out that for those whose time and opportunities are limited, especially such as are only able to study in night schools "the moving picture unquestionably represents an educational asset that is not to be despised."

"The rapid and thorough presentation of a subject, the diversified dissemination of useful information, especially on subjects of science and health, have proved the value of the educational film as beyond computation."

Attitude of Educational Boards. There has yet to be chronicled the first educational board that has not sought the best ways and means to adopt educational kinematography. Three powers are combining to bring about the desired results: the state, educational boards and libraries. The state is generally authorizing the cost, the schools are adopting the use, and the libraries are becoming the circulating mediums. This has been somewhat perfected in California where the State Board of Education has adopted for permanent use in the schools suitable films, while the state librarian is lending his assistance to the widest possible use of those films. If therefore the time has now come when all interested authorities are combining to bring about general and thorough educational kinematography it will be the duty of those interested to now attend only to the best growth and adaptability of the same to the requirements of he day.

SHOWING THE "SHOW ME" FOLKS.

A very new and very large educational picture campaign has been planned by the Business Men's League of St. Louis. William H. Bloomer, of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, suggested the plan, and the idea came to him after seeing "The Dawn of Plenty"—one of Barker's World Picture Stories.

The plan includes the production and circulation of pictures which will show the resources, conditions and possibilities of the entire state of Missouri. These resources and conditions are to be contrasted with the resources and conditions in other states. The pictures are to be accompanied by a lecture, and the entire production is to be exhibited in every city, town and village in Missouri.

The purpose of the pictures and the lecture are to stir the interest and enthusiasm of Missourians, and to educate them to better farming, better roads, better living, better business. The people will be shown how to make the most of every opportunity, how to increase their wealth by making the most of all the things that turn to wealth.

The Barker-Swan Service of Chicago has the contract for making the pictures, preparing the lecture and handling the details of circulation. The leading newspapers, commercial clubs, schools, etc., of the state are interested and are giving the plan their full co-operation.

RURAL MOVING PICTURES BY AUTOMOBILE POWER.

The remotest hamlet can now have moving pictures. By the happy combination of the two greatest inventions of these times, the projection machine can be run by the motive power of an automobile. In the State of Louisiana a campaign was initiated by the government for education along agricultural lines by means of the moving picture.

It was soon found, however, that the outlying districts, which most needed this kind of help, because of the lack of electrical power, had to be omitted. The State University, however, came to the rescue with the happy suggestion of auto-motor power.

The problem is now solved for every community, for wherever an automobile can go the pictures can surely be shown and a great advantage gained.

Arkansas as a state is the next to fall in line for state controlled education by moving pictures. Dr. J. R. Jewell, of the University of Arkansas, announces that a strong effort is being made to establish a department of visual instruction after that in use in the State of Wisconsin, the pioneer state for educational kinematography.

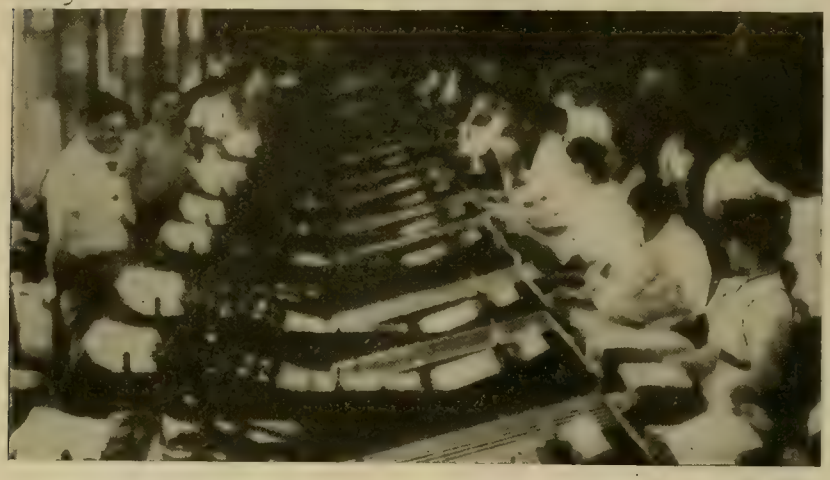
PUBLIC SCHOOLS INSTALL KLEINE FILM.

Mr. J. W. Petterson, Supt. of the chain of Bird Island schools in Minnesota, has just completed a contract to project a series of Kleine films as part of the educational curriculum. The course will start with "The Last Days of Pompeii," following with "Spartacus," "Antony and Cleopatra," "The Lion of Venice" and "Julius Caesar."

SOME NEW EDUCATIONALS.

"The Manufacturing of Paper Money" is an industrial picture released under the title of "The Needs of Commerce" by the Edison Company.

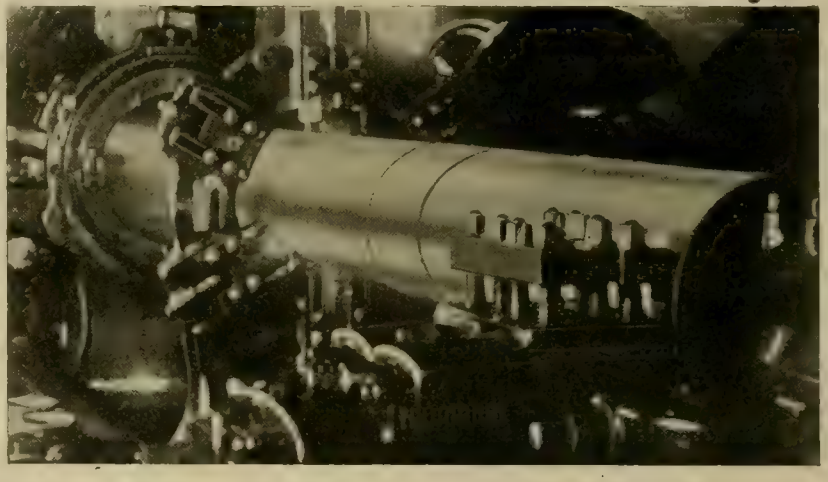
This will be a helpful picture in the schools of the country, the average run of young people are not acquainted with the origin and purpose of the money they handle, familiarity does not necessarily breed contempt, but it does cause an indifference to the value and means of that with which they are so familiar.



Scene from "The Manufacture of Paper Money" (Edison).

Views of the United States Treasury and associated buildings increase the interest of the picture, inside this vast and intricate literal money-making establishment everything is of importance. The engraving by experts, the printing, rolling, counting and examining of the bills, followed by cutting, ruling and numbering of the notes.

Many will be excited by the views of some $10,000 bills, also the vast sum of $66,000,000 passing through the hands of employees. The new Federal Reserve Bank Note is shown printing and in detail. The description of old and too well worn bills is illustrated. The great precautions for safety shown by the treasury vaults, massive and impregnable, exceed the most vivid imagination; the picture is extremely valuable.



Scene from "The Manufacture of Big Guns" (Edison).

"THE MANUFACTURE OF BIG GUNS" (Edison).

Guns are a special subject of interest these days. That the Krupp works of Germany is not the only place capable of making these monsters is proved by this picture.

This "Made-in-America" weapon is certainly a powerful looking piece of artillery. The first picture shows the turning of the monster tube—fourteen or sixteen inches—forty-five feet long, the boring of the gun being done so accurately that the variation of a one-thousandth part of an inch is not allowable. The shrinking of the jacket on the tube of a four-inch gun is especially interesting. The jacket is heated for eleven hours to 800 degrees Fahrenheit. It is then lifted out of the furnace, lowered over the tube and cooled by a water spray which contracts the jacket. Sixteen tons of wire are wound around a fourteen-inch gun with a tension of 50,000 pounds on the wire while winding. Turning the trunions, boring the powder chamber, preparing the breech-block, gauging and opening the breech-block of a sixteen-inch gun are only a few of the additional scenes. The weight of a sixteen-inch gun is 130 tons. This is an entirely new class of pictures, embracing many branches of learning, and will be of wonderful help in a technical school, in addition to its general educational interest. This film was taken by the Edison Company at the United States arsenal at Watervliet, N. Y. The sixteen-inch gun shown is intended for the forts at Panama.

"PROTECTING BIG GAME" (Edison).

Views of herds of Elk form a very pretty picture, the beauty of these elk on an eminence, silhouetted against the sky, is exceedingly statuesque. The state of Idaho is justly proud of these animals and takes special precautions for their protection.

The poacher is always present where there is valuable game and pitches his tent in skilfully selected locations and proceeds to the hunt on skis; soon a fine specimen falls to his gun. The game warden is, however, equally omnipresent and if unable to check him, usually, after finding the skinned carcass of the elk, is able to trace the lawbreaker to his camp. During the winter these animals huddle together like sheep, timid and difficult of approach; a good picture of them is unique.

This film is a good addition to the natural history series for schools and also possesses scenic beauty.

THE SUMMER IS COMING.

One of the greatest benefits conferred on young people is the park playground picture exhibitions. The New York School of Philanthropy recently held an "Institute on Play and Recreation," when the following opinion was voiced by a supervisor of recreation: "Motion pictures are the most wholesome of commercialized recreation, excepting sports, and one of the chief values is that they cater as an amusement feature to the family as a unit, and is in direct opposition to all forms of unwholesome amusement." It was further shown that while the parks afforded all kinds of physical diversion, the moving picture was a pleasing mental diversion, filling a great void hitherto existing in all open-air work, and the workers have hailed nothing with more delight than the moving picture. It is also testified by them that the children are freed from street dangers and kindred temptations by the park and open space diversions.

Bunny a Favorite in St. Louis

Talks to World Representative About the Future of Moving Pictures, and Discourses Interestingly on the Contrast Between the Stage and Studio Player.

I SENT my card to John Bunny during the Washington Birthday matinee at the American Theater, with a statement that I represented The World, and the request for an audience after the show, and John Bunny sent the stage doorkeeper, who had carried my message, back with word that I was to come right in.

"Anybody connected with the Moving Picture World doesn't have to wait until after the show to see me," he said, when I reached his dressing room; so I sat down on a trunk and asked him questions while he made up for the Roosevelt finale of "Bunny in Funnyland," that he is playing to packed houses with all over the country.

One of the first questions I asked was: "Are you going back to moving pictures?" And he answered with an enthusiasm and emphasis that is quite impossible to get on paper:

"Undoubtedly! Unqualifiedly! Without any question whatever, I am going back to moving pictures!"

"As soon, then, as the public is satisfied in seeing you in the flesh, and is convinced that you really look like your pictures," I exemplified, "you will be back in the studio."

"I will be back in the studio in October whether the public has seen enough of me or not. After this engagement, which will close in May, I will have a short rest; then I will go on the Chautauqua circuit for a period of six weeks, and in October I will be back at the Vitagraph studios."

The next question had a double head: "Do you think the speaking stage play is going to regain its lost ground, and will moving pictures suffer in such an event?"

"The legitimate is coming back to its own, but moving pictures will not be affected; they are too popular, too firmly imbedded in the hearts and minds of the people.

"The setback that the spoken drama received was only temporary, and due to the astonishing fact that an entirely new means of theatrical entertainment had been invented. Thousands of people deserted the old for the wonderful new art. Millions of people who never went to a theater of any sort took it up with enthusiasm. The spoken play can no more supplant moving pictures than moving pictures can supplant the spoken play. Moving pictures are an elemental art, and an elemental art they will probably remain, because the dramatic situations, the moments of suspense, the climaxes, all lack the God-given power of the actor's voice. The silent play can never overcome the lack of that. But, on the other hand, the spoken drama can never rival the picture play with its many scenes and living action. No painted scenery can rival the actual meadows, lanes, mountain tops and lakes and rivers with blowing breezes and glints of sunshine. The two arts, while similar, are dissimilar in their greatness. There is no merging; each art is distinct. They will both live and grow, and neither will ever entirely supplant the other."

Mr. Bunny was in khaki uniform by this time, talking through a Roosevelt mustache, and ready for the last scene of the play. And after he had done his part of the "rough rider," and satisfied the hand-clapping multitude that packed the house by a half dozen curtain calls, he came back in the room and submitted himself to his dressers to be made ready for street wear again. The great comedian was plainly tired, and it was a good time to put the next question.

"How does the work of the speaking stage actor compare with that of the moving picture player?"

Mr. Bunny was eloquent in his earnestness: "I was on the regular stage twenty-six years before I worked in photoplays. I know all the good and all the bad places along the road to success. The regular stage has pleasant spots scattered here and there—and then it has travel, and one-night stands, and bad hotels, and bad theaters. I now travel as a star; the best the country affords is at my command. My advance agent sees to it that I stop at only the best hotels; the most careful cuisine of the best cooks in the country is at my disposal; I never have to read the right-hand side of a bill of fare; people dine and wine me at their clubs and homes; but, in spite of all this, I am nothing more than a refined vagabond. The speaking stage actor is a man without a country, a man without a home. No matter how great a star he may become, he is always the strolling player. As a moving picture actor, my work is done either out in the open, in the air and sunshine, or in a large, well-ventilated, fireproof, factory-regulated studio. I have my evenings and my Sundays and holidays off like any other craftsman. I am at the beck and call of no hotel bellboy with power to summon me from the sweetest dreams to catch an early train; no heartless railroad time table forces me to bolt my breakfast and rush to a cab. There are no Pullmans; I sleep and dream in my own wide bed. I live in my own house, stroll about under my own vine and fig tree. I know the policeman on the beat; I am acquainted with the Captain of the precinct; I am on speaking terms with my Congressman; I vote. I pay taxes. I am a regular citizen!"

If there is any doubt in the mind of any man, of the power and permanence of moving pictures as the one great factor of the amusement world of today, the visit of John Bunny to St. Louis would forever dispel it. Bunny came to St. Louis for one week. The people went down and packed the American Theater from pit to dome at every performance. The elect and bon ton of the city vied with one another in their efforts to entertain him; he was carried around to receptions and teas and whatnot of a social nature. The City Club, an organization of fourteen hundred lawyers, doctors, bankers, business men and millionaires, placed the club at his disposal. Committees took him to the children's hospitals, where he spent an hour playing and telling stories to little kiddies with tears in his kindly voice and pity in his big heart for the little shut-ins who were bent and twisted by disease or so firmly held in plaster casts that they could not go down to see the great Bunny in person. Every newspaper in town sent their special writers to interview him, and gave the stories special spread on the first page.

And all this goes to prove the great power of moving pictures, for Bunny, in spite of his twenty-six years on the regular stage, is first and last and all the time a moving-picture artist, and it was as a moving-picture artist that the people paid him homage.

A man with Bunny's ability to play on the human emotion, to pull out the stops of laughter and tears at will, as he is able to do, could no doubt have won a high place on the regular stage, but he could not have won the following he has won in moving pictures, for the simple reason that there never was one-fifth as many followers of the spoken stage play as there are followers of the photoplay.

An analysis of Mr. Bunny's work on either stage reveals the traits that go to make a great actor. Poise, manner, and that most elusive thing, the ability of whimsical fun-making that leaves an audience on the dividing line between tears and laughter at the will of the performer.

While Mr. Bunny is known chiefly as a comedian, some of his best work on both the regular and silent stage has been of a serious order. He would have achieved a high place on the legitimate stage, no doubt, but he has achieved a higher one on the moving picture stage, and if ever the history of the rise and development of the moving picture art is written the name of John Bunny, pioneer, and picture player pre-eminent, will stand in a bold place in the roster of names that adorns its pages.

$50,000 PICTURE HOUSE FOR ST. JOSEPH.

With the recording of articles of incorporation by the St. Joseph Electric Amusement Company, it was recently made public property in the city of St. Joseph, Mo., that the concern mentioned is to build a moving picture theater at 712-714 Edmond street, that city, on the site of the old Majestic theater. Work on the detailed plans and specifications for the new structure was urged by C. U. Philley, the secretary of the amusement company. It is proposed to have the lobby of the handsome entrance to the theater 60 feet in depth. A seating capacity of over 2,000 is contemplated and the highest admission price will be 25 cents. The name of the new structure will be the Electric. The old Majestic theater will continue in operation until May 1 when work on the Electric will be commenced. The officers of the St. Joseph company are E. J. Gruble, of Kansas City, Kan., president; J. H. Cooper, Kansas City, Kan., vice-president; C. U. Philley, secretary, and Rice McDonald, treasurer. Charles R. Berry and J. L. Carlisle constitute the directorate.

CHICAGO KRITERION IN NEW QUARTERS.

Already the Chicago Kriterion Film Service has found their original offices in the Schiller Building inadequate to carry on the business of this new exchange. The entire third floor of this Chicago skyscraper was fitted out when this exchange opened a few weeks ago. However, it has been found in this short time that the quarters will not be large enough to carry on the volume of business that has been secured. The new offices will be located on the third floor of the Mallers Building at 5 South Wabash avenue. This is one of Chicago's newest structures situated right in the center of the film district.

Animated Cartoons in Motion Pictures

An Interview With J. R. Bray, the Originator of The Pathe "Colonel Heeza Liar" Series.

MENTION the name of "Colonel Heeza Liar" to almost any one and you'll see his or her face light up and a smile spread all over it. Who doesn't know the funny little Colonel—who hasn't laughed at his antics as he hunted wild beasts in Central Africa, outwitted cannibals on the River of Doubt, cultivated his farm with the aid of some strange assistants, and hunted ghosts in Castle Clare? The Colonel's friends are legion.

J. R. Bray is the originator and creator of these drawings. That there is no royal road to success is again proven by the fact that Mr. Bray started his experiments over seven years ago, and that was when motion pictures were still very young. Years of careful, arduous work was necessary before the results satisfied him. Today he is the head of an organization devoted to making his pictures, has a corps of artists working under his supervision and has patents on his process which cover the use of transparent material or material made transparent by any agency whatever in the making of animated drawings.

J. R. Bray.

Mr. Bray was found in his sunny New York studio engaged in conducting Heeza Liar through another series of escapades. Tall, slender and blonde, he looks more like a successful business man than an artist. Mr. Bray readily consented to talk about his work.

Regarding his work Mr. Bray said: "The public demands drawn illustrations which reveal the personality of the artist. The newspapers and magazines all prove that. It is easily seen that to illustrate fiction, for instance, a photograph rarely can be well used. The artist's drawing, on the other hand, can be idealized to fit the situation. This value of the illustration was recognized in everything but motion pictures, and now there too it has found its place. It is well to remember that an artist can draw that which is a physical impossibility for an actor to enact before a camera. The artist's possibilities are unlimited. The opportunity for real humor may be seen when one reflects that the humorous is almost invariably the unusual.

"Very few artists are able to make drawings that move. An extraordinary imagination is absolutely essential as is also a perfect knowledge of the science of motion. Problems come to the artist in this work that never rise in ordinary art. I have employed some very able artists to assist me, and find that very few of them can get the knack. For instance, one of the hardest things in the world to handle in these animated drawings is perspective. To have a figure come from the far horizon straight toward the observer—to have it grow from a dot to the proper size and preserve the 'balance' makes an almost insurmountable problem. I think I am correct in saying that not one artist in a thousand can put motion into drawings."

Few people would have the patience to do Mr. Bray's work. It takes between four and five thousand drawings to make 1,000 feet or one reel of film. In addition to the colossal toil of the art work it takes a week to photograph the drawings one at a time. Great speed united with unvarying accuracy is essential. Every stroke of the pen must count. Mr. Bray works so fast that he is able to keep four trained artists "inking in" the outline drawings which he makes. Extreme accuracy is necessary, as the drawings are magnified on the screen at least twenty-five times.

He was born in Detroit, Michigan, and has lived in New York since 1901. He was for seven years a newspaper artist being also a steady contributor to the humorous weeklies such as "Life," "Puck," and "Judge." He took his ideas to Pathe Freres over three years ago. The Pathe officials at once saw the value of his work, and from that day to this he has dealt only with Pathe.

William Elliott

WILLIAM ELLIOTT, one of the most prominent of the youthful element of American stars, who a few years ago attained a tremendous personal triumph as the impassioned young defender of the accused woman in Henry W. Savage's sensational success, "Madame X." and who is at present distinguishing himself in the principal role of the current dramatic achievement, "Experience," will make his initial appearance on the screen in the Famous Players Film Company's five-part photo-adaptation of the celebrated stage success, "When We Were Twenty-One," Nat Goodwin's former starring vehicle, to be released April 5th.

William Elliott.

As the wayward boy whom the Trinity, the three friends of his dead father, have so much trouble in saving from the consequences of his folly, William Elliott is admirably cast, and his denotement of the reactionary emotions of youth is always convincing and often touching. In all the action of the screen versions of this noted play, realism is dominant, but there is always underlying it a pure sentiment, wholesome and inspiring, and an impressive moral lesson that never intrudes upon the progress of the drama, but that issues naturally from the development of the plot.

One of the most striking and dramatic scenes of the piece is set in the "Corinthian Club," a fashionable supper-palace, where "the Imp," as the central character is known, discovers the falsity of the woman he adores. The scene presents one of the most powerful and emotional situations ever produced in motion pictures. From this crisis "the Imp" emerges regenerated, and turns to a purer, sweeter love waiting elsewhere for him.

Katherine La Salle

WORK on "An Innocent Sinner," Kalem's three-act production of Lawrence Marston's famous drama, is almost completed. This is the first of the "Broadway Favorites" productions, and features Miss Katherine La Salle in the role of "Hinda," the girl of the hills.

Miss La Salle is also well known to the patrons of Broadway productions, having appeared in some of the foremost successes of recent years. Among these are "The Master Mind," in which she played opposite Edmund Breese; "The Yellow Ticket," in which she succeeded Florence Reed in the leading role, and "Big Jim Garrity." In the last named, Miss La Salle shared honors with John Mason.

Catherine La Salle.

The "Broadway Favorites" features are to be released through the General Film Company's regular service. All licensed exhibitors will therefore be entitled to receive them without additional cost. Of special interest is the announcement that a staff of high-priced artists are busily engaged upon the special four-color lithographs for these features. This paper will consist of one, three and six-sheets.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Those Ballous.

HAROLD and Helen Ballou have been keeping very, very quiet lately, but now comes a handsome card of invitation to the opening of the New Olympian theater, Seattle, Wash. The face of the card carries their ingenious house device and the formal wording in script, the various sizes being well chosen to accord with their values. On the reverse is this message:

> The same friendly and loyal support of your home playhouse that was accorded us under our former management is courteously solicited in the assurance that no expense of effort will be spared to entertain you well. Photoplays of the highest merit with pipe organ accompaniment by a photoplay organist will be featured.

Some managers might think that a rather tame announcement, but the point is they do not have to indulge in superlative promises. They merely point to their past record. They are known and liked. Here they are again. Naturally they will find the same welcome they had before because they promise the same management.

There is enough food for thought in that to fill a couple of pages, but what's the use? The facts as they are stated tells enough. The Ballous ran a pretty little house. They did not lie about their coming attractions. They were among the first to tell their own opinion of underlined programs. They did not disguise their lobby as a bill board on a drunk. They kept the bills up and down the street and made the lobby inviting. Frames of photographs were not out of place, but they knew a rough pine backing for an eight sheet was not a good lobby ornament and so the people around there got the idea they were going to the theater when they entered the house. They were started to their seats with the impression that it was a regular place and a side show with pictures instead of a dog-faced boy or an eight-footed calf for the attraction. And they acted as though they were in a theater. They gave the house what the French call "an air," and they came again and again because they liked that air, and now, with a new, and we'll be willing to gamble a better, house, they simply announce that they are in the business again and their old friends flock to them.

Don't you think you would be better placed if you could have that sort of house? There is nothing to prevent you.

But we'll take this all back if Mr. Ballou ever goes and gets lost to this department again. Will he please put us on the mailing list and keep us there so long as the walls hold together, and more power to him.

From the Other End.

More than once we have commented on the fact that the western exhibitors seem to be more alive to their work than those in the effete east, but W. H. Cuzner, of the Premier theater, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia, is further east than most of us have been. He writes interestingly of his house and work:

> In order that the physical world shall maintain its equilibrium, it is necessary that the East and the West balance up. It follows, then, that the "Moving Picture World" should be furnished with material from the extreme East as abundantly as from the extreme West, if it is to avoid becoming lop-sided, which is one of my reasons for breaking in upon your attention, though on many other grounds the moving picture exhibitors of this continental jumping-off place have no just cause for continuing to hide their candle under a bushel. A close study of the "Moving Picture World"—and you may be assured that nothof consequence in any of its issues escapes my attention—leads me to conclude that the motion picture theaters of Cape Breton will take high rank in comparison with houses in similar communities anywhere on the continent, though we have our own peculiar difficulties. Sydney Mines is a town of some 7,000 people, mainly coal miners and steel workers, a large proportion of whom are immigrants. On the other hand we have a somewhat numerous and altogether desirable element well above the average in intelligence and refinement. We need the patronage of both of these factors to insure success. My problem is to capture and retain the agglomerate mass without alienating the more discriminating and cultured minority. To this end I publish a small four-page paper for the crowd—a copy of which I will mail you later—but I reach out out the glad hand to the more select through the mailed announcement, a sample of which I am enclosing herewith. I am considerably handicapped in this latter respect through the necessity of relying upon an amateur printing outfit, as you will perceive by enclosed announcement of "My Official Wife." I need not point out its defects, as the lack of "balance" is obvious enough to be painful, while the use of a cheap, smutty ink quite nullified the results of providing a superior quality of paper.
> Behind these qublicity efforts, however, I aim to provide a first-class show six nights of every week, and strenuously resist every temptation to play down to the lower levels. The very best of the serials are the feature for three out of the six nights, supplemented by two or three reels of comedy and educational specialties. At present the serials are, "The Million Dollar Mystery," on Monday and Tuesday, and the "Trey o' Hearts" on Friday. On Wednesday and Thursday I make good with Vitagraph "Broadway Star" specials and the "Famous Players" productions, with some of the best comedy stuff for spice. On Saturday I must provide satisfactory entertainment for a regular "run o' mine, Tom-Dick-and-Harry" audience, quite different from my regular stand-bys through the week. I foundation all these efforts with plenty of music—and good music, too. I provide a twelve-piece orchestra—supplemented by a fine organ every night, and as often as possible a high-class vocal soloist is booked for good measure. The evenings are not long enough for anything more, and the companies are not releasing anything better, and "there ye arre," as Mr. Dooley says. While complimenting myself upon my own efforts, I freely and generously acknowledge my great indebtedness to the "Moving Picture World" for the thousand and one ideas and suggestions which have enabled me to achieve so great a measure of success in a somewhat difficult and originally quite uninviting territory, and, though at present saddled with additional burden of war conditions, I am not at all disposed to take a gloomy view of the situation.

Mr. Cuzner's sample is about what he says it is. It is a four-page printed only on the inside pages and the two pages, facing each other, do not match, probably because of limited fonts of each face in the larger sizes. The idea that he seeks to work out is that of a high-class announcement, and much of this effect would have been gotten over had the ink been better, but the cheap ink smears badly. Not many exhibitors realize what a wide difference there is in printing inks. Black ink runs all the way from six to eight cents a pound to several dollars for cut ink of fine grade. For our personal printing we use an ink that costs $2.80 a pound where a cheaper grade would do most of the time, but we want to be sure of good work. But Sydney Mines is a long ways from a source of supply and Mr. Cuzner has done the best he could with what he had. He certainly has the right idea. The scheme of two styles of advertising to appeal to two divergent classes of patronage is a novel but effective one. We hope that Mr. Cuzner becomes a regular caller.

"Mrs. Manager."

Mrs. R. R. Moore is manager of the Ideal theatre, Akron, Ohio. She writes:

> Enclosed you will find samples of my first attempts at getting out programs. I want you to criticize them up and down, as I am anxious to improve them. Have been a reader of The Moving Picture World for two years, but do not remember having seen any contributions from our "City of Opportunity," so this may start the ball rolling. We are situated in a strictly residential section and seat about 300, open evenings only excepting Sundays and holidays. Will be glad to exchange programs with any manager who issues a four page sheet.

We do not like the front page, but apart from that Mrs. Moore has done exceedingly well.

The objection is that it does not look well. The type page is seven and a half inches long and on this the printer uses a narrow ornament three inches long, forcing the little matter the page can carry down to the bottom half. The text consists of two boxes, one carrying the name and address and the other the date, and some "snapper item." Something had to be done to kill the white space, but something better than using an ornament should have been done. As it stands, all you notice is the ornament, just as you would not notice a news stand alongside a sky scraper. It dominates the page to the exclusion of the reading matter. Ornaments should be seen but not be loud enough to be heard. Later issues show one slightly smaller, but rule work takes it down the page. We've never been able to learn why some printers have such a passionate admiration for ornaments, so we cannot advise Mrs. Moore how it is, but we think if she threatens to take the job somewhere else there may be an improvement. If the ornament is kicked completely out—as it should be, something must take it's place, and we think that the best thing would be to put a double rule border about the name of the house, or else a three point ornamental border and then use the white space for fifteen or twenty words of house argument set in a light eighteen point. The more or less humorous stuff that is being run is too frivolous for the position it occupies. It might be well to offer a small prize each week for the best worded sentence to fill the space. A couple of passes would do, since it is best not to make the prize so attractive as to arouse envy, and the contest should be free to all and not confined to patrons of the house. It might be made a way to gain new patrons. Inside there are inch advertisements top and bottom and three on the back page, the remainder of that space being given over to notes about the players and a little good house stuff. The names of the players would look better and stand out better if given in italic or even italic bold. The big stars should get a higher line. In her present stage of popularity, Miss Pickford is no eight point proposition: not by at least ten points.

They must have a classy set of advertisers in Akron. A tailor advertises "Old in the business—new in the neighborhood," and a candy store tells us that—

> Little Miss Mabel she sat at a table up here in our Candy store.
> Although it was Monday, she ate up her sundae
> And then ordered two or three more.

One program line that should be played up reads:

> The neighborhood theater is as great a convenience as your neighborhood stores. It is absolutely necessary to have diversions from the cares of business and the household. To dress up and make the trip down town and back on a cold night is foolish, but to step over to the neighborhood playhouse after the day's work is done, is a big measure of pleasure.

> The Ideal, equal to any—better than many.

We think that Mrs. Moore is doing very well as it is if she'll only coax the printer to tie crape on that ornament.

Another Revival.

A couple of years ago we used to have a lot to say about the Kehrleins. They did a lot that was worth talking about, but we thought they were out of the business they have been keeping so quiet since then, but along somes Emil, Jr., of that ilk, to write:

> Don't think that just because I have not written for a long time, that you have been scratched off the list by any means. On the contrary, the Kehrleins never fail to look up the "Advertising for Exhibitors" and, thereby glean hint after hint and help after help.
> Lord! do we not need it these days? Hundreds and hundreds of "fillums," right, left, front, and rear, just like the charge of the ill-fated Six Hundred! But, outside of hard work, it is fine for the exhibitor to be thus surrounded, for he can pick and choose, and it is his own fault, if he doesn't get a 20-karat program nowadays
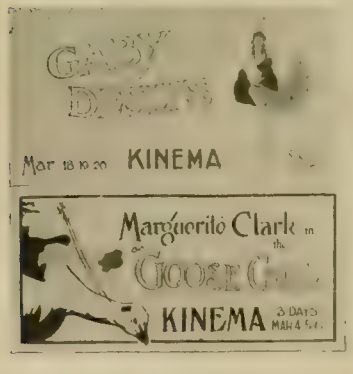
> We are getting ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents these days, with 1,500 seats pretty well filled every night here in the Fresno Kinema.

With 1,500 seats and twenty-five cents "top" they can afford to do good advertising and because they can do good advertising, they can get the quarters instead of the nickels. We don't like to call Mr. Kehrlein names just the minute he comes back, but he sends only a couple of samples, just enough to make us want more. One of the exhibits is a couple of street car cards of unusual merit and a booklet for The Goose Girl that is a fine piece of work except for the cuts. These are the usual coarse screen newspaper cuts and printed on calendared paper they look very badly. The cover is a brown done in dark brown ink, with just a touch of red across the shoe straps of the feet. It looks as though it might have been put in with a pen for a small run. The house marks seems to be a stock mortise with the initial of the Kinema set in. It is hardly enough for the front page. There the name of the house and date of showing of the film should have been used. If, by any chance, the inserted four page becomes detached there is nothing to show the house or date. The date appears only once and that on page five. Repression is all right, but the first duty of an advertisement is advertisement and the house could get more out of this without becoming obnoxious.



Very Bad.

A non-professional correspondent sends in from Sacramento, California, some advertisements of the various houses which makes it appear that a wave of prize giving madness has struck the town. He contributes this information of interest:

> You may be interested in the enclosed three ads, clipped from the Sacramento dailies of Feb. 20 and 21, as illustrating what is, to my mind, a poor attempt at publicity.
> The T & D, a house of good capacity, and enjoying rattling good attendance for three days runs at 10c admissions, was the first to inaugurate the "prize contest." The clipping gives their report of the first day's entries.
> Fairyland, much smaller capacity, but a popular little theater, follows suit two days later.
> The Sequoia usually shows at ten cents—and seems to have no regular system as to length of run—one, two or three days in some cases.
> Sacramento city proper is well supplied with motion picture houses. The Actograph, Fairyland, Lyric, Acme, Majestic and Ray's—showing at 5c. The T & D, Liberty and Sequoia at 10c; and the Clunie—regular theater—used quite frequently for big features at 25c to $1. On the first of March the Diepenbrock, formerly a stock theater, is to be given over to moving pictures. There are two in the Oak Park suburb and a third in contemplation.
> "Cabiria" is announced for the T & D, making, I think, the fourth showing of this film in Sacramento—the first booking having been at the Clunie, where the pictures were shown with full orchestra and chorus accompaniment; and crowded houses were the rule for this first run at prices scaling from 25c to $1.
> The reports of Sunday closing laws and strict censorship sound strangely to those familiar with western conditions. Here in Sacramento all theaters are subject to the censorship of the City Commissioner of Education; but there is very little interference with the productions. And as for Sundays—even the 5c houses reckon on an increased patronage on that day which will permit the doubling of the admission price.

"T and D" are evidently Turner and Dahnken. They started the ball rolling with an auto, a couple of diamond rings and some yearly passes. The Fairyland went in stronger with more prizes and a wider diversity. Then the Sequoia came along with a prize contest that starts off with a bone collar button, "from the head to the head usher" for first prize or 56,450 votes and a third prize of an automobile, now being invented, to be perfected in 1920. It is to be a twelve-cylinder car and the present prize is to be one of the cylinders, the remainder of the car being won in successive contests as the years roll on. For 12,623 coupons you can get a scholarship in a school for operators, thirteen lessons, one every three months. They spoil the satire with a final line: "The reason we keep our doors open is to be public benefactors. We aim to give something for nothing. To h—— with the motion pictures." That is in wretched taste and will nullify the satire above. It shows the heat beneath the apparent "kidding." Humor is the only thing that will offset this general desire to get something for nothing, but it should be humor and not animus, at least, not on the surface.

These gifts enterprizes, even where, as in the present case the number of votes is the deciding factor and the element of chance is removed, seldom do a house permanent good. Only a few can get the prizes and the others would be less than human did they not resent the time and trouble spent to no effect. The only prize affair that makes friends is that in which every person who accumulates a specified number of coupons gets the same award. Then it is a premium and a square deal. We think the Sequoia will have the best of it in the long run if they will keep profanity out of their advertisements.

Coaxing.

The Comique theater, New Bedford, Mass., takes up the "Free information" envelope described some time ago but builds upon it. If you do not remember, this was a small "pay envelope" with a very large "Free" and underneath "information" in the smallest box head gothic. Inside is the announcement. But the Comique did not trust to the enclosed sheet. They put in a couple of pens and a slip starting: "You won't have to pen it down," to remember the Exploits of Elaine. The pens suggest something of value and the man who might throw away an envelope that he knows contains only paper will open this to find what the hard object is. Variations might be a small "finishing" nail with "Nail it down," a fragment of a wooden rule with "Make it a rule," or similar ideas. The Comique built up on the original idea. Now it is easy enough to plan some variation. A card for A Long Way to Tipperary carries too much type and too much of that all capitals. H. A. Chenoweth is the manager, the owner of a Boston house, as well. One catchy feature of the card is the request that you bring it with you as you will be asked to join in the chorus. That is something that attracts most persons.

Gave Out Nickels.

The Paramount theater, Newark, sends in a pocket piece, the familiar aluminum ring around a buffalo nickel. One side is embossed with the statement that it is good for five cents at the ticket box (or anywhere else, for that matter) and the other side says it is good only at the Paramount. Oscar A. Morgan writes:

> I am enclosing a pocket piece, which we gave away last evening to the purchasers of every twenty-five cent seat. This is a real nickel, as we had to use the real coin so as not to interefere with the Government.
> The coins will be redeemed at their value at the box office any time. Of course, we gave out a limited number, one thousand, but the novelty has set Newark talking. There will be no loss to us, as even if kept by the people, it will be valuable advertising for us. I am, also, enclosing one of the Paramount buttons, got up by the Paramount Pictures Corporation for all their service houses. We have given away thousands—people grab them up.

If we had a house we would hate to see those coins coming back to the box office. We would have the five cent piece again, but we would be out more than that in advertising. It is human nature to show your pocket piece and each time it is shown it either tells a person of the house or freshens their memory, and any smart bit of advertising suggests a general alertness on the part of the management that argues in favor of a good show. If the nickels, like chickens, come back to roost, it is a sign that the idea did not take. The Paramount button did not come along. The general manager of the Paramount is Tali Essen Morgan, the noted musician. We fancy that the musical program of the house would be worth listening to.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Let's Have Some Style.

SOME issues ago we ran a paragraph from Bannister Merwin on the full script as a means of communicating the style of the author to the producer's action. Mr. Merwin promised to amplify this, but the foreign mails have been irregular and we are still waiting. Meantime comes E. S. Ballard with a very sane plea along the same lines. He writes:

> In your issue of February 20th a writer suggests that characterizations injected into a photodrama increase its power of appeal and add strength generally. To this I agree, but when he adds that these characterizations are merely ornaments attached to embellish the theme and have no direct connection therewith I believe he proves himself blind to a splendid opportunity.
> Why not so contrive these characterizations that they exercise the functions mentioned by the writer and at the same time cause the plot to develop and move forward? In other words, is it not possible to enrich your story with characterizing incidents which not only adorn but also vitalize the very spirit of the theme?
> It is here, I believe, that the scenario writer can confute the charge that the photoplay gains nothing from "style," hence is not "literary." As the capable writer develops, he will find that the photoplay can be made to develop and inspire as does a beautiful melody, particularly if the producer is in accord with the writer. And the power of characterizations, at its zenith, when nothing that is used in adornment is superfluous, opens the way to this highly desirable phase of the art.
> It is true that the artistic and discriminating use of words and phrases makes the "style" of a fiction writer, but unless these words and phrases convey an interesting and entertaining thought the "style" will have little significance. Likewise, for example, the photoplaywright may seek to make his heroine piquant and whimsical, but the use of a lot of detached action will not accomplish this in the manner of the best craftsmen. Opportunity is frequently found to make a single bit of action bring out the characteristics of one or more persons, further identify others and at the same time speed the plot along toward the climax.
> Too many photodramas are like soggy fruit cakes, stuffed with ingredients which refuse to harmonize. If the photoplaywright has the sense of "style" so frequently regarded as worthless in his craft, his work will have something vital in it and rise above the merely mechanical.

Sooner or later we must come to this if the photoplay is to be raised above the level of sameness, but first it will be necessary to urge upon the makers of film the great need for following an author's script where the script is complete and an harmonious whole.

Take fifty stories by any given director, compare them with fifty stories by another director and you will find that each man has certain clearly marked mannerisms of direction that are impressed upon ninety per cent. of his product. The plots may differ, but the production methods are so much the same that there is practically no variety to the output. The average director has but one way of putting on a script and this method is impressed upon every inch of his product. As a result there is a lack of variety to his work. But given authors able to impress their individuality on their work and we have, instead of the work of a few men, the work of perhaps ten times as many, and most real authors are more inventive because invention is their business and their stock in trade.

Sooner or later we must come to the fully developed script if we are to have the necessary variety. Why not start it now when the business already stands at a crisis? It will mean a little more money paid for scripts, but it will mean vastly better scripts.

Where would the magazine business be if each publication had half a dozen men to take the suggestions of leading authors and put them into story form? Where would be the charm of "Ruggles," the ingenious swindles of George Randolph Chester's "Wallingford," the local color of Montague Glass, if the same man wrote all those stories from the author's bare skeletons? If you want to see the answer, pick up any of the numerous magazines that now print fiction versions of film plays. These are stories, but are they either as interesting or as well written as the stuff in the purely fiction magazines?

That seems to be the answer.

Scenes.

Howard Irving Young hands in the scene given below as one of the reasons why editors won't go to heaven when they die because of the language they used. It is copied verbatim from a script consisting of only ten similar scenes. It reads:

Scene 2—Parlor.

> Young people gathered for a party. Mr. and Mrs. Jones and Miss White enter. Mrs. Jones introduces Miss White to young people—among them Harry Smith—they converse—he asks her to dance—acts as her partner to supper—and shows her many attentions—when it is time to go home he leaves the room with her.

That is what comes into a studio. And when it goes out again the disappointed author thinks that the story was stolen, for that is the only reason so good a play could be rejected. It's a shame to let people go on paying postage on such stuff.

Let's take the first real scene: that in which Harry and Miss White meet. Her name is Mary.

2—Parlor—Young people on—Mrs. Jones enters with Mary—evidently Mary is a stranger—introductions—Harry enters—sees—smitten—asks for introduction—introduced—shoulders the others out of the way—music—all start to dance—Harry asks for the—dance—they dance out of scene.

The next point is that Harry is much impressed. This has been established in the first scene, but needs emphasis, so we show a scene something like this:

3—Another Part of Room—Dance over—Harry and Mary enter—she sits—he stands talking—boys crowd up—all anxious for a dance with the belle—Mary offers her program—Harry takes it with a laugh—pencils his initials on every line—other boys protest, some laughing, but none of them too well pleased—Mary enjoys her triumph—pretense of helplessness when they appeal to her—next dance called—Harry offers arm—Mary prepares to take it—Jim takes program—writes his initials over Harry's—shoves in Harry's face—half laughing, but determined—they dance off—Mary looks back at Harry—smiles, not a malicious but a consoling smile—the others laugh at Harry—he is a bit sulky—saunters off.

This is rather a long scene as written, but it will play rapidly. It is worth the footage since it strikes the keynote of the play, which is the determination of Harry to win the girl. Now we want to show that Mary is perfectly willing to be won, but it cannot be done in the next scene; the end of the dance must be suggested, and we have already strained continuity slightly in taking them off in two at the start of the dance, and showing them over the dance in three. We can't run off the ball at that rate of speed, and so—

4—Quiet corner—Harry enters—sulky—sits. His back is to the arch or doorway through which he enters.

5—Room as in 3—Dance over—Jim and Mary enter—she slips away—he is puzzled.

6—Back to 4 (Quiet Corner)—Harry still sulking—Mary enters—timid—comes to him—half pleading—half apologetic—he rises—sees her expression—he grows radiant—she does care—offers arm—they exit.

That's about all we need of the party. It is not a story of the party, but a story of Harry and Mary, and if we last the party out we'll lose footage, so a time leader and the next development does better. After what has passed we can guess that Harry takes Mary home, that he is her supper partner and all the rest, so go on to the next action.

Three Reels.

Three-reel stories seem to be the best sellers at the moment with the licensed companies, and it is only a matter of time when the independent concerns answer back, just as they did when the two-reel stuff became in demand almost over night. Three-reel stories should contain more than half as much again plot as a two-reel, but as in the case of the two reels, which too often are merely padded one-reels, a two-reel plot with really interesting action can be run up to three reels.

Lubin Western.

The Melville section of the Lubin Company, Julian Louis Lamothe, editor, is now in the market for, to quote Mr. Lamothe, "good, strong melodramas of two and three reels with smashing climaxes. Not the 'ten-twenty-thirty' type, but really high class melodramas with a punch. And we are NOT in the market for Western stories. Please make them understand that."

Scripts should be sent to Mr. Lamothe, in care of the company, 4550 Pasadena avenue, Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Lamothe adds that while the idea is, of course, the thing most greatly to be desired, the technique will materially affect the price, as the scripts will be paid for on the basis of idea and the amount of reconstruction necessary. He will try to give a decision within two weeks from receipt.

It is useless to send Mr. Lamothe—or anyone else, for that matter—stories that are not equal to the studio grade of stuff and even a little better.

Pretty Raw.

Those who entered the recent Edison-Mirror prize contest are receiving slips that begin: "Your name has been given us by the New York Dramatic Mirror as that of a contributor to their recent photoplay contest." Then follows the usual revision-sales bunk.

That is not at all a nice way to act.

New Comedy.

Because some companies announce that they are in the market for "polite" or "parlor" or other brands of comedy and "do not desire slap-stick," do not get the impression that you must restrain the action and keep the comedy in the idea. That is not what they are trying to tell you. No matter by what name it goes, comedy MUST be lively in action. It must have rapid movement of the players and plot alike. It must offer material that can be laughed at because it looks funny. Putting a man into a dress suit does not mean that he must keep his shirt unwrinkled. It merely means that a man in evening clothes looks neater and more pleasing than a hod carrier with half the day's mortar on his clothes.

A photoplay is a story told in action, and a comedy is a story told in humorous action, and a man and a woman sitting on two plush chairs and talking is not action; it is an irritation. There must be something for the eye as well as the brain or else the alleged comedy will be no more than an illustrated joke.

Just because you cannot resort to slapstick is all the more reason why you should tax your brain for business that is lively and amusing. Hit a man over the head with a blown bladder and you have a slapstick. Put him where the drip from the bathroom ceiling hits him squarely on the bald spot, cut back to the overflowing tub and use a close up for the bald spot and you'll have a combination that is worth a whole box of bladders and a wagon-load of barrel staves made into slapsticks. A situation like that would be visual comedy. Now bring into the room the girl the chap wants to make an impression on. Have him too timid to tell what the trouble is or move his seat, and you have the mental suggestion that makes the physical situation all the more humorous.

Labored Development.

"Graceful—but he shows how hard he's working," is the most damning criticism we ever heard made of a certain dancer. He was graceful in the extreme, but you could almost see him exude perspiration because he worked so hard. The effort robbed the grace of spontaneity.

It is the same way with so many script writers. They work hard and earnestly, but they make their work so much of a task that the effort shows through the script and depresses the editorial reader, just as it would the spectator should the work ever get through the screen.

The author painstakingly but laboriously builds up his establishment of facts. He takes each one and hammers and files and hammers again, piling scene upon scene in a labored development of simple statements that could be disposed of in half a scene if he would only give life to his thought. To bring about a meeting we get something like this:

Jim leaves his house.
Jane leaves hers.
Jim crosses a scene.
Jane crosses a scene.
They meet.

And the only important fact is that they meet, and it might be possible to bring them together to better advantage in her house or in the home of a common acquaintance.

Look ahead. See what is going to happen. Plan to have it happen in the smartest fashion and in the fewest number of scenes that will bring the result naturally.

Don't leave the editor feeling tired because you've worked so hard. Work still harder, but with a more sprightly thought, and make your action suggest that the work of weeks was just "dashed off," not because it is carelessly fashioned but because there is such an utter absence of apparent effort.

It all gets down to doing so many scripts that you get used to handling action and the best development comes to you instinctively. Working over a script for a friend we just put into four pregnant scenes an effect he was unable to achieve in eight. We did not even know the story, except in a general way, but knowing the effect sought it was a simple matter to work the scenes briskly and tellingly.

Work hard, but let the work show in finished and not in labored development.

Not Lately.

It has been some time since we advised against the use of the red half of a two-colored ribbon—in print at least, but the increasing number of requests for information on this point suggests that it again be said that the script should be all black and that leaders, inserts, numbers or scene descriptions should not be done in red. No regular author does and to do so carries the suggestion that you are not a regular author. If you want to use the red half keep it for practice work or get an all black and use both halves.

Reversing.

How many stories have you seen in which the hero goes or is sent west to reform? What? No! The reply is incorrect. The proper number is 7,596.

BUT how many stories have you seen in which a western hero is sent east to reform? Correct this time. Not one. Still it can be done.

How many stories have you seen in which a shipwrecked party on a desert island are captained by the poor but masterful sailor. And on the other hand, have you recollection of one in which blood tells and the man with brains still rules brawn?

You have plenty of time. Complete the list for yourself, then ask why you do not write the unwritten. It is possible that a young man raised in the west might benefit by a stay in the east, just as the western girl, sent to the eastern boarding school to be returned unlike her old self might be replaced by the eastern girl sent west and returned with new ideas. If you cannot always get new ideas you can at least turn old ones inside out like an old skirt.

Yes, but Why?

Suppose you lay on the railroad track, bound and gagged, like the hero of your first play, and the fast freight came thundering down on you and you shut your eyes and thought of your past life and the evil things you had said about script editors. And suppose that you felt the cowcatcher scratch your cheek and you knew you were dead when suddenly the engine and forty-seven loaded freight cars, not to mention the caboose, jumped over your prostrate form and went on down the track. That would be nice, wouldn't it, but why expect any such performance? In real life your remains would have to be collected with a sponge. And yet that is just the sort of stuff some writers keep piling into their stories. Poor but honest Jim cannot marry Muriel, daughter of the rich Hank Smith. It looks as though the also rich but evil Sam Brown would get her, but in scene 39 Jim finds a couple of oil wells out in his back yard and so all ends happily. You wriggled out of the mess you got yourself and your characters into, but why think that it is a story when it really is a criminal offense?

In these days editors do not merely want stories. They want GOOD stories. They want stuff of a professional grade. They want material in which the idea and workmanship are both good throughout. Any half baked writer can start a most remarkable series of complications. The rank outsider can pile complication on complication. He can get all sorts of ideas, but when it comes to working to a climax in which all of these complications are adjusted, he merely blithely says, "Ha, ha! It was a dream." And if he is in reaching distance the editor should kill him. A mere baby can put more knots in a fishline in ten minutes than a patient adult can disentangle in half a day, but that is not saying that the child is gifted.

It is not the creation of complications that mark the workman. It is the manner in which these complications are resolved. The true workman knows where he is going before he starts. He does not get a fine start and then flounder helplessly around for a reel or two trying to get affairs straightened out. He creates the complication with its solution already provided for, and so he does not have to fall back on the time-worn expedients of—

The sudden death of the villian.
His death bed confession.
The sudden inheritance.
Mistaken identity.
And ???????.

You can't get along these days with the 1910 model story. You must keep up to date and just a little ahead, and doing that you will not slide out from under your story. You'll finish it off and you'll not start anything you cannot finish logically and interestingly.

Making a Plot.

One of the recent practice lessons of a pupil was a plotless tale. An old bachelor and an old maid met and sympathized because their physician prescribed the same unpleasant exercise for both. But out of the exercise came love that ended in marriage. In addition to being old, this offered no plot. It was merely a series of incidents. But if the physician had prescribed this exercise for the sole purpose of throwing his two patients into each other's company in the hope of awakening love, then the incident would have become a plot (though still a stale one) because now there is a reason for the action. That is the difference between a plot and incident. The plot gives us a reason for becoming interested in incident.

Slangy Leaders.

A recent Script warns against the use of slang in leaders on the proposition that this is not understood in England. More than that, many respectable words mean something else abroad. "Cute," for instance, is not the same in England, where both "cute" and "cunning," here given a dual meaning, stand for the single sense of dishonesty. In England there is but one sort of bug and that a night prowler. All others are "insects." The safest plan is to use the more direct definition of a word and keep out of trouble.

Truth.

"It is such a relief to have someone tell me the truth," is the way an author thanks us for a recent criticism. She has been working more or less in the dark and such comment as she received was all favorable. That didn't help any. It was encouraging, but not helpful. It is only human nature, perhaps, to want to be patted on the back, but if you are in the wrong and are searching for the right, it is not of permanent benefit to be told that the wrong is right. Be suspicious of flattering comment. Be afraid of praise and unafraid of distasteful but constructive criticism. And please don't take this as an invitation to write in and ask for a criticism, because we are plenty busy as it is.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturer's Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without study.

Question No. 78.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What do you understand by a "fixed resistance rheostat?" What do you understand by the "fixed resistance" of an adjustable rheostat, and how much must there be? Explain in detail, illustrated by sketch if necessary, the workings of an adjustable rheostat.

Roll of Honor.

The Roll of Honor on Question No. 72 consists of Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; Montreal, Canada; John Solar, Watertown, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; B. M. Spencer, Attleboro, Massachusetts; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico; and W. C. Crawford, New York.

I was considerably puzzled as to which one to select for publication. As a matter of fact the really best reply was by Brother Spencer, whose drawings I have used in conjunction with the text matter of Brother Bullock. The trouble with Brother Spencer's reply was that it was too technical. While it was perfectly correct it was worded in such manner that it would be rather difficult for the non-technical man to understand. I regret this because the drawings were as fine as any I have ever received, therefore, I have taken the liberty of using them.

Reply to Question No. 72.

By G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico.

The Question:

Suppose you had a G. E. mercury arc rectifier, and were connected to the 110-volt side of a three-wire system. But the light company issued orders that all projection lamps must connect to the two outside wires. Using the cut on page 177 of the Handbook tell us what changes you would make. Explain something of the theory and action of a mercury arc rectifier. What is lead 32 for? How could you raise the amperage of your rectifier, if it were not already to capacity? Explain, in plain, understandable words, the construction and action of a choke coil. Is it or is it not as efficient as the transformer? Why is the transformer (economizer) generally preferred for moving picture projection circuits?

The Answer:

If I were using 110 volts and was required to use 220 I would disconnect wire 32 from stud 12 and connect it to stud 13, at the same time changing wire 34 from stud 38 to 37.

Primarily a mercury arc rectifier is a device which will receive alternating current at one voltage and deliver direct current at lower voltage. The tube of the mercury vapor type has what is known as unilateral conductivity, or, in other words, it will conduct electricity in but one direction. (This is not quite my understanding of the matter.—Ed.) By closing the carbons of the lamp, tube A, Fig. 1, is automatically tipped, whereupon the mercury from starting anode D flows across the gap and forms a bridge between mercury well B and the mercury in starting anode A. This completes a circuit from the generator through starting anode resistance H, mercury well B, the lamp, and the main reactance, and regulating reactance back to the generator. When the tube returns to its upright position the mercury bridge is automatically broken, thus causing an arc to form, which ionizes the mercury vapor in the tube.

Ionization is an electrical bombardment of the molecules of mercury vapor. It imparts to the mercury vapor the property of conducting current at the impressed electro-motive force from anode C^1, or C^2 to cathode B^1, but opposes and prevents the flow in the opposite direction. (I don't understand it that way.—Ed.) Suppose this current to be represented as flowing from the generator through line X to point O. At O it divides and flows as follows: (1) Through anode C^2, cathode B^1, through the lamp, through one-half of the main reactance E and through line Y back to the generator. (2) From O through main reactance F^2 and F^1, regulating reactance E and line Y back to the generator. You will notice that the current flows from the top to the bottom carbon. When the electro-motive force reaches zero in its cycle the arc and the tube would be without current for an instant, and would go out were it not for reactance F^2, which causes the current to lag and supplies the current necessary to keep the tube in operation until the next cycle is started. As is explained in drawing X, on the new cycle the current flow will be in the opposite direction. It may be represented as flowing along line Y from the generator through regulating reactance E to point Z where it again divides, as formerly described at O, and the process already described is repeated, in reverse, that part of the current reaching the arc lamp flowing through cathode C^1. It will be noticed that in this instance also the current flows from the upper to the lower carbon, and we, therefore, have direct current at the arc, but it is pulsating current, a diagrammatical representation of which is shown in Fig. 1^1 and Fig. 2. In Fig. 1^1 the action is shown as it would be were the tube without any voltage at all between the alternations. Fig. 2, however, illustrates the current about as it really is—slightly pulsating. You may raise the amperage by disconnecting wire, Fig. 2, at its lower end and connecting it with a stud of higher number.

A choke coil is constructed by winding a number of turns of insulated copper wire around a core of laminated iron, or bundled iron wire. The number of turns of wire varies with the e.m.f. to be used and the size of the core, also with the frequency of the cycle. The core is laminated to prevent excessive heat which would be set up by eddy currents in a solid core. The action is as follows: (a) When current is passed through a coil wound on an iron core, the core becomes magnetized in proportion to the number of amperes flowing through the coil, the number of turns of the wire in the coil, and the magnetic qualities of the iron. b. When a conductor cuts a magnetic field in a certain direction a magnetic e.m.f. will be set up in the conductor, the strength of which will be proportional to the number of lines of force and the rate at which they cut the conductor. The voltage and the resultant current is proportionate to the number of lines of force which cut the conductor per second.

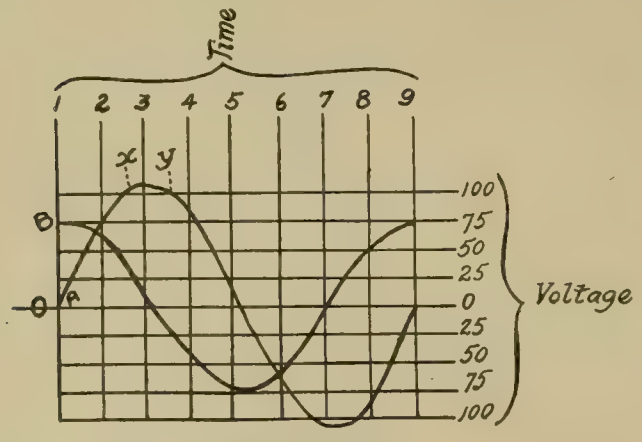

Fig. 3 represents the action diagrammatically. Line A represents the line voltage, B the reactance e.m.f. or e.m.f. of the coil. The part of the curves above O represent positive flow, while those parts below represent negative. When the applied e.m.f. (line voltage) is mounting the peak of the cycle (line A, Fig. 2) it creates a magnetic field in the core, and this field cutting the windings of the coil sets up a current in the opposite direction known as "counter e.m.f." or "reactance e.m.f.," represented by line B, Fig. 3. During the period 1 and 2, Fig. 3, the voltage A mounts rapidly, therefore it rapidly increases the magnetic field. From 2 to 4 it reaches its maximum and beings to descend, there being very little variation in the e.m.f. From X to Y it is practically constant, and reactance e.m.f. (line B) drops to zero at 3. From point 4 the applied e.m.f. begins rapidly to descend, and the field it has built collapses as rapidly as it has been set up, and in collapsing sets up an e.m.f., which again opposes the line voltage. It will thus readily be seen that from period 4 to 6 the applied e.m.f. has dropped from 75 volts to zero, reversed, and again mounted to 75 volts. At this time the magnetic field changes most rapidly, and the reactance e.m.f. is at its greatest, being at its peak, when the applied e.m.f. is at O, line 5. This reactance, or counter e.m.f., chokes back or opposes the applied e.m.f. (line voltage), and only the amount in which the applied e.m.f. (line voltage) is in excess of the reactance or counter e.m.f. can pass through the coil and reach the arc lamp circuit. The choke coil is highly efficient in the sense that it wastes but little energy. The reason transformers are preferred is that choke coils have a tendency to cause flaming at the arc.

I cannot quite agree with the last sentence. My own objection to choke coils has been, and still is, that there is a harsh, bluish tone present in every case I have seen where a choke coil was used.

A Fine Tool.

Mr. A. J. Smith, Cleveland, Ohio, was a caller at the office recently. Mr. Smith presented for examination, description and approval a film sprocket hole trimmer which he has invented and patented.

The editor of this department has so many things presented to him to which he cannot give his unqualified approval that this little device comes as a relief. It is a small tool in the form of a cutting plier, so made that broken sprocket holes may be instantly notched out, and notched out in the very best form, too. It is a tool which I would heartily recommend to all operators as well as to exchange managers, particularly to the latter. The tool will last almost indefinitely. The cutting tool is of case-hardened tool steel, and, inasmuch as it will only be used on celluloid, should last for years without even sharpening. There is practically nothing else about the tool to wear out. There is a gauge which just allows the cutter to extend to the inside edge of the sprocket hole.

In the illustration we see a piece of film with sprocket holes notched with this tool. Further comment is, I think, unnecessary, except to say it takes less than one second to trim a broken sprocket hole by the Smith method.

Light Ray Dope.

During the past week several excellent articles on light action have been received. I hope the writers will not feel offended at their not being published. I expect to start the series of experiments spoken of within a week, and fully expect to settle these questions for good and all.

New Local.

George T. Jones, Wilmington, North Carolina, says:

> We are organized in the city of Wilmington, N. C. Our local is 614 I. A., provisional charter. George T. Jones, president; R. D. Marshall, vice-president; A. R. Osborne, fin secy.; W. F. Buck, secy. and treas.; H. E. Jewell, recording secretary; R. R. Brown, business agent; T. W. Wood, sergeant at arms.

Success to you gentlemen. Organization is the order of the day, and you are wise in getting into the procession. May your shadow never grow less. But, my brothers, remember this, the mere act of organizing does not mean much. A union may be a splendid thing or it may be worse than nothing. Your organization will be what you yourselves make it. Above all things remember that the labor movement is presumed to be founded not in egotism and bigotry, but on the principles of justice as between man and man.

Suits Pending.

We are informed by the J. H. Genter Company, Inc., that the Genter Company and the owner of the Simpson patents have a number of suits pending against screen manufacturers, it being claimed that the Genter and Simpson patents on metallic screen surfaces are basic. The Genter Company has acquired the right to work under the Simpson patent, No. 890,101. Also the owner of the Simpson patent has started suit against the Vitalite Company, and has notified many others.

The Genter Company is now experimenting with a machine which will coat approximately 500 yards of goods in two hours, maximum width of 14 feet. They have contracted with a Boston firm for 5,000 running yards of goods, made in a special loom which will enable them to furnish a one-piece screen more than 18 feet wide.

Backs Up His Union.

W. Burnett, Newton, Iowa, says:

> Have been a constant reader of the department ever since it started, also have studied your last Handbook, which I cannot praise too highly. In addition to this, I am digging into the questions as well as I can. Have been operating nine years and am a member of the Des Moines local, and do my best to back up my union with perfect projection, so that neither it nor myself need be ashamed of the results I place on the screen

Now that is the kind of talk it does me good to hear. That is the kind of man it is worth while having in the union. He is in the union because he wants better salaries and better conditions, but he is willing to back up his union in its endeavor to get these things by delivering the goods on the screen. Shake, Brother Burnett! I would like to get hundreds of such statements as that.

Just Lined Up.

Joe Manley, Coffeyville, Kansas, says:

> The Coffeyville boys have just lined up with the I. A. Independence has a direct charter and as we are only fifteen miles away we went in with them. There are three moving picture theaters and one house playing vaudeville and pictures. Projection in Coffeyville, I think I may say, is excellent, but we all use A. C.

Brother Manley also offers the correct solution of "From This Neck of the Woods," January 9th issue. I am glad to know the Coffeyville boys are lined up. It seems to me I wrote International President Shay about Coffeyville wanting to organize not so long ago; I know it was either Coffeyville or a town near there.

Film Injury.

George W. Mitchell, Kansas City, Missouri, writes:

> In answer to question 63, January 30th issue, I noticed neither of the brothers mentioned an improved make of fire extinguisher or metal boxes to keep the films in when not in the machine. (Right you are, Brother Mitchell. I, myself, stand corrected for not noting that omission, though I do not think much of the fire extinguisher end of it.—Ed.) Here in the "Heart of America" these things are compulsory. I hope you "get me" on that "Heart of America" thing; that means Kansas City, Mo. Now may I ask a pertinent question? What is to be done about the Lubin two reel features. They generally are made up of very short pieces of film, necessitating an average of seventy resplices to the reel during and after their first run in a Powers 6A, which is in perfect condition. I claim these are the most poorly cemented films in the world, and hope you will suggest a remedy before I have a fire. In issue of January 30th, under caption, "Not the Machine's Fault," appears a letter concerning film injury. I enclose you a piece of first run film that ran on a Powers SixA for four and a half hours, or four times. On its fifth run the lower loop began to lose, and sounded as though it was riding the sprocket teeth. The operator, a first class man, tried to replace it while the machine was running, there being no look setter, and a stop of the show almost a crime in the eyes of the manager. He was unsuccessful and had to stop and re-thread. The other operator found the damage in rewinding. Now I surmise first: two sprocket holes broke out; film struck lower rollers and sprocket in such way as to abruptly turn the edge in the center of sprocket hole divisions and continued to fold it over and press it down. Second: on rewind two holes broken out; operator feeling film edge when rewinding and dragging to one side, film rubs on one side of reel and buckles over in weakest point and folding continues for some distance. What is your guess?

I have none, except that the incorrectness of your second guess is proven as follows: the trouble begins where a piece of film track ¼ inch long has been broken out and continues for a matter of 3½ feet, and then rights itself. Now if it has been done in the rewind the thing would have happened in the other direction, since the broken sprocket hole would have reached the rewind reel last. This fixes the seat of the trouble in the machine, but please don't ask me what did it. I don't know. The track is folded over right in the middle of the sprocket holes and pressed down flat for 3½ feet. I believe your first guess is just as good as any, and probably mighty near the truth. The Fairmount, Minn., trouble was the same thing, but it was only about 2½ inches long, and there was no fault in the film at that point, as far as I could see. As to the Lubin matter, I have just written that distinguished corporation again, calling their undivided attention to the desirability of fewer splices and better ones. I do not know what is to be done about it. That is up to the Lubin Company, but I certainly hope they will do something, and do it real soon too.

Later; the trouble is in process of remedy and soon will be entirely eliminated.

Film Cleaner.

G. W. Campbell, Westbrook, Maine, says:

Noticing in January 23d issue that J. V. Jensen, Los Gatos, Cal., wants information regarding film cleaners, I will say that I have used a "Mortimer Film Cleaner" for over one and a half years and find it very satisfactory. It cleans the film perfectly and is worth many times its cost of ten dollars. The strips used in cleaner can be used over and over, by washing in gasoline, which quickly evaporates leaving the pad as good as it ever was. Also they can be bought very cheaply. I would advise the use of this cleaner by all theaters not using first run, as it means better illumination of the picture, less rain and a most satisfactory projection. One thing, however, be careful and don't get too much tension on the cleaner, as some patches are not very strong.

In the name of the fraternity I thank you for your information concerning the Mortimer. It had the commendation of the department long, long ago.

Try Your Wits on This.

Operators are handling light every minute they work, and surely a man ought to have some knowledge of the force he is handling. Now let us see what some of you wise guys really know anyhow. The sun's rays are not so hot in the morning or in the afternoon as they are at noon. Kindly give me your explanation of this proposition, remembering that a correct reply will involve several things. In other words, it is not as easy as it looks.

His Hardest Problem.

Simon Arkin, New York City, says:

Replying to yours of the 15th I would say that the distance of the condenser from the arc does not depend on the focal length of the condenser, but on the amount of heat it is able to stand. This was one of the hardest problems I had to solve when I began to study the optical system of the projector. After careful investigation I determined, to my own satisfaction, that in the average case it would be good practice to locate the arc 3½ inches from the surface of the rear condenser, and as the lens is approximately 1 inch thick this would mean a distance of 4 inches from the arc to the optical center of the lens. The same rule applies to the average meniscus or bi-convex lens. My theory is as follows: At present we project pictures by means of three lenses, the first commonly called the back condenser, its function being to refract the diverging rays of the arc and pass them along to the second lens, commonly called the second condenser, in as nearly parallel rays as possible. The function of the second lens is to receive these rays from the first lens and converge them so they will come to a point at the optical center of the third lens, commonly called the objective. The function of the third or objective lens is to receive these rays from the second lens and pass them along in straight and continuous lines to the screen, therefore you see the objective lens does not refract or magnify the rays, but simply passes them along in straight lines. A ray from the top of the condenser strikes the top of the film, the center of the objective, and the bottom of the screen. A ray from the bottom of the condenser strikes the bottom of the film picture, the center of the objective and the top of the screen. The objectives used are composed of several lenses, but the point of convergence must be as near the center of the combination of the objective as possible. When the rays of light converge at a point outside the objective, say a few inches away from it, as shown in Mr. Griffiths' diagram, page 512, the result would be that some rays would reach the screen, others would go to the floor, ceiling, and walls with consequent loss of definition in the picture.

Friend Arkin then goes on to discuss Friend Griffiths' explanation of Neighbor Heise's case, but I think we won't go into that matter now. We are on the verge of the starting of some experiments which I hope are going to settle some things before many moons. As to Brother Arkin's theory, why that too will be settled, I think. Meanwhile, however, the theory is of very decided interest as applied to the objective, but I, personally, am not at all sure it is correct, although, at that, it may be.

Fire Extinguisher.

W. H. Brooks, Canton, Pennsylvania, sends in answers to questions 70 and 71, and says:

Speaking of fire danger in the operating room, many regulations and requirements have been made to prevent fire and to confine the fire after it starts in order to prevent further damage outside the operating room. I have never yet seen any adequate or effective means of trying to extinguish a fire, or get it under control, mentioned in the projection department. Is there no device available that will save the other reels in the room, or part of the reel which first ignites? I had a copy of your Handbook about a year ago, but loaned it to an operator friend, and I am glad to say he was so well pleased with it he has it yet, although many miles away. I heartily favor the idea of printing and binding the questions and answers. The thought that it might enable some near-operator to stuff knowledge for examination seems to be very far-fetched. If that is to be held as a valid objection to the publication of the questions and answers, then we must suspend the publication of nearly all educational works. In closing let me thank you for the many, many advantages I have found in the department.

When a film fire has once started and gotten into either magazine there is practically no method of extinguishing the fire and saving that portion of the reel, because the instant you open the magazine door, which you would have to do in order to apply an extinguisher, the whole thing would burst into flame, therefore the only thing to do is to leave the magazine door shut. It has often occurred to the editor there is a possibility of extinguishing fire in a magazine automatically by placing therein some chemical, which would generate carbonic (I think it is carbonic) gas when heat is applied.

Another means which is entirely possible, as well as quite practical so far as the upper magazine is concerned, would be to put a hopper on top of the magazine, with a slide between, which could be instantly removed by the operator in case of fire, the hopper to be of sufficient size to contain enough ordinary wheat flour to more than fill the magazine. In case of fire the operator would then yank the slide out, the flour would flow down around the burning film and that would settle it, because wheat flour will extinguish film fire, provided the film be buried in it. I do not believe a fire extinguisher is of any practical value. As to the other reels, they can be made absolutely safe by a film container with a flour receptacle above, so arranged that the melting of the fuses would bury the reels in flour, but there is not one manager in a thousand who would not rather take his chance than to arrange a thing of this kind, and the only other way I know of to make the film safe is either to have a thoroughly fireproof film receptacle, like the Gilmore receptacle which was illustrated and recommended by the department, or else get the reels outside when a fire starts.

An Argument.

Duluth, Minnesota, sends in a sample of film and says:

Please settle a little argument between my chief and myself as to enclosed film. "A" says it was damaged in our projector; "B" says the damage was done by the perforator. Which is right? We have all the pliers in the house hanging to our hair, and if you do not render a decision soon there won't be anything but fingers to set carbons with. Everything is union here, except the Rex and Lyric, and Duluth has nineteen picture houses.

The trouble began with the perforator, but, of course, under the conditions the sprocket holes for some distance beyond the perforator fault were injured by the projection machine. The operator is not to blame, except that if the fault showed up the first time through, he should have examined the film and removed the damaged portion.

An Argument.

F. F. Laymen, Henderson, Kentucky, says:

To settle an argument will you please inform me whether or not a 110 volt, 133 cycle, A. C. Fort Wayne compensarc could be on a 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C. line?

It would not—at least successfully. You could send the compensarc to the Fort Wayne Electric Works, Fort Wayne, Ind., and have it rewound for 60 cycle. If used as it is it will probably develop both heat and noise.

One Producer Wakes Up.

For years the projection department has been hammering at the manager and operator trying to show them where it was to their interest to take care of the films.

Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has at last done what every producer ought to do, viz., waked up to the importance of this proposition. He says in part:

> Some operators take a brand new, beautiful and expensive print, which has cost thousands of dollars to produce, and run it through a greasy, dirty projection machine until the film is covered with oil, grease and filth and dirty finger marks—practically spoiling it. That is not right, boys, and you know it. If you are guilty, just remember it is your own reputation you are blackening and spoiling, just as much as it is the expensive merchandise placed in your charge, and which you are paid money to handle properly. Don't blame your machine. If there is anything the matter with it; if it is in such condition that you cannot use a film without spoiling it, have the boss report the matter to his exchange. They will help you, even loaning you a machine, if necessary, while yours is being fixed. Something must be done and something is going to be done to remedy this condition. We don't care who the guilty man is, he will have to change his habits in this respect. Take pride in showing clean, clear beautiful pictures on the screen. Take pride in your machine. Keep it bright and shining, and free from too much oil and grease. This will not only help to popularize your house, but it will help you, too, because you cannot prosper unless your house does. Check up on yourself. Look your machine over and get it in first-class condition right now. Remember that films are to be used in other houses when you get through with them. If you receive a film in dirty condition have your house manager report this to the exchange.

And so Friend Laemmle goes on at considerable length, saying things I have been saying for five years. Well, Brother Laemmle is welcome to steal my thunder on this particular proposition as much as he wants to, but while I heartily endorse every word he has said, which, of course, won't apply to those who are not guilty, still I would recommend that he go further than this and land on the exchange manager also, who all too often sends out reels of film to the operator in damnable condition. This is a strong word, but it is the fact just the same. The operator all too often receives them covered with oil, dirt, and even with splices pinned together with a paper clip or a common pin. The operators, or a good many of them, can read Mr. Laemmle's words and apply them with vast profit, but they are not to blame for everything; not by a long jump. If Friend Laemmle will apply his words also to the exchange manager we are with him to a hard boiled finish, and will back up everything he does. The condition of films is, as we have said time after time, a crying shame; an outrage on the producer and on the public, and the worst of it is there is no real excuse for it. Just as Mr. Laemmle says, it is due to CRASS STUPIDITY, RANK CARELESSNESS, LAZINESS AND IGNORANCE, BOTH in the operating room and in the FILM EXCHANGE. Don't forget that last—in the film exchange. All this abuse can be stopped quickly if all the producers come out, as Mr. Laemmle has done, and back up vigorously the efforts this department has been making for more than five years. But the real place to start something is at the exchange. Wake Mr. Exchange Manager up and get him to check up his films more carefully and raise merry cain with the theater manager and operator who return them in bad condition. The oil proposition is bad, and it is due solely and entirely to rank stupidity or carelessness in oiling the projector. If I have told operators once I have told them a thousand times that one drop of oil is all that is necessary on any moving picture machine bearing. More than that quantity simply runs off or is thrown off by centrifugal force, and all too often gets on the film.

My compliments Mr. Laemmle, I hope other producers will do likewise and do it in equally vigorous language, incorporating, however, a red—no—a white-hot roast on exchange managers, who are just as derelict in their duty as the operator.

Carbon Doctor.

W. J. Montgomery, Philadelphia, Pennsylavania, says:

> Have just finished thorough test in the matter of doctoring carbons, and the results will certainly be beneficial to any operator. All I ask is that you give same a fair trial. On page 204 of the Handbook this matter has been treated to some extent, but this is one of my own tricks and can be accomplished in fifteen seconds. With a pair of pliers nip the end of the carbon quickly, without breaking off too much, and, using a moderately coarse file, make a beveled point and place same in the lamp with the beveled point toward the condensers. Strike the arc and allow it to burn long enough to heat thoroughly, pull the switch and let the carbons cool about one minute. Then strike the arc and I think you will then have the dope just as about as good as I have. By-the-way, this treatment is only used on the top carbon, and works perfectly on a. c. Have never tried it on d. c., though see no reason why it would not work just as well. I have been largely benefited by reading the World, and believe we all ought to pass things of this kind along to our brothers. The article on knowledge tightwads, published recently, was one of the best I have read for some time, and say, I bet those guys who have been shouting about the Handbook and other educational works have any number of books for reference, but just do not want to see anyone else get along.

As to the carbon matter, why I used to do that myself when I was operating. What the brother means is to file a bevel on the point of a new carbon of about the same area as the regular crater. Its effect is to help the crater to form quickly. The brother is perfectly right, and the thing works equally as well with a. c. or d. c. Much obliged to you for bringing the matter up; it has not been spoken of for a long, long time, and will doubtless be of benefit to thousands of the younger men. You hit the truth pretty squarely on the head in your last sentence.

Williams Answered.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, says:

> In reply to Friend Williams' remarks the article in question was not a treatise on photography, but simply an explanation as to how the image of a picture on the screen happens to be projected on a piece of transparent film placed in the aperture of the idle projector. The remarks of Mr. Williams concerning the speed of the lens being in propotion to the size of the opening in the diaphragm are perfectly correct, but I fail to see where he has disproven the explanation I gave. If I had claimed the point of focus to be in the center of the lens where the diaphragm has its action (Wrong, Brother Griffiths, the shutter of a camera is in front of the lens.—Ed.) all right, but inasmuch as the point of focus of the lens is in front and outside the lens, the ray entering would be a diverging beam, and the closing of the diaphragm would cut off the outer rays and bring the center of the image to a sharper definition, which is, I believe, the effect obtained by a small aperture in the diaphragm. My knowledge of photography is nil. Possibly, also, Williams can give a clearer explanation than I did of how the image in the film is projected back from the screen. Also if he will look up subsequent articles on the subject he will find that I consider a lens to be a vastly improved pin hole in the respect that it facilitates the passage of a greater quantity of light.

I think I will keep out of this particular argument because I do not know myself who is right or wrong.

He Has Been Listening.

D. P. Carpenter, Starke, Florida, writes:

> This is my first break into the projection department, but it is not because I have not had anything to write; I have just been sitting back and listening to other fellows. We have one show here. The Hopson, vaudeville (sometimes) and pictures. The machine is an Edison Model B, a year and a half old. Last month I installed a new cam and star but cannot seem to get them adjusted right. If I move the star up to where there is but little play between it and the cam there is a fearful knocking noise, and if I loosen it the picture jumps all over the screen end of the house. Verily I am worried. Have tried everything I can think of but nothing seems to work. Yes, I have a Handbook; but in this particular instance it don't seem to get me out of my trouble, though it has saved me oodles of time and money in others. The current here is 220, and believe me it takes some resistance. It costs us fifty cents per hour for current. Would it be any cheaper to put in a meter and get an economizer? The department has been more help than a little to me. I get so many good ideas out of it, and as the Handbook it is about worn out from constant use. Both the manager and myself are continually consulting it. Next time I buy one I want it bound in steel.

If you have A. C. you should, under ordinary circumstances, put in an economizer, but if you mean you are paying a flat rate of fifty cents per hour, and that if you put in an economizer you will have to put it on a meter, why that is something else again, and I believe I would prefer sticking to the flat rate, because seven dollars a week is not so very high. As to the machine trouble, why I guess you have got my angora there. Sounds to me like the cam pin is hitting the bottom star slots when you tighten up. Possibly you have got hold of some dupe parts (parts not made by the machine manufacturer) which are improperly constructed. I assume that your cam and star shafts are in line and the bushings that carry these shafts are in good shape, this being true, the only other reason I can see for such a trouble would be as above set forth. Possibly if the star is not too hard you might be able, with a small, round file, working very carefully, to file a little out of the bottom of the slots and get the thing to work all right. Anyhow that is the only suggestion I can make, other than the ordering of parts directly from the Edison Company, which is something I would by all means advise exhibitors to do, unless the supply dealer is willing to absolutely guarantee the supplies he sells to be made by the machine manufacturer.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

WHERE'S MY HUSBAND (MinA), March 11.—Harry La Pearl is featured in this one-reel farce, that exposes the failings of a too susceptible married man. The flirtatious female next door gets him into no end of trouble, which comes to a grand climax when his wife charges upon an entire cabaret with a broom and sweeps everything before her. The necessary speed is maintained throughout. Excellent photography is a feature of the film.

SAVED FROM THE VAMPIRE (Biograph), March 15.—The rural drama, with its simple village maiden, bucolic hero, and polished city villain, is cleverly burlesqued in "Saved from the Vampire." The efforts of the gentlemanly scoundrel to abduct the daughter of the horny-handed son of toil, result in a highly-seasoned melodrama, that serves a double purpose by furnishing its own comedy.

LOVE AND TROUBLE (Essanay), March 15.—Wallace Berry gives a genuinely funny characterization of a housemaid from Sweden, in this film. The girl's adventures at a swell garden party, to which her beau also goes, are very amusing. A bicycle race, at the finish of the film, is full of comic excitement.

PATSY AMONG THE SMUGGLERS, Patsy Bolivar Series, No. 12 (Lubin), March 15.—Officer Bolivar, as Patsy is now known, endeavors to capture a band of smugglers, is well thrashed and then shot in the leg. Patsy's troubles, however, are always a source of amusement, and followers of the Bolivar films will find this instalment fully up to its predecessors. Clarence Jay Elmer still has the title role.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 21, 1915 (Selig), March 15.—A spirited barge race between co-eds of the University of California, opens this week's News Pictorial. New Jersey convicts, under a single guard, building roads; Miss Blanche Payson, a woman police officer of San Francisco, and the Boston Red Socks starting for Hot Springs, are among the other live topics shown.

MR. JARR BRINGS HOME A TURKEY (Vitagraph), March 15.—The Jarr Family Series, No. 2.—Mr. Jarr wins a turkey, which turns out to be a very queer bird, in this number of the Jarr Family chronicle. The troubles that always accompany house cleaning, a visit from his wife's mother, and his usual portion of domestic misunderstandings, are thrown in for generous measure. Harry Davenport Jarr and Rose Tapley Jarr are making the title roles more unctious with each new reel. Audry Berry and Paul Kelly, the Jarr juveniles, and Ethel Lloyd, the family mother-in-law, demonstrate their right to belong to this distinguished household.

HER COUNTRY COUSIN (Edison), March 16.—The Edison comic trio, Lou Gorey, William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman, have each a congenial part in this one-reel comedy. The title explains the plot. Housman is the cousin. His endeavors to become a city chap, aided by his cousin—now the wife of a cranky Harlemite—furnish many laughable situations.

WHEN THE FATES SPIN (Essanay), March 16.—An aged man relates his love story while seated at his fireside, in this one-reel drama. The action is carried back to the time of the frilled shirt and the bell-topped hat, a southern girl being the heroine. The story-teller is a northerner, and political differences separate the lovers; but, in the end, the Fates are kind. The film contains picturesque and entertaining scenes.

HAM AT THE GARBAGE GENTLEMEN'S BALL (Kalem), March 16.—"Rough house" reigns from the start to the finish of this "Ham" one-reel farce. Most of the doings of "Ham" and "Bud" are laughable and without offense. For one brief moment, however, the star has allowed himself to introduce a bit of business which any person with the slightest claim to good breeding will resent. It should be cut out immediately.

HERE COMES THE BRIDE (Lubin), March 16.—"Lend Me Your Wife" has furnished the plots for several comedies on the spoken stage. It is the foundation of "Here Comes the Bride," but the author of this photo comedy has given so many new twists to the old theme and handled them so skillfully, that the subject has all the freshness of an original piece of writing. The climax, with the four brides on the scene, is the very essence of good comedy. Joseph Kaufman and Ethel Clayton make easy work of their share in the comic complications.

SAGE-BRUSH TOM (Selig), March 16.—Tom falls in love with a moving picture actress, goes to the ranch where her company is making a western film, and is persuaded to do the "Quo Vadis" act—and throw the bull. The five minutes of excitement contributed by Tom Mix and a long-horned Texas steer, are of a most realistic nature.

THE ANIMATED GROUCH CHASER (Edison), March 17.—A restaurant customer is put in a good humor by gazing at a set of animated cartoons. The one showing the bald-headed man and the bottle of hair tonic, is a scream. Half reel.

SEEN THROUGH THE MAKE-UP (Edison), March 17.—An amusing half-reel comedy on the same film with "The Animated Grouch Chaser." A man advertises for a wife, and discovers that a woman can be pretty and useful at the same time—contrary to his firm belief. Sally Crute plays the girl who owns the pretty face.

THE FABLE OF "THE GALUMPTIOUS GIRL" (Essanay), March 17.—Another of George Ade's comic broadsides at the present craze for "On With the Dance!" With his customary penetration, George has discovered that not only has the "hopping habit" hit the rural districts, but, being born in the country need not keep any American girl from becoming the wife of a city millionaire—if she have the push and the brains of his heroine. Ruth Stonehouse is the lady of the fable.

THE PUNY SOUL OF PETER RAND (Selig), March 17.—There is a page from the Book of Life in this one-reel photoplay. The author has set down certain facts about stage folk, and the result is a drab bit of drama, that has a vaudeville actor as its principal character. The spectator sees him, weak, shiftless, almost a failure in his profession, but, returning home and working cheerfully as a drudge in a restaurant kitchen to aid his mother after she has been stricken blind. At her death he goes back to his old life.

POISONED (Vitagraph), March 17.—It's Wally Van's wedding that is referred to, but "Cutey" gets the girl before the finish of the reel, although he runs off to Chicago to play a vaudeville date and nearly loses her to a big sixfooter, with a large bankroll. However, as Wally gets one thousand dollars a week from the vaudeville manager, he has something of a roll himself. Although handicapped by a wooden leg he leads the six-footer a lively race, and comes under the wire an easy winner. Good fun all through. Nitra Frazer is the bride.

A HORSE OF ANOTHER COLOR (Essanay), March 18.—This western comedy is full of "horseplay" of the thoroughbred brand. The four-footed actors in the reel furnish a large portion of the laughs, and send the fun along at a lively pace. Three country "gents," a lady from the city, and the lady's husband, are the two-footed characters. This film is a "sure winner" of the hilarity stakes.

IN THE PARK (Essanay), March 18.—The latest one-reel Charlie Chaplin release. Many of its moments are made irresistibly comic by Chaplin's antics; at all times the fun is amusing. For one brief moment, Mr. Chaplin offends good taste. With his uncommon comic gift—a gift as distinct and as valuable as that possessed by the late John Sleeper Clark—he does not need to resort to coarseness of any description.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 22, 1915 (Selig), March 18.—Views of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich at Newport News, the Boston Braves at Macon, Ga., the Croton Dam Spillway, Blackfeet Indians putting money in a San Francisco bank, Grace Darling in Gatun, and the latest war pictures from East Prussia, show the live news character of No. 22.

THE BATTLE OF FRENCHMAN'S RUN (Vitagraph), March 18.—Starting in the lumber region, with snow and ice in abundance, this one-reel comedy introduces a wealthy lumberman's family at home. It next shows them in New York, surrounded by fashionable folk, the daughter receiving the attentions of a pseudo-nobleman. A comic duel with broadaxes, between the daughter's backwood's lover and the badly-frightened impostor, brings matter to a merry finish. Harry Carey and Chas H. West are important members of the cast.

HIS DESPERATE DEED (Biograph), March 18.—The "mother motive" is handled with unforced pathos and fine dramatic effect in this one-reel photoplay of the West. The hero's mother is desperately ill and the young fellow, while going afoot for a doctor, stops a mail-carrier and forces him, at the point of the pistol, to give up his horse. The theft of the hero's cattle, and a sympathetic love interest, give vigor and picturesque detail to the film.

SEEKERS AFTER ROMANCE (Biograph), March 19.—A romantic waitress, two handsome surveyors and an unconventional young woman who visits the camp of the men in search of a husband, are the characters in this one-reel comedy. The doings of these four persons have little relation to fact, but the love interest predominates the action and is brought to a triumphant conclusion for both couples, so, the seekers after romance in an audience will be delighted.

ONE LAW BREAKER (Lubin), March 19.—A man is unjustly convicted of a crime; on his release from prison he determines to avenge his wrongs. His little girl has been befriended by a wealthy woman; a chance meeting with the child just as he is about to commit a crime, gives him a new start in life. The heart interest is well sustained throughout. Velma Whitman, George Routh and Melvin Mayo portray the important parts.

WHY BILLINGS WAS LATE (Selig), March 19.—Billings' excuse for his tardiness is one of the best and also one that is very frequently used—he was waiting for his wife to dress. While Mr. B. sits impatiently in the hall, Mrs. B. calmly tries on one frock after another, then is equally deliberate in her choice of a hat. The moral of this comedy is, possibly: allow your wife only one dress and the same number of hats. (One reel.)

THE CAPITULATION OF THE MAJOR (Vitagraph), March 19.—Drawn upon somewhat antique lines, this one-reel comedy is a strong reminder of the days when a guardian was wont to fill the soul of his female charge with awe. However, with the excellent comedy methods of Lillian Walker, Jay Dwiggins, Garry McGarey and Frank Currier, the film proves quite entertaining.

WHEN THE TIDE TURNED (Biograph), March 20.—A dream drama, in which a young married man out of work is helped by an old college chum. After the young fellow's future seems secure, he dozes off and dreams that his new situation brings all manner of ill-luck upon him. A happy awakening, and a pretty domestic picture—the college chum being introduced to his friend's wife and new baby—bring the film to a finish. A wholesome, well acted little drama. Iva Christy and Isabel Rea have the leading roles.

FOR THE MAN SHE LOVED (Edison), March 20.—Mabel Trunnelle has the part of the bookkeeper heroine in this one-reel drama, and proves a resourceful young woman, capturing a thief and her employer's heart at the same time. The story is stirring and reasonably plausible; and, after the almost continuous shifting of the camera at the start, the situations take a firm hold upon the attention. Edward Earle, Guy T. Evans, and Frank A. McGlynn are in the cast.

THE WESTERN WAY (Essanay), March 20.—Broncho Billy, after robbing an express office and being wounded by a posse, is befriended by a man who committed a crime in his younger days. He is now happily married and the father of a little girl. Broncho Billy becomes very fond of the child, and when the officer appears on the scene to arrest his benefactor takes the other man's place. The reel is on a par with Broncho Billy's other heroic exploits, both in acting and point of interest.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS OF '62 (Nineteenth of "The Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), March 20.—In place of taking the center of the stage, the intrepid Helen becomes a passive listener while a one-armed flagman, a veteran of the Civil War, relates the exploits of Anderson's Raiders, when they captured a Confederate train and were pursued through the enemy's line by a trainload of rebels. The running fight from the "wood-burners" and the flatcars is full of excitement, and an audience will share Helen's breathless interest in the stirring events.

ON THE ROAD TO RENO (Lubin), March 20.—On the same reel with "The Prize Baby." A husband and wife quarrel, determine to separate, and start for Reno on the same train. With the aid of one of those improbable but amusing tricks of fate, the husband crawls into his wife's berth by mistake and calmly goes to sleep. The lady awakens to find, as she imagines in great horror, a strange man at her side. Her screams bring about the comic denouement and a reconciliation. Arthur V. Johnson is the husband and Lottie Briscoe the wife.

THE PRIZE BABY (Lubin), March 20.—A stranded theatrical company hit upon a scheme to get its members out of town. A local baby show is announced, with a prize of $100 for the best-developed infant. The fat boy of the company is dressed in baby clothes and wheeled to the show. He is given the prize, but an outbreak of smallpox threatens to keep him a prisoner. He tries to run away, and is lugged off to jail, where he knocks out all of the local force. A half-reel farce that will find favor with many patrons of the moving picture theater. "Babe" Hardy is the prize infant.

JACK'S PAL (Selig), March. 20—Jack, the animal trainer, loses his position at the Zoo, joins the local fire department and, when a fire threatens to destroy his old charges, goes into their cages and drags them to safety. One of the closing scenes, where Jack is given his old position again and is shown petting a leopard while the animal returns his caresses, will delight the children.

General Film Company Specials.

THE MASTER MUMMER (Edison), March 15.—Mary Fuller is seen as the Princess Isobel, the titled heroine of this three-part screen version of E. Phillips Oppenheim's well-known novel. The story of the Princess of Waldenburg, who was raised among the artists and writers of London, has been converted into a film romance, with very satisfactory results. Miss Fuller and her associates all give capital impersonations.

UNFAITHFUL TO HIS TRUST (Kalem), March 15.—A realistic run on the bank, with a display of real (not stage) money that will go a long way toward restoring confidence in the financial situation, is the big feature of this Kalem two-part drama. A district attorney who is forced to prosecute the father of the woman he loves, is the central figure of the story. After the excitement of the bank-wrecking, the action shifts to a hunting-lodge in the South. Here the lovers meet, and, the girl having done serious damage to the gentleman's heart, accidently shoots him in the arm. The always insisted-upon "happy ending" ensues. James B. Ross, Alice Joyce, Guy Coombs and Jerry Austin play with excellent effect.

THE FORK IN THE ROAD (Selig), March 15.—A two-part drama of the time when romance was in full flower and the great Elizabethans were giving the fruits of their genius to the world. A comely youth, the drudge in a small inn, sets out to seek his fortune. Coming to the fork of the road, the young man pauses to rest, and falls asleep. In imagination, he takes both roads, but, as neither road leads to happiness, upon waking up he goes back to the inn and marries the pretty daughter of mine host. The story is fairly entertaining, and the atmosphere of that ancient period when tab jackets and peaked caps were "the only wear," is preserved with considerable skill. Leo Pierson and Bessie Eyton have the leading roles.

AFTER THE STORM (Biograph), March 16.—Louise Vale, Alan Hale, Jack Drumeir, Franklin Ritchie and Kate Bruce, give this two-part photoplay the benefit of sympathetic and well-considered interpretation. Miss Vale, especially, finds the character she portrays and her own personality in perfect harmony. The love story of the demure Quaker maiden and her brave battle with the realities of life, will win the commendation of an audience that cares to see the truth and beauty of existence reflected upon the screen.

FROM HEADQUARTERS (Vitagraph), March 16.—This powerful and history-making drama, which is destined to receive nothing but unstinted praise, was reviewed on page 1150 in the issue of Feb. 20th.

THE TRAP DOOR (Kalem), March 17.—Episode No. 8 of "The Girl Detective" Series.—The celerity with which this two-part instalment piles up the thrills, makes the adventures in episode No. 8 seem like a one-reeler. A jewelry store robbery, a female crook of great personal attraction, a mysterious room, a rising flood, a swarm of rats, and the trap door of the tile, all tend to keep the interest at fever heat. Lovers of the detective drama will find this film a treat. Cleo Ridgley is now giving an excellent account of herself in the title role.

A TRAGEDY OF THE HILLS (Lubin), March 17.—A drama of a southern feud, this two-reel romance follows along familiar lines. There is strength and compelling interest in every moment of its action, nevertheless. Many dramatists have told the story of the man who seeks to be an instrument of vengeance and finds he has brought the harm upon his own child. Victor Hugo made use of it in "Le Roi S'Amuse," and "The Gladiator," played by Salvini, was based upon the same theme. Joseph W. Smiley is the avenging father in the present case. He makes every point register.

THE ONLY WAY (Lubin), March 18.—A drama of to-day, strong in motive and moving to the end without relaxing its grip, it tells of an attempt against a woman's honor and the means her husband took to shield her good name. The story is handled along conventional lines, but skill and liberality in the filming of this three-part drama results in a powerful and thoroughly satisfactory photoplay. John E. Ince, Walter Law, Francis Joyner and Rosetta Brice, have the leading parts.

IN THE SHADOW OF DEATH (Edison), March 19.—Founded on a novel of the Gaborieau school, this three-part film drama by Mary Imlay Taylor is a highly sensational narrative told with commendable restraint. The scenes are laid in Paris within the last decade, a false accusation of murder and theft against a young Englishman being the main incident. A large number of characters and frequent change of scenes are all handled deftly. Edward Earle, Wm. H. West, Bert Delaney, George Wright and Bessie Learn are the principals.

THE CONFLICT (Essanay), March 19.—Another hypodermic drama, with the villain restorting to frequent jabs of the needle, but without a big "punch" at the finish. When the wealthy villain finds that the hero has won the heroine away from him, he endeavors to get even by entangling his hoped-for father-in-law with one of his discarded "lady friends." As there is no big moment in the action, the result is a commonplace drama that leaves the spectator unmoved. In two parts. Richard C. Travers, Sidney Ainsworth, Ruth Stonehouse and Lillian Drew are in the cast.

THE MILLIONAIRE HUNDRED DOLLAR BILL (Vitagraph), March 20. This picture has been reviewed by George Blaisdell on page 841 in the issue of February 6.

Mutual Film Corporation.

LOVE IN ARMOR (Keystone), March 11.—This is an exceptionally good farce comedy with Max Davidson in the lead. As is usual in pictures of the farce comedy order, it is not always the story that counts. What happens when Baron Von Haussenfefer after gaining entre to the home of the young woman of his choice, is caught stealing her diamond necklace, and is set upon by the girl's real sweetheart, who is hiding in a suit of armor, is well worth the seeing.

ONLY A TRAMP (Reliance), March 19.—An excellent one-reel drama in which a tramp, finding employment at a country inn, prevents an unscrupulous drummer from carrying out his plan of eloping with a pretty young girl of the village. Playing the role of the girl is Mariam Cooper.

ETHEL'S DOG-GONE LUCK (Komic), March 21.—No. 19 of the "Bill" Series.—Ethel buys a stolen dog; Bill is employed by its owner to trace it. Another dog comes into the story and there are amusing plot complications. This scores another success for this comedy series.

THE FORGED TESTAMENT (Majestic), March 21.—Some excellent action takes place in this two-reeler, in which Charles Cleary is easily the lead. The supporting cast consists of Cora Drew, Olga Gray and Signe Auen. The story is not a pleasant one, but not impossible as regards reality. The man Mawby marries widow Halloway for her money, and at her death, which is hastened by his unkindness and extravagance, he forges the signature of his late wife to a will which bequeaths everything to him. The forgery is discovered in time to prevent his gaining possession of the fortune. George Nicholls has directed the picture.

WHEN THE FIRE BELL RANG (Beauty), March 23.—Made by Frank Cooley, and featuring Irving Cummings and Virginia Kirtley, this is a pleasant comedy. It is not especially startling, but just good fun. It would therefore please most audiences.

A GAME OF THRILLS (Reliance), March 22.—Jack longs for a real romance and his club friends employ an actress to help make one for him. She pretends to be a refugee and asks him to hide her. He does so, but the club men impersonate Russian police and leave both of them bound in a deserted house. The fire scene was the real thing and Jack proves himself a hero. This makes a pleasing romantic offering.

THE GREASER (Majestic), March 23.—A vividly pictured western number, containing glimpses of fine sunny stretches of mountains and plain. R. A. Walsh plays the greaser, who substitutes himself for the hero and is killed—for the sake of the girl. A strong western number.

IN THE HEART OF THE WOODS (American), March 24.—This is a one-reel production of which the American Film Co. may be proud. In it Vivian Rich gives evidence at last that she is able to act. We do not know who made the production, but whoever did make it, knows something about the making of a moving picture. It is based on a simple story of heart interest, and Vivian Rich plays the part of the unsophisticated daughter of a woodman. David Lythgoe plays opposite her, and others of the cast are Harry Von Meter, Louis Lester and K. Morrison.

THE BLACK SHEEP (Reliance), March 24.—The opening scenes, picturing the quarrel between father and son, are natural and convincing, but the latter scenes do not hold up in interest. The recognition scene, toward the close, was not sufficiently dramatic and lacked real feeling. This makes only a fair offering.

THE SPIRIT OF UPLIFT (Thanhouser), March 28.—Jim impersonates the dead son of a blind man and plans to rob him of his money. But there is a girl in the case and he weakens. When a member of the gang shows up he saves the old man from being robbed, confesses his deception and is forgiven. The plot material is familiar and obvious, but quite well handled, though the latter scenes were rather hurried.

A CORNER IN BABIES (Royal), April 3.—A one-reel domestic story, in which two pairs of twin babies figure. The babies are very cute and assure the film of considerable interest. The plot is not very strong.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

THE SLAVE GIRL (Reliance), March 20.—The observer feels at once in this two-reel number that it has a story to tell. It carries the interest from the commencement to the end, and while the plot material is not entirely new it is not developed in an obvious way. Teddy Simpson is the white girl, sold into slavery by Sheldon, the man who found her as a baby after an Indian massacre. She is bought by a proud Southern family. The son, just returned from college, is attracted by her odd beauty. This attraction alarms the parents and they plan to sell the girl again, when Sheldon's housekeeper reveals the truth about her origin. The son saves the girl when she is on the auction block. Well-constructed and pleasing.

ANCESTRY (American), March 22.—A very beautiful setting has been given a not very strong story in this two-reel production. The scene of the story is in Italy; and indeed a very acceptable substitute for Italian scenery has been found in presumably the hills, and on the sea coast of Southern California. Winnifred Greenwood, Charlotte Burton, Ed Coxen and George Field play the prominent roles of the play. Henry Otto is the producer.

GUSSLE'S DAY OF REST (Keystone), March 29.—This two-reel Keystone is what one might vulgarly term a "riot." Syd Chaplin and his assistants do their "worst," and the result is one of the funniest films of the farce comedy class that one could ever see. It has a lot of the same old tricks in it, but it has also a great deal that is original. To attempt to describe it in short space would be out of the question.

THE MAGNET OF DESTRUCTION (Thanhouser), March 30.— A two-reel story, written by Phillip Lonergan, in which the villain of anarchistic tendencies tries to drop pig iron from an electric magnet on a party of millionaires. The girl, in love with one of the men below, upsets the villain's plans. The main situation in this is led up to in a somewhat conventional way, but the story is a well-rounded one and is well up to the average in interest. The closing scenes were quite exciting and possess considerable suspense.

SHORTY AMONG THE CANNIBALS (Broncho), March 31.—Another diverting two-reel number, featuring Jack Hamilton in his well-known cowboy part. Shorty is first discovered absorbed in reading "Robinson Crusoe." He falls asleep near the chuck wagon and has a vivid dream. In this he becomes a stowaway on a pirate vessel bound for the South Seas. He puts a mouse in the captain's soup and sets the ship on fire, making himself such a general nuisance that he finds it advisable to leave suddenly on a small boat. He lands on a desert island, a la Crusoe, and has thrilling adventures among the cannibals. This has a laugh in it for almost anyone and makes good burlesque adventure.

THE FAKIR (Domino), April 1.—A two-reel number, featuring Walter Edwards and Rhea Mitchell. He appears first as a traveling hypnotist and she as his unwilling subject. She flees and again comes in contact with him at a social function when he is posing as a Hindu fakir. He forces her to rob the house, but is shot by a policeman and the girl released from his spell. In spite of jerky construction and lack of suspense in several places where it might have been obtained, this is above the average production of this kind. The story is quite absorbing in its way and well staged throughout. The close is dramatic.

THE SPIRIT OF THE BELL (Kaybee), April 2.—A finely pictured, two-reel story of Mission days. It contains many picturesque scenes and much interesting action, suffering only from its general similarity to former Mission day films. Enid Markey and Charles Ray play the leads and Jack Nelson is the villain. The chief action consists in fighting between the federals and rebels, but the plot hinges upon the theft of the bell and the girl's sacrifice of herself to save it from destruction. In this she is successful, but the villain is foiled later by the girl's rescue. The photography and settings are excellent.

ON THE NIGHT STAGE (New York Motion Picture Corp.), April.—This is an excellent five-reel number of the Mutual Masterpieces. In it Robert Edeson plays the role of the "Sky Pilot." He is supported by Reah Mitchell in the feminine lead, Hershal Mayhall as "Handsome Jack" Malone and William S. Hart as "Texas." The scenario was made by Thomas H. Ince and C. G. Sullivan, and the production was directed by Thomas H. Ince. The New York Motion Picture Corporation (Kessell and Baumann) present the production, of which they may be justly proud. The type chosen for the role of "Texas" is not exactly satisfactory. A more red-blooded, devil-may-care type might have made a stronger impression. Robert Edeson will delight audiences, especially where he wipes up the floor of the dance hall with "Texas" and his associates.

THE OUTCAST (Reliance), April.—The sympathetic acting of Mae Marsh and Robert Harron and the accurate handling of a court scene when a young woman is being tried for murder, are the outstanding features of this four-part drama of the underworld, written by Thomas Nelson Page and produced for the Reliance Company by John B. O'Brien. The picture is in four reels, strong dramatically and very well acted. Possibly too much space is given to a story within a story, but rehearsal of events that explain the relationship of the characters; but this is unimportant in view of the sustained interest of the picture. It will make a popular offering.

The Pathe Exchange

PATHE NEWS, NO. 20, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), March 15.—Winter sports in Switzerland, the Black troops ready for the front and a comic cartoon by J. M. Bray are interesting items of this issue of the news, along with various scenes from the battle front.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 21, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), March 22.—One of the most attractive items of this issue is the review of the Italian army by the King of Italy. Deep field perspectives with troops and artillery moving in orderly fashion across them are characteristic of this particular subject. Some interesting pictures of the Osage tribe of Indians are shown, and also a good cartoon by J. M. Bray, entitled "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Torpedo."

IMA SIMP DETECTIVE (Pathe Exc.), March.—A very good number of the "Ima Simp" series. Simp's adventures as a detective on the trail of an eloping couple are alive with comic incidents.

A FAMOUS GERMAN RESORT, WIESBADEN (Pathe Exc.), April.—This is an intensely attractive part reel, showing the principal points of interest in Wiesbaden, including the Kurhaus, the Royal Opera House, the "Warm Pond" park and the Greek church.

TOO MUCH BULL (Pathe Exc.), April.—Octavia Handworth figures as the prima donna of a road company in this picture, which is on the same reel with "Monkey Intelligence." The comedians of the company invented a farm to enjoy themselves with hunting, get into the false body of a bull in order to get nearer the game, and some funny incidents follow.

MONKEY INTELLIGENCE (Pathe Exc.), April.—On the same reel with the foregoing, and intensely interesting is this study of our attributed antecedents. The gibbon, an ape inhabiting the East Indies and Southern Asia, and the orang-outang, a native of Borneo and Sumatra, are the types shown in this film.

A VISIT TO SPAIN ON THE GULF OF ROSAS (Pathe Exc.), April.—A remarkably well-photographed series of scenes along the Gulf of Rosas, showing quaint old towns, and ruins of mediaeval interest. This subject is on the same reel with "The Fjords and Mountains of Norway."

THE FJORDS AND MOUNTAINS OF NORWAY (Pathe Exc.), April.—On the same reel with the foregoing and equal, if not surpassing, it in beauty, and possessing the remarkable photographic quality.

United Film Service.

MARRIED IN DISGUISE, March 21.—A western farce comedy featuring Dot Farley. The hero dresses in the guise of the villain and waylays the girl, brings her to the clergyman, and succeeds in getting the marriage ceremony performed. Later, after the girl has had an hysterical time of it, the secret is divulged to her, much to her joy.

THE HAUNTING EYE (Premier), April.—This is a drama which, although it is not exactly convincing in many respects, for instance, the location of the owner of the eye which peers through the doors of a windmill in a picture on the wall of the house where they are living, is very entertaining, nevertheless. The story is of a man and his daughter in the employ of the government, and who are tracked by an east side gangster paid by enemies of the man. The gangster, playing a double role, causes the girl to fall in love with him. Later she falls into an underground passage in time to save her father from being stabbed to death.

A WOMAN'S WAY (Luna), April.—This is rather a forceful comedy in which the action is rather strenuous at times. The story has been developed along farcical lines and is quite laughable. Two men go fishing, and the comedy of the picture is gotten out of the attitude of the wife of one of them toward her drenched and bedraggled husband, after she has been obliged to put the stove pipes up herself, and he has met with a mishap on his fishing expedition. A burglar settles the dispute. Dot Farley plays the feminine lead.

FOR A THOUSAND DOLLARS (Premier), April.—A western subject in which a girl falls in love with a man for whom a reward of a thousand dollars is offered. The climax of the story regulates affairs satisfactorily.

A MAN OF THE HILLS (Premier), April 4.—A western story that has moderate merits. Fred Church plays the masculine lead acceptably. The story is of a young man who, to save the honor of his father-in-law, shoulders the blame of a discrepancy in the accounts of the express office run by the father-in-law. Later he is exonerated, through the discovery of the lost bank notes under the floor of the building, where they had accidentally fallen.

LOVE'S LUNACY (Starlight), April.—Rather a good comedy in which two men in an endeavor to marry the same girl, suffer, and perpetrate some strenuously delivered wrongs. Paper bags of water serve as the principal weapons, until the finale, when one of the braves breaches the situation with a few guns and several swords.

OH, YOU FEMALE COP (Luna), April.—Rather a clever burlesque on the woman policeman idea, which has been put over without disparaging reflections of any account. Dot Farley figures in the picture as one of the female cops.

HIS OWN ACCUSER (Ideal), March 29—A two-reel melodrama of rather a lurid type, but good entertainment nevertheless. It was made at the Paris Eclair studios, and has been enacted by a competent cast. The story is a play on a rather worn-out theme. A young chemist told by the father of his sweetheart that he must earn a certain sum of money before marrying her, seeks to borrow money for the completion of some experiments. In the meantime the villain of the play, also in pursuit of the girl, drugs the young man's wine, and shooting and robbing the money-lender places the revolver and some of the money in his unconscious rival's pocket. His guilt is afterward discovered through the cinematograph. The film has been splendidly photographed.

THE RAIN OF DEATH (Empress), March 31.—Made at the Gaumont American studios, by arrangement with the Short Stories Magazine, there is considerable to recommend this film with the exception of the scenes showing the air ship, or dirigible. These scenes are, unfortunately, not altogether convincing. Marion Swayne and Joseph Levering appear to advantage, as well as other talented players. Special mention is due the actor who played the role designated in the picture as No. "82," whose performance is most finished.

THE WINNING LOSER (Empress), April.—Joseph Levering and Marion Swayne play the leads in this two-reeler, made at the American Gaumont studios. The picture is an attractive one. The feminine lead is a newspaper woman, and the masculine lead is a rich young idler, whom the newspaper woman refuses to marry until he has made up his mind to work for a living. He enters the automobile races, which incident gives opportunity for some spectacular work when his opponent causes an explosion in his car. The point of the story is, of coure, that although he loses the race he wins the girl.

COMPENSATION (Ideal), April.—Made at the American Eclair studios, this two-reel production is exceptionally interesting. It is not exactly original as far as the story goes, except in one respect. The compensation idea may be original. The story treats of two young women, the one much favored by the male sex, and the other having, evidently, less magnetism, is round-shouldered, sweet-faced, and possesses a talent for painting, which in the end brings the wherewithal to save the eyesight of the man whom both she and her sister love, but who is betrothed to her sister. Much beauty of character is exhibited when she unselfishly brings the recalcitrant sister to be the first on whom the eyes of the lover light, refraining from revealing to him the noble part she herself has played.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 158 (Universal), March 17.—This number contains Canadian sports, pictures of a daring steeplejack, views of American food ships en route to Belgium, good war scenes, and drawings by Hy. Mayer.

THE BAY OF THE SEVEN ISLES (Laemmle), March 28.—A story of the pathetic type, illustrating a poem by Whittier. Frank Lloyd plays the part of the skipper and Helen Leslie doubles in the part of the twin sisters. Susette passes herself off as Margaret to win the skipper, and the latter dies. This is full of good scenic effects and makes a strong appeal.

THE SUPREME IMPULSE (Imp), March 29.—A pleasing little love story by John B. Clymer, with Wm. Garwood and Violet Mersereau in the cast. The lovers fear to marry after visiting a home where the man and wife quarrel, but later visit a home where there are happy children and the parents agree. This leads them to wed. A slight theme worked out pleasingly.

THE LOVE OF MARY WEST (Big U), March 30.—Edna Maison and Ray Gallegher are featured in this story. She is a poor widow supporting an only child. He is a widower and loses his daughter. Later he rescues her child from a fire and they decide to marry. This is an average offering, well photographed.

IN A JACKPOT (Nestor), March 30.—Eddie and Victoria appear in this as Newlyweds. He visualizes the old cuckoo clock joke, by cuckooing nine times in the hallway at three o'clock in the morning so wifie will think it is only twelve. The subsequent happenings are interesting and the film quite pleasing throughout.

HIS LAST TRICK (Laemmle), March 31.—A production by Frank Lloyd, featuring Millard K. Wilson and Helen Leslie. A man tries to blackmail his former mistress, who intends marrying another. The chauffeur comes to the girl's aid, entering the blackmailer's house and burning her letters behind him, while being held up by a gun. This is original in plot and well presented. The photography is good.

THE MAID OF THE MIST (Rex), April 1.—A strong one-reel subject, with Lon Chaney, Pauline Bush and Ray Gallegher in the cast. The young novelist and the country girl marry secretly and separate until he comes into his fortune. The jealous postmaster intercepts their letters, but they are reunited happily in the end. This is a pleasing subject throughout.

OLIVE'S HERO (Sterling), April 1.—This juvenile number has a lot of fun in it. Skinny steals Olive's kewpie doll and throws it into the lake. The hero comes and tries to save it, but Skinnie has to save both doll and hero at the end. A good "kid" number.

HIS ONLY PANTS (Nestor), April 2.—Jack Dillon and Lee Moran appear in this as two chums; Billie Rhodes is the girl. Lee sends his only pants to the tailor and is unable to get them again. He appears in most of the latter scenes with a table cloth wrapped about him. This make a good light subject and contains considerable amusement.

THE LAW OF LOVE (Victor), April 2.—This number, produced by Harry C. Meyers, features Irene Wallace and Brinsley Shaw. The girl heiress enters the employ of a law firm. She assists the hero with a big loan at a crucial moment. A business story of average interest.

LOVE, FIREWORKS AND THE JANITOR (Joker), April 3.—In this number Earnest Shields appears as the secretary of a millionaire. He is mistaken for his employer's son and continues the deception with amusing results. The accidental explosion of the fireworks makes a good feature and the production as a whole is quite funny throughout.

THE LAW O' THE PARENT (Powers), April 3.—A western number with a tragical close, handled with a fair degree of strength. Doris Pawn was pleasing as the mountain girl; Sydney Ayres acts the outlaw very well, but hardly looks the part. The photography is very good and the scenic effects are attractive.

Universal Film Mfg. Co., Specials.

THE DESERT BREED (Rex), March 28.—A two-reel offering, written by Tom Foreman and staged by Jos. Degrasse. Pauline Bush appears as a girl of the desert country, living in a cabin alone. The two young adventurers are portrayed by Lon Chaney and Wm. Dowlin. This picture is full of a strange charm and both acting and settings combine to produce the fascinating desert atmosphere. It is artistically handled and makes an unusual appeal to the observer. A strong offering.

THE POCKET WIRELESS (Universal Special), March 28.—Episode No. 3 of the "Black Box" series. This number takes up Quest's tracing of the missing skeleton and the purloined necklace. He is assisted by the two girls and gives Laura a wireless apparatus to carry in her pocket, for use in emergency. Later in the story she uses it to communicate with him. The various scientific devices appearing in this series are apparently not to be taken seriously, suggesting possibilities of the future rather than perfected inventions of the present. This creates a feeling of vagueness at times on the part of the observer. But the series is very pleasing in most ways even though its science is usually imaginative.

PLAYING WITH FIRE (Victor), March 29.—A two-reel subject with Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby in the cast. The girl was abandoned by her gypsy mother when a baby; these opening scenes are very pretty and attractive. Later she grows up and loves Bruce, the son of her foster father. He loves another, a girl named Cora. The latter is killed by a burglar. Bruce is placed under arrest and at the trial the gypsy girl swears she committed the murder. These scenes are not altogether convincing, though the story holds the interest. In the end the burglar confesses. A fairly strong offering.

THE DUCHESS (Gold Seal), March 30.—A three-reel number, based on the well-known sentimental novel after which it is named. Cleo Madison plays the country girl. Joe King appears as the hero. The pastoral scenes at the beginning are attractive. Later the story drifts into the sentimental entanglements familiar to the readers of this story. The adventure of the lovers in the storm was well pictured. This lacks some of the emotional flavor of the novel, but makes an entertaining offering. The photography is pleasing.

HEARTS AND FLAMES (L-KO), March 31.—A two-reel nonsense number, with Billy Ritchie, Louise Orth and Henry Bergman in the cast. This gets a conventional start but later works up to some amusing low comedy situations. The incidents in the plumber's shop and those later when the house is ravaged by fire and flood have much laughter in them. This will please lovers of slapstick comedy very much and is a good offering of the kind.

THE CAMEO RING (Big U), April 1.—This two-reel subject, written by Chas. Giblyn and put in scenario form by Calder Johnstone, tells a good story. Murdock MacQuarrie plays the leading parts, with Chas. Bowers and Agnes Vernon in the cast also. The sweethearts marry but later the husband's jealousy is aroused and he leaves the girl and goes to the city. He becomes a money-grubber, soured on the world. In later years his own daughter borrows money from his loan agency, and through her the family is reunited. The story is strong and enjoyable because of its natural, artistic development and the feeling which the actors throw into their work. A good subject.

CITY OF TERRIBLE NIGHT (Imp), April 2.—This two-reel number features King Baggot as a young millionaire who goes on a slumming expedition. At a dance he meets Tessie, the daughter of an Italian cobbler, whose beauty attracts him. He goes home with her and the father objects. Later the father is killed by a member of a gang and the hero is mistaken for the criminal, being first on the scene after the stabbing. The murderer confesses later and the hero marries the girl. This is well photographed throughout and the story is one of moderate strength. It has no features of special strength but the interest is maintained very well.

THE OAKLAWN HANDICAP (Bison), April 3.—A two-reel story of the race track produced by a company including Wm. Clifford, Marie Wolcamp, Rex de Rosselli and others. The sporting atmosphere is good in this and the story runs along in an entertaining way. It follows the usual trend of rack track stories. The favorite's shoes are tampered with and later the jockey is kidnapped and bound in a cabin presumed to be deserted. But Limpy Joe is upstairs and saves the jockey from the fire started in the cabin; this was realistically shown. The action is good throughout and the close effective.

World Film Corporation.

HEALTHY BY THE YEAR (World Film), March 22.—Jefferson De Angelis does his best to get humor out of a one-reel farce written by Mark Swan, but without much success. There are few new twists in the handling of a much used plot idea.

HOUSEKEEPING UNDER COVER (World Film), April.—A lively little farce-comedy presenting Katherine Osterman and a supporting company in an unusual and quite human situation. It shows the efforts of a family of moderate means to live in a fashionable apartment hotel. The picture profits by a careful production and acceptable acting.

"The Little Straw Wife"

A Sympathetic Photoplay in Three Reels, by Essanay, Adapted from Margaret Belle Houston's Serial in the Ladies' World Magazine.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

ESSANAY can safely claim for "The Little Straw Wife" an appeal that will clutch the heart strings of both old and young, the grave and gay. No matter how hardened the heart or how soured the life by the flings of fortune or the disloyalty of friends, a tenderness that will not be denied will gradually take possession of all who view these films, and eyes will be dimmed by a moistness that many will seek to hide from those who know them. And every one will feel better for the experience, and go home with an old-time freshness and gladness of heart.

Director Joseph Byron Totten has excelled in this production. He has put his whole heart into the work and can rest satisfied that others will be able to see and feel this. Not a single false note disturbed the harmony of the visualization of the story so far as I was able to judge or discern. And I can add that the settings were fitting and revealed nice care and painstaking.

It has been some time since I have seen Bryant Washburn in a photoplay that it was my lot to review. His Dudley Holt in this production easily stands out as the strongest and most finished characterization. In sentimental as well as in heroic moods he is the quiet, self-sustained man, who is determined to win out. Dudley's encounters with the men who attempted to take undue liberties with the wife who has forsaken him have no semblance of the spotlight hero. There is a deadly earnestness and business-like way in dealing out punishment that make the atmosphere truly realistic and just what might be expected.

In the role of Zoe Ballentyne, grown-up, Miss Edna Mayo will win many friends. In several strong emotional scenes she appears as if really living the part. In that scene, especially, where she reads the tattered scroll on which the boy "Tuppy" had declared his undying love, we catch sight of big tears as they drop in sacred memory. These scenes are in strong contrast to those other scenes which reveal Zoe in determined and defiant moods.

Others in the cast who deserve special mention are: Miss Betty Brown as Claire Razor, Royal Douglas as Bret Jordan, Thomas Commerford as Mr. Razor, Miss May Skinner as Mrs. Razor, and Miss Mae Edwards as Mrs. Emily Morse, Zoe's aunt. Nor must little Eleanor Kahn and manly little Jack Paul be overlooked in the parts of Little Zoe and "Tuppy." Their childish love scenes will recall many tender memories, and create quiet little heart laughs and many rippling smiles.

Little Zoe Ballentyne and "Tuppy," son of a neighbor, fall in love. On a torn and dirty piece of wrapping paper "Tuppy" writes his first love letter: "Zoe, I love you. If you ker to mary me soons I'm big enuf, meet me at the back fence." Zoe meets him and the affair is settled.

Zoe's mother dies at this time and Zoe is cared for by her fashionable aunt in a distant city. Fourteen years elapse. Dudley Holt visits this aunt and meets his old playmate, who formerly knew him only as "Tuppy." Neither recognizes the other. As Dudley is a good catch for a penniless orphan, Zoe's aunt wishes to see them married. Dudley loves Zoe, but is uncertain whether she returns his love. The matchmaking aunt assures him that his love is reciprocated. The marriage takes place and on that very day Zoe overhears Dudley questioning her aunt as to the truth of the statement formerly made. She then leaves her aunt's home and a note for Dudley, stating that he had been tricked into the marriage by her aunt and that she did not love him and would never live with him.

After several trying experiences in her effort to be self-supporting, Zoe finds a home with the Razor family, as social secretary. Here again she meets her husband, whom she thinks is attracted by Claire Razor. In her jealousy she finds that she loves Dudley, and thinking that he is about to elope with Claire she informs Mrs. Razor. But Dudley had only arranged matters so that his friend Bret Jordan could elope with Claire, and rejoices that his wife had betrayed her love for him. Then Zoe produces "Tuppy's" crumpled letter of long ago, and Dudley brings out of its hiding place a photograph of himself (as "Tuppy") and Zoe, taken fourteen years before. The fade out comes when the long-time lovers embrace as husband and wife.

The release date is March 23.

"Out of the Ruins"

Sensational Three-Reel Edison Adapted from a Story by Rupert Hughes.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A SPECTACULAR fire picture of unusual merit, "Out of the Ruins," is also a protest against those political methods which enable the owners of sweat shops and cheap factories to have reports on the fire perils of their buildings tabled. In order to evade the expense of complying with the requirements of fire inspectors, Abraham Hirschberg and his partner, proprietors of a large department store, obtain temporary release from providing their place of business with suitable exits and escapes. In this trap works "Miss 318," beloved of Fireman "No. 37." Their story is one in which the course of true love runs straight to the end, but a fire in the dry goods establishment brings out the true heroism of their natures.

The fire occurs when the place is crowded with customers, among them the wife of millionaire Lancaster Varden and their only child, Priscilla. Wife and daughter become separated during the rush to escape and sweet little Priscilla is joined by "Miss 318" in some thrilling adventures. They are finally discovered by gallant "Fireman 37," and the three call for help at a window of one of the upper floors. Men on the roof of an adjoining building attach one end of a stout rope to the roof and throw the other end through mid-air to the fireman at the window. He fastens it securely and prepares to carry his loved one across. She yields the first chance to helpless Priscilla and stands watching them as her lover crosses hand over hand to safety, assuring the safety of both by extinguishing a blaze that catches the rope. In the general collapse of the building that follows the form of "Miss 318" is seen falling to an awning below.

During the excitement preceding the rescue, Priscilla gives "Miss 318" a valuable and peculiar bracelet to wear, and this leads to a mistake of identity when father and mother search the hospital wards for their daughter, but their is a happy adjustment at the end, with bright prospects in store for the fireman and his bride-to-be.

The scenes of conflagration are very realistic, and they are exceptionally well handled. The three principals contribute materially to interest by intelligent interpretation of their roles, and the entire cast—a large one—is one of well-selected types. In the minor role of Priscilla's mother, Nellie Grant is to be complimented for some fine revelation of feeling that is devoid of theatricalism. The picture should be a winner with any audience.

"The Devil"

Franz Molnar's Play Is the Basis of an Impressive Five-Part Picture Produced by Thomas H. Ince.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ADAPTED from Franz Molnar's play, produced by Thomas H. Ince and acted in the principal parts by Bessie Barriscale, Arthur Maude and Edward Connelly, "The Devil" passes from the stage to the screen without loss of vitality. These five reels, to be released in the Mutual Masterpiece Series, are unconventional and uncompromising in giving the devil his due. Brought up to date by Mr. Connelly, the twentieth century spirit of evil is a suave gentleman, whose hair is curled back from his forehead to suggest the mythical horns. Appearing and disappearing as he sees fit, scattering seeds of discontent on fertile soil, he is eventually successful in adding two more souls to the population of his unhappy kingdom. His method, as revealed in the picture, is adroit and reasonably clever.

Without rehearsing an old story, it may be noted that the victims of insidious promptings are a well-intentioned artist and his former sweetheart, who before the opening of the play has married another man. They are ready to consider the early love affair dead, but the Devil, in the guise of a Dr. Miller, has other plans, and it is the detailed development of these plans that makes the picture interesting. One receives the impression of a supernatural force working through human means to entangle a pair of helpless mortals. They have about as much chance as flies in a spider's web, and there is not—to the credit of Mr. Ince let it be stated—a fortuitous rescue at the conclusion. On the contrary, we are offered a glimpse of the artist and his sweetheart in the life hereafter. Mr. Ince made a counterpart of Dante's Inferno, and hand in hand, two agonized, disheveled beings, the artist and Isabella, stumble through the fiery caverns and over the writhing bodies of naked men. In settings, lighting and the grouping of the figures, these scenes are capital.

In its entirety, the plot is so constructed that an audience continually wonders what is going to happen next. The element of uncertainty is, of course, valuable and the acting, notably of Miss Barriscale and Mr. Connelly, is more than ordinarily expressive. Mr. Maude also may be credited with a sincere performance, as may Rhea Mitchell in the rather lugubrious role of the artist's discarded model.

"The Reign of the Siren"

Three-Reel Kalem Story Artistically Directed—It Has Many Distinguished Scenes.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WE have noticed a steady and marked tendency toward betterment in the Kalem product going on for some time. In the preparing of a script to make the narrative dramatically impressive; in the careful direction of the players and the whole handling of the screen offerings the company seems to be gaining faster than the average maker of living film. This tendency is finely illustrated in one of its new three-part dramas, "The Reign of the Siren," which was produced by Robert Vignola.

Scene from "The Reign of the Siren" (Kalem).

The story is of a man who takes marriage seriously. He has fallen in love with and married a song and dance woman. She is the siren: has become the mother of his child and is ruining him by her spendthrift and devil-may-care life. Contrasted with her, is the man's partner in the dry goods business. She secretly loves him and, when he has killed his drunken, unfaithful wife and shot himself, she takes the child. Not a very pleasant or wholly new tale; but that is the only criticism we care to make of it—the rest we heartily commend. The story as directed and played held our interest strongly; we were made to feel its situations keenly.

One of the first things noticeable is its remarkably clear and stereoscopic photography. The Kalem people have been spending much on mechanical facilities and the result is gratifying. The picture is so sharp that one could almost tell the fortune of one of the players when she holds her hand toward the camera, all the lines on it are written clear. The material of the dresses and clothes comes out, too; but the depth of the scenes and their life-like seeming are of greater importance than sharpness of detail. Here we have both.

The most brilliant acting of the picture is Alice Hollister's presentation of the "siren." It is a nervous and truthful picture of a very unpleasant character, but so human that it is by no means repellant. Alice Nilsson plays "the other woman," in which her beauty, personality and restrained playing make her delightful to look upon. All the other characters ably keep pace with these two. There are also many well taken figures and all are as natural as can be. Some fine dresses add their little to the whole. We count it a very good offering.

"Gretna Green"

Marguerite Clark Scores in Famous Players' Four-Part Production of Old English Romance.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

BEING a piquant little person, equally fetching whether she smiles or pouts, laughs or flies into a tantrum, Marguerite Clark has no trouble in depicting an English belle of about 100 years ago. Her name is Dolly Erskine, the winsome heroine of "Gretna Green," a play by Grace Livingston Furniss, done into a four-part picture by the Famous Players Film Company. Miss Clark charms with girlish coquetries, becoming to a dainty Miss. She bobs her head and the dark ringlets dance around her shoulders; she stamps her feet and because she is so cute the bursts of temper are attractive. Once she even faints from a too sudden emotion; but for the most part Dolly appears to be a light-hearted young woman, not unlike the suggestion of the name.

"Gretna Green," it may be recalled, is the romance of a girl who unwittingly becomes the wife of an earl, then falls in love with him in time to prevent the acceptance of a divorce decree. While Dolly is falling in love, the earl continues to pose as a riding master, and as such wins the heart of his pretty bride. The Scotch marriage law is the pivot of the plot. To save the good name of her sister, Dolly declares that the pseudo riding master is her husband, not realizing that they have crossed the border into Scotland and that the confession of marriage is binding. Gretna Green was a favorite goal for eloping couples in those days and it possessed a suitably idyllic atmosphere, if one may credit the testimony of this picture. The settings, interiors as well as exteriors, are a great addition to the production. There is no escaping the charm of the scenes even when the dramatic or comedy worth of the story is not marked. The costuming, too, aids in creating a correct impression.

Excepting the altogether pleasing performance given by Miss Clark, the acting does not call for special comment. Included in a satisfactory cast are Arthur Hoops, Helen Lutrell, W. Merkyl, J. A. Hall and Lester Chambers.

"The College Widow"

An Ambitious Lubin Production Which Will Be Received Well Everywhere.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN THIS production neither time nor money nor skill has been spared. On the contrary, there has been a most lavish expenditure of all three. Too much praise cannot be given to the screen adaptation of this well known and popular play. The adaptation has been done in a masterly way. While not a jot of the dramatic value was lost, there is a most noticeable and enjoyable absence of padding. Much of the success in this play on the stage depended upon the creation of the proper atmosphere. It goes without saying that even with the utmost care and industry, the conventional stage was bound to fall short of anything like perfection in imparting the real atmosphere. Happily, the screen has no such limitations and the producer in this case has gone to extraordinary lengths to utilize and press home the full advantage of the screen over the stage. We plunge into the atmosphere of college life at the very opening of the feature and all through the film this atmosphere is most skillfully maintained. Genuine exteriors of real colleges have been chosen and chosen with most excellent judgment. The backgrounds of some of the scenes are full of charm and art. The battles on the gridiron are rendered with great realism, and there can never be the slightest doubt of the genuineness of the spectators and the exuberance of their enthusiasm.

Not satisfied with rendering the picture perfect in this respect and thus ensuring its success, the producer has introduced a succession of very skilful scenes displaying a realism which often lifts us out of our seats. I refer to the overpowering fire scenes and the work of rescue done in connection therewith. All the thrills in this scene are bona fide and they last uncommonly long.

The story of the College Widow is well known. It is a strong and human story and on the screen it is developed with commendable skill. Altogether this production is a real tribute to youth. There is so much life and color and ginger in the doings of the young people among whom the plot takes place, that no audience will ever be able to resist its spell. I think the College Widow is fit to figure on the program of the best classes of motion picture theaters. The acting leaves nothing to be desired and the photography bears the Betswood stamp.

"At the Banquet Table"

Two-Reel Imp in Which King Baggot Indulges in a Disturbing Nightmare.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the prevalent ideas in picture making at the present time is one that must have had its origin in the comic bump of somebody. The idea referred to tricks the spectator into believing that a remarkable story is being enacted, whose only excuse for exaggerated situations, and frequent unrealities lies in the final discovery that it is all a dream, when the spectator finds himself scratching his head, somewhat chagrined at being forced to admit that "one" has been "put over" on him.

A familiar name heads the story of "At the Banquet Table," that of Harvey Gates, whose contributions to the literature of the screen are now a welcome asset in the producing department of many moving picture manufactories. In this case he has succeeded in converting the happenings of a few hours in the world of reality, and possibly only a few minutes in the land of dreams, into an acceptable moving picture scenario covering easily two reels of film.

George Lessey the producer of the picture has succeeded in working in some good effects with the aid of a competent cast headed by King Baggot and Arline Pretty, with a support consisting of Ned Reardon and others whose joint efforts are an asset to the production.

According to what we become wise to at the close of the picture, the young man (King Baggot) whom we have seen at the opening of the story being feasted at the club, falls asleep at the banquet table, and the remainder of the picture is made up of a series of connected incidents which occur in his dream, which moreover turns out to be something more than a dream —a veritable nightmare—in which he imagines that his pretty young wife is untrue.

The production has been well staged and photographed, and is altogether an attractive one.

"The Price of Fame"

Three-Reel Balboa, the first of a Series of Twelve Episodes Entitled "Who Pays," to Be Released Through the Pathe Exchange.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of this drama is clearly told in the picture, and as the first of a series of twelve episodes, each of which, by the way, will tell a different tale, the characters of one having nothing in common with those of another, "The Price of Fame" makes a favorable impression. Ruth Roland and Henry King have the principal roles in this number, and will continue through the entire series, along with others who appear in the opening drama.

As the producer of the picture H. M. Horkheimer has dressed the story with considerable tact, displaying a great deal of artistic sense in the choice of exterior locations, which are very beautiful, and in the arrangement of the sets used for the interiors. The closely related scenes of the picture are noticably well connected. It must be admitted, however, that one becomes rather confused as to the time of day intended to be conveyed, when the singing teacher in attire inclined toward the fashionable evening garb, receives guests at an hour which according to our knowldge of the professional calling time of milkmen, claims the early morning. This may, however, be a criticism wrongly placed, for there is a possibility that customs as to milkmen differ in different parts of the country, and as the singing teacher is a somewhat eccentric type, he may be allowed the privilege not accorded to others.

Ruth Roland plays with her usual pleasant spontaniety and clothes the role of the wife and mother with sweetness and dignity. And it may be said of Henry King that he is at his best in this production. There is also a dear little girl to be noticed in the picture who adds more than a little to its attractiveness.

Catherine Countiss to Appear in Alliance Picture.

Catherine Countiss, whose work in "The Avalanche" and other recent film successes made such a favorable impression, is the latest addition to the galaxy of the Alliance stars. Miss Countiss will appear in the title role of "The Grey Nun of Belgium" which is now nearing completion at the studios of the newly organized Dramatic Producing Company at Los Angeles. Several well known players appear in the support of the star while David Proctor essays the leading male part. The picture will be finished in the course of the next few weeks and will be released on the Alliance Program.

Mr. Cobe has commissioned an artist to work upon the lithographic paper and every other detail incident to the releasing of the picture is being considered and attended to in advance, so that as far as it is possible all delay between the date the picture is finished and its release will be eliminated.

"Are You A Mason"

One of the Brightest Farces on Record Is Released by the Famous Players with John Barrymore as the Star.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN "The Man From Mexico" John Barrymore showed himself to be a comedian of rare attainments on the screen quite as well as on the stage; in "Are You a Mason?" produced in five reels by the Famous Players from Leo Ditrichstein's farce, he improves on his own earlier performances. He plays broad farce with a finesse as welcome as it is unusual. The refinement of his personality is never lost; one continually enjoys watching a true comedian, trained in the best method of the stage and able—the picture proves it—to utilize the training in another medium. Mr. Barrymore's performance is a lesson in how to be funny without being vulgar.

Credit for the emphatic success of the production must be shared by the writer of the scenario, who built up a plot of cumulative strength and by the director, who brought out the full value of the story and enlivened it with a quantity of telling incidents, small in themselves, but collectively of great value. When put to the test of a Strand audience, the picture scored with never a miss. The humor of the situations is contagious as Frank Perry (Mr. Barrymore), becomes more and more entangled in his fabrication of deceit. It is clever farce, extravagant farce, in the main, but it is human. The people introduced are not grotesque distortions.

In selecting a part of the film that most thoroughly reveals the sound quality of Mr. Barrymore's art, it is easy to enthuse over his semblance of intoxication—an intoxication so complete that one lamp-post becomes triplets, that the keyhole in the front door dances illusively up and down the panel, that the bed, when it is reached, combines the qualities of a merry-go round and a canoe on the ocean. For the best part of a reel Mr. Barrymore is a victim of such strange phenomena and he is continually funny without once becoming coarse. His meeting with his father-in-law, both pretending to be Masons, is another capital scene, and the nightmare in which he visualizes the rigors of a Masonic initiation provides a laughable climax for a real screen farce —one of the best on record. The star is given excellent support by Harold Lockwood, W. Dickinson, Helen Freeman, Charles Dickson and D. Mitchell.

An Unusual Plot.

In the coming release the American Film Manufacturing Company will present a two-part drama of absorbing interest in which modern business is intermingled with pathos and finely drawn dramatic situation. The film tells an unusual story of a young man who holds honor before happiness and as a husband and father, in name only, of his brother's sweetheart, is nearly bankrupt by the father of the woman he formerly loved. Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen play the leading roles supported by an all star cast.

Four Fun Makers.

The international quartet of "Komic" fun provokers, namely Fay Tincher, Elmer Booth, Chester Withey and Bobby Fuehrer, again comes to light, humorously inclined, in reel twenty of Paul West's "Bill, the Office Boy" series. "Ethel's Deadly Alarm" is the title and in it are many amusing situations. An alarm clock and some dynamite are the principal causes for a reel of laughable complications. Edward "Komic" Dillon, as usual, controls the handle to the "Komic" laugh-causing machine.

"The Quarry," a Selig Spectacular Special, is nearing completion at the Chicago, Ill. studios. Miss Grace Darmond and John Charles take leading parts in the production.

"The Arrival of Perpetua"

Vivian Martin Carries Off First Honors in a Pleasing Production of the World Film Corporation.

A VEHICLE for Vivian Martin, who has coyly smiled her way into stardom, "The Arrival of Perpetua," a five-part World Film production to be released on Mar. 29 serves its purpose with something to spare. Miss Martin will be remembered as the heroine of "The Wishing Ring" and equally favorable was the impression left by her performance in "Old Dutch." This time she has a role that presents a winning personality in no less harmonious surroundings. Perhaps they were created primarily as a setting for Miss Martin's graceful accomplishments, and perhaps Director Chautard purposely subordinated everything to a display of his star's most likable traits; at all events a pleasing performance and a pleasing picture have been the outcome.

The first appeal of the production, and one that is consistently maintained to the end, is that of girlhood so innocent that it may be indiscreet without consciousness of indiscretions. "Pet" is a young woman capable of kissing a man or a baby with equal frankness. But for all her lack of sophistication she has dependable feminine instincts that lead her to dislike her quite impossible aunt with whom she is forced to live; likewise her impulses are all opposed to the three mercenary suitors anxious to spend her fortune.

According to precedent, the proper dramatic partner for a girl of this sweet, impulsive disposition is a self-centered man with a well founded aversion to women. He is found in the person of Thaddeus, "Pet's" eccentric guardian, to whom she turns for shelter when life with the aunt becomes too unpleasant. From here on interest centers in the girl's guileless attack on her guardian's heart and his transformation from an unkempt oddity into a normal man ready to appreciate the affection that came with so little effort on his part. Scenes such as these and the ones earlier in the picture, laid at a girl's boarding school, are right in accord with Miss Martin's winsome personality; but Milton Sills as Thaddeus is a trifle stiff. Mr. Chautard's first American picture has been given a satisfactory production in which a numerous cast was capably directed.

Broadway Favorites in "When We Were Twenty-One."

"When We Were Twenty-One," the Famous Players Film Company's first release in April, which introduces the famous young actor-manager, William Elliott, to the motion picture public, not only possesses the distinction of presenting this popular star in his first film characterization, but includes a supporting cast which in itself is of stellar importance. Rarely has the cast of a feature film offering contained so many prominent Broadway players, one at least of whom—Charles Waldron—is a star in his own right, at present sharing the principal honors of the current dramatic success, "Daddy Long-Legs" with Ruth Chatterton. Other important stage artists who appear in support of Mr. Elliott are Marie Empress, who played an important role in "The Little Cafe," Helen Lutrell, recently with "The Crinoline Girl," Charles Coleman, now appearing in "The Adventure of Lady Ursula," with Phyllis Neilson-Terry, and George Backus, whose list of dramatic successes is too great to enumerate.

"Whom The Gods Would Destroy," a multiple reel drama of dramatic intensity, was recently completed at the Chicago studios of the Selig Polyscope Company. It was written by W. E. Wing. Tyrone Power takes the leading role.

"Shadows of the Harbor"

Unusual Two-Part Ideal to Appear Shortly on the Program of the United Film Service.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN a review of a picture of such excellent quality as "Shadows of the Harbor" the director surely deserves first mention, since we are at a loss to know to whose credit the scenario is to be placed. And after all there are points about the production that lead us to believe that its director, Webster Cullison by name, would be able to whip into presentable picture shape almost any kind of a story.

As before stated, the picture is of extraordinary quality, unusually well made, and with a good cast placed at his disposal, the New York harbor, a few river boats and their accessories, the director has, with the aid of a camera man who evidently knows his business, done some effective work. The production is full of rapid action. The camera with lightning speed acquaints us with all angles of situations and locations, so that at the close of the picture we feel thoroughly at home with the story, the policemen who patrol New York's water front, and the people who, although they frequent the land intermittently, make their homes on the boats that ply the river.

The story, which we will not attempt to tell in detail, is alive with human interest. Norbert Myles as Officer Ryan is a splendidly virile type. Edna Payne plays the part of Peggy, the skipper's daughter, and is especially appealing in her interpretation of the simply fashioned role. Henry Alrich as "Bull" Martin, the leader of the dock rats, and H. Stanley as Anderson, a member of the gang who would and does choose the clean and straight life, helped by the good influence of Peggy, are both excellent types well impersonated. Little Clara Horton is another member of the cast. She has little to do, but does that little well. Neither must Skipper Wilson be forgotten, for though we have not his name, the same honor of well-doing is accorded him as to the rest of this execllent cast.

Griffith Engages John Emerson.

The most recent happening of note in filmdom is the entrance of the well-known John Emerson, legitimate stage star, author and producer formerly of the Frohman forces. He has been secured by D. W. Griffith, Director in Chief of the Reliance and Majestic studio, to appear in a series of feature photoplays.

For his Mutual feature debut, John Emerson will enact the tense, emotional part of "Oswald" in an adaptation of Ibsen's "Ghosts" prepared by Russel E. Smith, in four parts. George Nicholls will direct Emerson in this four reel feature.

A New Vitagrapher.

Joseph Gollomb, formerly of the Universal eastern scenario department, has joined the scenario department of the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Gollomb had been on the reportorial staffs of the Evening World and the Evening Mail, and is a graduate of C. C. N. Y. and Columbia University. He has also been dramatic critic on the Call and has written for Munsey, American, Harper's Weekly and other magazines.

Mestayer Joins Selig.

Harry Mestayer, now playing in Chicago, in "On Trial," has been engaged by the Selig Polyscope Company to play the lead in "The Millionaire Baby," a film version of Anna Katherine Green's world-famous mystery story. The novel was adapted for the screen by Gilson Willets. The play has already been put in production at the Chicago studios of the Selig company. Mr. Mestayer will probably join one of the Selig Pacific Coast stock companies as leading man late in the Spring.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WASHINGTON, D. C., EXHIBITORS MEET.

President Herbst Tenders Resignation and Talks of Things Accomplished.—National President Pearce Present.

By C. L. Linz.

WHAT was perhaps the most enthusiastic meeting of exhibitors ever held in this city was that which took place at Crandall's Theater, Washington, D. C., Thursday evening, March 18, with more than thirty representative theater owners and managers present.

Dr. William P. Herbst, President of the local branch, called the meeting to order, stating that the exhibitors had been gathered for the purpose of reorganizing. "Exhibitors all over the country are getting together and are now working hard," he declared, and in pointing out the work that here had already been accomplished, stated: "Had it not been for this organization of ours you would be paying at this time an internal revenue tax of $100 instead of $25 and $50. The League has not been given the proper credit for what was done at that time, and I think that this branch can take some of the credit that is due for the good work that it accomplished. As you all know, the bill passed the House of Representatives as it was originally drawn and without any amendments. I read of it the next morning, but I had hardly done so before the representative of the Moving Picture World called my attention to it and we discussed the matter. I then called upon Vice-President Brylawski and together we went to the Senate and interviewed many of its members and, as you know, inside of twelve hours Mr. Brylawski had made up a letter and had placed copies in the hands of each Senator before the next afternoon. Through the efforts of our national President and the different organizations throughout the country, who sent letters to their representatives in Congress, we were able to have the tax rates reduced as I have stated and I think they are now very fair, although some of the exhibitors even to-day think they were abused in having to pay that tax and have tried to pay not more than $10.

"I would like to say for the benefit of those who have airdomes that the tax will have to be paid when the places are opened. If they are opened, say, the first of May, it will be best if you do not try to work under the present taxes you have already paid, but would take out a new one at the rate of $10 per year, the cost will be $1.67 for the remainder of the present fiscal year ending June 30. These exhibitors will then be called upon to pay $5 as the tax now levied remains in effect only until December 31."

Dr. Herbst then presented National President Pearce, who had come from Baltimore to be present at the meeting and to lend counsel to the local men in their effort to reorganize and bring the Washington branch to the plane on which all organizations in the National Capital should be. After acknowledging the applause with which he was greeted, Mr. Pearce said, "Exhibitors all over the country are awakening to the realization that organization is an absolute necessity and they are getting together and pulling to that one end. They all realize that they must organize and I wish I were at liberty to tell you of some of the things that are about to happen if they do not wake up and I am an optimist rather than a pessimist. Many do not know the dangers that are besetting them, the pitfalls and traps, and there is only one way to steer clear of these rocks—by the having of strong state and national organizations."

In continuing, Mr. Pearce outlined the work of reorganizing which has taken place in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and which he declared was very gratifying. He also spoke of a banquet held in one of these places at which was present a United States Senator who spoke of the motion picture industry, and that it grieved him to think that the exhibitors were not organized like other businesses. "It is not because we are not business men, we have just as much brains, just as much get-up-and-go, and it should make us feel ashamed to know that other lines of business and the professions have organizations with the members banded together making things go, and we are just moving along and allowing the other fellow to whip us into line and into the channels into which he wants us to go. It is about time that we wake up and exert ourselves and bring into being the great pressure and influence that we can wield. To say further that we must organize is but to repeat what I have already said."

It had been agreed at a previous meeting that for the purpose of effecting a reorganization of the branch that all of the present officers should tender their resignations at this time and the number of lame ducks noted among those present was emphasized by the number of swan songs, all ending with "and I too, Mr. President, gracefully present my resignation," from both officers and directors.

Dr. Herbst sang his swan song in a well modulated voice, as follows: "Before retiring as your president, in which office I have served for the past two years or more, since the inception of this branch, I want to say that while I have not been able to accomplish all of the things I would have liked to, there are some things we have done of which we may justly be proud. In the first place, our getting together and organizing, although we are not as strong as we might or should be, has been of no little benefit to us." He then referred to a discussion with the operators which was settled in a most satisfactory manner, and to the Ohio floods during which the local exhibitors were able to render considerable assistance; to the New York and the Dayton conventions at which the Washington delegates took prominent parts. "The internal revenue matter of which I have just spoken to you, shows that if we can be so effective as a weak organization, the possibilities of our accomplishments when we have attained strength. If we have the power behind us we can go to the House of Representatives and to the Senate and ask for things and get more of what we want when we are in the right, and the exhibitors have a great many rights which have been trampled on by others, and if we do not have a good organization we will be put down wherever our opponents have a chance. Take, for instance, the matter of local censorship. I went to Major Sylvester at the time this question was in issue and told him that the exhibitors of the District of Columbia were only too willing to co-operate with him, and if there was anything objectionable in any picture shown at any house, if he would just inform us of that fact, we would have it eliminated, and to show the police that we meant business, I went to the various exchanges and explained the situation to them and received promises of co-operation, with the result that we have not since had any trouble about the censoring of motion picture films here."

A. F. Fox, jr., Norman Luchs, A. Robb, Ira La Mote, and Louis W. Atkinson also made extended remarks upon the need of organization and co-operation among the exhibitors pointing out the many problems now facing them. Thomas Eastwood spoke of the many trade abuses, but it remained for National Vice-President Fulton Brylawski to arraign them for their shortcomings. "The exhibitors are behind the times," he declared, and pausing for a moment to allow the meaning of this allegation to sink in, continued. "I have been in the moving picture business for eight or nine years, perhaps longer than any of you here. I remember when we ran 500 feet of film and charged five cents, the show lasting about five minutes, and we got the crowds for moving pictures in those days constituted a novelty. With a house seating 150 or 200 people big dividends were declared. Then came competition and we commenced the running of two reels; now we are running four, five and six (while voices from his audience declared the number to be up as high even as thirteen reels for five cents). The exhibitors are short-sighted. They see a competitor running four reels and even though he is not making any money by so doing, they meet his competition by giving one more reel than he. The first competitor comes back with another additional reel and the second one does likewise, so that now a show instead of running five to eight minutes will hold the audience for upwards of two hours. If A, B and C each have theaters in the same neighborhood and a man starts out for an evening's entertainment, he will go to A's house and see an exhibition of say three-quarters of an hour, and, desiring more, will go to B's house for a like period, and then on to C's, and be well satisfied to pay the three small admissions. On the other hand, if A's show lasts two hours after he comes out he wants to go home, for the hour is late. It is now a question of how one exhibitor can best do his neighbor, but they cannot get away with it. They are standing in their own light. In the other cities the exhibitors are realizing this and they are doubling their houses by doubling their prices of admission." He told of how the prices usually charged by the legitimate houses are being applied to the motion picture theaters in New York and stated that good results were being obtained for the reason that the people, paying large prices, believed they were well getting their money's worth. "They will pay a dollar to see a show at a high priced house and would refuse to visit a five-cent theater where the same show would be given." He said that fully 90 per cent. of the houses in New York charge ten cents, while in this city a like percentage charge five cents. "I believe the exhibitors should long since have become tired in working just to pay the electric light company, the landlord and the film exchanges, and at the end of the week find that they have about as much left as one would pay a good clerk."

Among those present taking an active part in the meeting were Acting Secretary Maurice Davis, William P. Herbst, Harry Crandall, Joseph Morgan, Samuel Greenberg, Mrs. Mark A. Brame, Miss Sadie P. Cohen, Fulton Brylawski, William J. Quinn, J. L. Young, Fred Steing, A. Robb, Robert Campbell, Norman Luchs, Ira LaMotte, A. F. Fox, Jr., Thomas Eastwood, W. H. Harris, W. E. Frazier, A. H. Brown, Nat Stein, Harry C. Given, R. A. Babbitt, W. S. Wickham, James Wickham, G. C. Schultz, W. O. Snyder, L. W. Atkinson and H. C. Bedell.

A resolution was adopted empowering the resigning officers to retain their respective positions until the next meeting when the work of reorganizing will be completed, the date of such meeting to be at the discretion of the president.

KANSAS EXHIBITORS CONVENTION.

Enthusiastic Meeting Held at Emporia.—Large Increase In Membership Reported.

THE convention of the Kansas branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held at Emporia, Kans., March 15-16, proved to be a surprise to everyone, the exhibitors included. The weather for several weeks has been very bad and train service very unsatisfactory. However, the "old guard" was out in full force and there were several new members present. Members commenced to arrive Sunday evening, March 14, and the attendance increased each day until Tuesday, when a fairly representative group had assembled.

The first meeting was delayed on account of late trains, and President W. B. Moore did not make his opening address until 2 o'clock P. M., Monday. His talk was brief, but to the point. "If," said Mr. Moore, "the League never did me any more good than the friendships I make, the ideas I get from meeting with other exhibitors and the renewed ambition with which I return to work, I would feel amply repaid. It does more than this, however; it protects me from unjust legislation and it gives me something tangible with which to fight the industry's common enemy—censorship."

Mayor R. M. Hamer of Emporia, was next introduced by President Moore. Mayor Hamer expressed himself as being surprised at the wonderful growth of the motion picture business. "I can say also that I am well pleased," he said, "to see this progress. I regard the motion picture as one of the prime influences in education to-day. I don't think there is anything that gets closer to the people with more effectiveness than the pictures. You are engaged in a very responsible business, responsible to yourself, the public and posterity. Your work has a great influence on the minds of the public; this influence is either good or bad, accordingly as you make it."

Royale V. Rothermell of the Paramount Program, replied to Mayor Hamer, assuring him that it was the earnest desire of the men in the motion picture business to make and show only those pictures which were morally clean and wholesome. He pointed to the fact that most of the manufacturers are to-day producing this sort of subjects and the few that are not are rapidly diminishing in number. Following Mr. Rothermell there were several impromptu speeches by visiting exchange men.

M. E. Williams, manager of the Mutual Exchange in Kansas City, and familiarly known as "Marty," told about his earlier experiences in the film business. However, Marty did not confine himself to the past, but took up some of the burning questions facing the exhibitor to-day. His manner of handling these questions was very much after the style of Billy Sunday and lacked none of the latter's enthusiasm. "In regard to raising prices," said Marty, "it is foolish for any exhibitor to believe that it cannot be done, when you buy a pair of shoes you have a chance to pick up anything in quality from $2.50 up to $7, and when you buy a $7 pair of shoes you expect to get $7 worth of quality. Give your patrons 10c worth of quality and they are willing to pay for it. There is no reason why you can't get more for your show than 5c if you add that much more quality to your show. There is no reason to believe that you are not entitled to an additional nickel. Furthermore, if you put this question up to your patrons in a logical manner they will see the reason."

Great surprise was expressed by the exhibitors at the attitude of the exchangemen in regard to questions that were heretofore considered questions relative to the exhibitor only. At this convention the exhibitor realized that his problems were also the exchange men's problems. He learned that the exchange men were making an effort to help him solve these problems. Features were discussed, serials were discussed, by both exhibitor and exchange men and it was the concensus of opinion among both that there never has been closer friendship and a better understanding existing between these men than there is to-day.

"Why," said President Moore, "one of the reasons for organizing this league was in a measure to fight the exchange men. To-day it looks like we will have to form an anxiliary or honorary branch for them."

Mr. Concannon of Emporia, secretary of the organization, expressed himself as being a "price man," in other words, he believes where he pays more for his service he is entitled to a larger admission fee. Mr. Concannon brought up the question relative to the prices to be paid on features. Mr. Concannon said that he could see no reason why he, in a small town like Emporia, should be forced to pay as much for his features as men in towns like Kansas City or Topeka. Mr. Concannon said that he believes the time is coming when the size of the house and the size of the town will be taken into consideration when charges are made for feature service.

Mr. Willey, of Mulberry, Kans., said he was desirous of seeing some film service company come into the market with a service any day of which might be cancelled in order to put on a feature. He said this is one of the reasons that theater men use as few features as they do. "I would like to use features," said Mr. Willey, "often, but when I pay for my regular program and also pay for the feature I find the expense entailed is too great, and when I do put a feature on now, I do so simply to give my patrons a treat, making nothing for myself."

The second day of the convention was largely spent in executive session. The organization did little new business except to pass a resolution thanking Mr. Moore, Mr. Concannon and Mr. Meyn for their work in stopping the recent legislation which would have been detrimental to the exhibitors of Kansas. They also adopted an inter-insurance policy which will be projected in the near future, and which they expect will save them about 50 per cent. on their yearly premium.

The great surprise of the convention was the increase in membership, sixty-five new members had been added during the last three months. The convention adjourned about 3 P. M., Tuesday, March 16, and the members returned to their homes, with renewed ambitions and with earnest intention to come to the next convention which will be held in Pittsburg, Kans., the first Tuesday of October, 1915.

PITTSBURGH EXHIBITORS MEET.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was held Monday, March 15, at 10:30 a. m., in the league headquarters, Apollo building, 238 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. An unusually large crowd was in attendance and important matters were discussed, including a report from the committee on legislation.

Secretary Delves is working very hard in appealing to exhibitors to take a greater interest in the organization. Censorship is the question that comes first in the minds of all connected with the moving picture business just now and every one is urged to attend these meetings to get acquainted with his fellow-exhibitors and help boost the cause and assist in defeating all laws inimical to the industry

Film Men Give Exhibition.

After the regular program of the first session of the Kansas State Exhibitors' League at Emporia, Kans., on March 15, visiting film exchange men put on some of their companies' latest features at the local theater and the visiting exhibitors reviewed the films, which demonstrated clearly the points that the league wished to make clear.

At the Electric Theater where Marty Williams showed the first Mutual Master Picture, "The Quest," all exhibitors in attendance expressed themselves as being surprised at the wonderful photography, double exposure and dissolving work in the film.

C. S. Edwards jr., Manager Pathe Exchange, exhibited a Pathecolor reel, "The Trip to Madeira." This reel proved to be very much liked, the many exhibitors expressed their opinion on colored film as being highly satisfactory. Royale V. Rothermell had an exhibition of the "Hypocrites" at the Royal Theater. Several fraternal organizations were having their meetings the first evening in the city and they were all requested to attend the performances. After the show Mr. Rothermell addressed them in the following manner:

"Several of the large cities of the United States, gentlemen," he said, "have turned this picture down. We believe that there is a lesson to be learned here, and one that will hurt no one. If any man in this audience would object to having his wife, his sister or his daughter see this picture I wish he would kindly rise and explain his stand." Several men who were standing in the rear of the house immediately found seats.

Going from the sublime to the ridiculous, the next picture shown was a Charlie Chaplin, Essanay release, "His Night Out," This picture brought down storms of applause.

C. E. Edwards jr. also exhibited "The Pardon," for the first time. The exhibitors who saw this all agreed it was an excellent production and would be, they believe, a great assistance in passing the widowed mothers' pension bill now up before the New York State Legislature.

William Allen White Pays Tribute to Moving Picture Men.

William Allen White, the leading citizen of Emporia, Kan., and one of the greatest American newspaper men and an internationally recognized novelist and editor of the Emporia Gazette, spoke before the first session.

Mr. White expressed his pleasure at seeing the growth of the moving picture industry. "In the early days," said Mr. White, "the churches of the nation molded public opinion. Following the churches came the newspapers, and for years the newspapers moulded public opinion. When I first came on the job newspapers ran anything in the way of advertising, fake doctors, fire sales, fortune tellers, and all other fake schemes. However, the public tired of this and put their foot down saying 'no, we want our newspapers to be clean.' The result is to-day I am passing up thousands of dollars worth of advertising because I want to run a clean newspaper. I am glad to see that you men of the film business are passing up the cheap, the immoral, class of films that flooded the country a few years ago. In your case the public has evidently said, 'No, we want clean films.'

I think that the motion picture industry is the greatest thing that has happened since steam. You are going to educate the masses. For the last fifty years we, the newspaper men, have been doing so, but I am forced to acknowledge that you are superseding us. You have a great responsibility resting upon your shoulders and I am glad to see that, judging from the pictures you run to-day, you are carrying it well. I am educating my son to be a newspaper man. I earnestly wish, however, that he was in a business like yours, a business that is still in its infancy and has its future still before it. I expect some day to see motion picture films in libraries, like books. You smile when I say this, but the same was thought of other inventions in the early days. We cannot tell now what will come of the motion picture."

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS IN NEW QUARTERS.

More available and convenient quarters have been secured by the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland in Moose Hall, Walnut Street. The first meeting was held there last Tuesday afternoon, with Sam Silbert, police prosecutor, present to address the exhibitors on the relationship of the business to public welfare. The league took action several weeks ago to obtain suitable quarters, located more advantageously than those in the Columbia building. In addition to the meeting room the league was granted the privilege of using the Moose hall projecting machine at any time desired to screen a film before presenting it at their theaters.

PREPARING FOR READING BALL.

Convention Manager Ben H. Zerr, Reading, one of Pennsylvania's live-wire motion picture exhibitors, and president of the State League, has a number of original stunts up his sleeve to pull off at the convention and exhibit scheduled for Reading on June 7, 8 and 9.

An elaborate program is under way, and blueprints have been secured of the first floor of Rajah Temple, where the exhibit will take place. The rates decided upon for booths are nominal and nearly one-half the space has been sold.

At the present time Mr. Zerr is dividing his attentions between the convention and the work of the Legislative Committee, of which he is treasurer. The committee has its hands full battling for the repeal of the state censor bill.

An appeal has been sent out to every exhibitor in the state for financial support to the committee for the purpose of defraying expenses incurred in making slides and printing literature on the censorship question. Post cards were furnished to many of the picture men, and addressed to various legislators. These were filled out by patrons in a number of communities and mailed to the representatives at Harrisburg.

George W. Bennethum, secretary of the Legislative Committee, has been exceptionally busy, giving his time and attention towards accomplishing the repeal of the obnoxious law. G. W. Sahner, Pittsburgh, is chairman of this committee.

The outcome looks very favorable, and all the exhibitors are looking forward with anxiety to the time when a vote will be taken at the capital.

To Reissue Old Kalem Subjects

Four-Year Old Single-Reel Joyce and Blackwell Pictures to Be Revived.

OF DECIDED interest to the exhibitor is Kalem's announcement of its intention to reissue the single-reel dramas, released three or four years ago, which featured Carlyle Blackwell in the leading roles, supported by Miss Alice Joyce and an all-star cast. As a matter of fact, these subjects are well worthy of reissue. Recognizing the romantic atmosphere surrounding the old Spanish missions of southern California, Kalem produced some of the best photoplays of that time. It is directly due to their work in these stories that the stars mentioned owe their present popularity.

A powerful factor in causing Kalem to decide to reissue these fine old subjects has been the numerous requests received from exhibitors located in every part of the country. "Give us an opportunity to show the old Blackwell-Joyce pictures again," is the general tenor of these requests. Of course, this is undoubtedly due to the fact that the Blackwell-Joyce photoplays were tremendous drawing cards. The present popularity of the principals naturally assures exhibitors of even greater returns.

Among the subjects to be reissued are "Jean of the Jail," "The Bell of Penance," "The Higher Toll," "The Price of Ambition," "The Branded Shoulder," "The Price of Courage," "Reckless Reddy Reforms," "Rachel" and "The Suffragette Sheriff." These and other single-reel subjects, the titles of which will be announced later, will be released on alternative Fridays, and in General Film Company's Regular Service.

NASHVILLE CENSORSHIP PASSES "HYPOCRITES."

The Nashville Board of Moving Picture Censors went to a showing at the Princess Theater in that city recently, not without some misgivings on the part of interested spectators as to the outcome. Rumors had been circulated around town that there was a dissention in the board over the film and that a serious time might ensue.

It was decided by the censors to allow the play to be shown at any of the Crescent Amusement Company's theaters, the vote standing three to one for the picture. The censors present were W. J. Wallace, E. C. Faircloth, Chas. Cohn and George Brandon with J. Walker Dashield, secretary. After discussing the picture pro and con all excepting Mr. Lawrence agreed that there was a great lesson in the Bosworth picture and that they were willing for it to be presented in Nashville.

Mr. Lawrence's only objection to the play was the way Truth is portrayed, but as several ministers had viewed the photoplay and leading citizens also were present who gave it as their opinion that Truth to be truthful can be treated in no other way than by presenting it in its native and unadorned condition—otherwise it is not truth.

The play has been magnificently staged at the Fifth Avenue Theater where it was shown during the entire week.

Making the $20,000 Prize Serial

Startling Night Scenes Taken for the Big "Flying A" Production.

MISSION CANYON, one of the historic show spots of California, affords the setting for the opening scenes of the $20,000 prize photo play serial now in production at the "Flying A" studios.

Lone Star, a full-blooded American Indian, led forty of his tribe before the camera. This Indian atmosphere is considered by Director Jaccard, an especially good omen, as this forthcoming serial is financed by the North American Film Corporation, produced by the American Film Company and will be the greatest "all-American" picture yet produced in the opinion of those critics, who have gained a little inside information on present plans.

The taking of these scenes at night proved very spectacular and through the courtesy of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the "Flying A" company, hundreds of tourists sojourning in Santa Barbara and Montecito, were permitted to enjoy the proceedings from the side lines. A complete Indian village had been built in the canyon by Lone Star's people, who were brought from the Navajo reservation expressly for this picture.

The final scene taken showed a great meteor battling its way across the heavens and then striking the canyon wall with a tremendous shock, sending up a shower of fire that lighted the entire valley. These scenes will run in a prologue the action of which takes place a century before the opening of the story proper. The picture, the name of which will be announced later, will have its first release May 3.

The author is now in California summoned thither by the awarding of the $10,000 prize. To the person who later writes a solution of the mystery, which will run throughout the picture, another $10,000 prize will be awarded. It was easy for Ida Damon to win the $10,000 prize offered for the best solution of "The Million Dollar Mystery," and it will be just as easy for someone to win on this new serial.

The novelization of this photoplay will run in the Chicago Tribune and about 500 other newspapers throughout the country. An all-star cast of recognized screen favorites will carry the action of the story and no expense will be spared to make the picture live up to the plans of the producers—the greatest all-American serial.

Metro Announcement

Forecast of Initial Releases Made by President Rowland—Subjects Pronounced Satisfactory.

LITTLE has been promised by the management of the Metro Pictures Corporation regarding the character and number of subjects proposed to be offered by it or concerning the source of supply, but this week Richard A. Rowland, who is in charge of the policy of the company, gave a slight outline of the forthcoming features to be offered through the eighteen branches of the Metro.

Orrin Johnson, in "Satan Sanderson," will be the first release, followed by Adelaide Thurston and Thomas Jefferson in "The Shadows of a Great City"; S. Miller Kent and Helen Case, in "The Cowboy and the Lady," and Olga Petrova, in "The Heart of a Painted Woman." These four features will characterize the first Metro month, after which the following stars and plays will be released:

Valli Valli, the famous operatic star, in "The High Road," Mrs. Fiske's former stage play; Olive Wyndham and Lionel Barrymore, in "The Flaming Sword"; Orrin Johnson and Jane Grey, in "Fighting Bob"; Olga Petrova, in a number of her former stage triumphs; Edmund Breese, in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," Robert W. Service's vivid Alaskan poem story; S. C. Conley, in "Marse Covington," by George Ade, and William Faversham in one of his big theatrical successes.

The Metro policy of one picture a week, with four producing concerns to draw from, allows ample time and energy to be devoted to each production, so that the Metro slogan of "one quality—the best" can be carried out without fear of deviation.

At a directors' meeting, held at the offices of the Metro organization this week, the first six releases of the concern were viewed by the different exchange men and exhibitors composing the concern, and pronounced "satisfactory" in every way.

AIRDOME INCREASES SEATING CAPACITY.

The Airdome theater at Orange, Tex., has recently been enlarged, the management having added two hundred more seats. It seats 1,500. Two Power's 6a projectors are installed. Orange has a population of 8,000.

William Faversham With Rolfe

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM, perhaps one of the spoken dramas most dignified and attractive stars, has long held a foremost position among the highest class stage artists. His wide popularity, great vogue during the past fifteen years, and his exceptional dramatic ability has created for himself a name that few attain.

As "Jim Carston" in the stage production of "The Squaw Man," Mr. Faversham enjoyed great success and by reason of the remarkable performance he gave in this role, the play with numerous other men in the part, enjoyed years of prosperity after Mr. Faversham relinquished his part for newer roles.

In "The World and His Wife," which enjoyed a long run at Daly's Theater, and "The Fawn," which was selected as the artistic production of the 1911 season, Mr. Faversham again scored a tremendous success and his latest piece, "The Hawk," stayed at the Maxine Elliott Theater for seven months.

For the Rolfe-Metro organization, with which he has contracted to appear, Mr. Faversham is writing the scenario of his first subject, from the manuscript of a play that was written for him some time ago, but which he deferred producing owing to a contract calling for the immediate production of "The Hawk."

William Faversham.

The Rolfe-Metro Corporation interests are said to have agreed to pay Mr. Faversham $15,000, or more than has been paid by any picture concern to any one artist.

Work will be begun on the Faversham Rolfe-Metro production at the conclusion of the present engagement of Mr. Faversham at Chicago.

NEW YORK SIGNS PROMINENT PLAYERS.

Harry Woodruff, Dustin Farnum, H. B. Warner, and Lewis J. Cody, stellar lights in the theatrical world, recently affixed their signatures to a New York Motion Picture Corporation contract to appear in Thos. H. Ince features.

Mr. Woodruff, who is well known to the theater going public of America for his interpretation of different Shakesperean roles, and also for his wonderful success in "Mr. Brown of Harvard" received many offers from film manufacturers but rejected them all until he finally succumbed to the inducements of Thos. H. Ince and A. Kessel. This will also be Mr. Cody's first appearance in pictures. Cody was persuaded to join the ranks of photoplayers a few days ago following his appearance in Los Angeles in "The Whirl of the World." Of Dustin Farnum and H. B. Warner there is little to be said, as their work in the silent drama is well known.

Mr. Ince says that now he has the greatest collection of stars ever gotten together by one company, for in addition to the aforementioned players, there are now at the studios playing Geo. Beban, Wm. S. Hart, Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman and Walter Edwards, and with these players working in large productions it looks very much like the New York Motion Picture Corporation intends doing big things, for it is only recently that the corporation took over the large Willat studios and laboratories at Fort Lee; the building of large studios at Hollywood, Calif., is now in operation, and the Keystone and Santa Monica studios are being rebuilt. These differently located studios give the New York Motion Picture Company unsurpassed facilities for turning out the best kind of productions and for handling every conceivable kind of subject or situation.

Smalleys Back With Universal

President Laemmle Signs Two Year Contract at Universal City With Well Known Stars Formerly on Universal Program.

A TELEGRAM was received on Tuesday of last week at the New York offices of the Universal from President Laemmle, indicating that this busy individual had taken a few moments off from the festivities and functions marking the formal opening of Universal City as a municipality to transact a little outside business.

Mr. Laemmle expected to see the Smalleys when he reached California, and they had made plans to see him. It did not take them long, therefore, to come to an understanding after a conference between Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Powers. Mr. Laemmle announced that the Smalleys will resume their place on the Universal program, except that they will be used for making feature pictures rather than one reelers.

Phillips Smalley.

The acquisition of Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, as Mrs. Smalley is known in filmdom, brings back once more to the Universal a combination of personality, directing, playing and scenario writing genius which have seldom, if ever, been seen in the industry. Mr. Smalley, besides being an extremely handsome and brilliant leading man, is a thoroughly tested and competent director. Miss Weber is probably the best scenario writer and actress in the world to-day. For three years she never failed to write at least one scenario a week, which was accomplishd while playing the leads in films, and sometimes even directing them herself. Mr. Laemmle, in speaking of "The Open Shutters," the picturization of Clara Louise Burnham's famous novel, which was scenarioized by Miss Weber, calls her one of the brightest minds which he has ever met, and gives a just tribute to a genius which he had watched develop for the last four years.

Lois Weber.

The Smalleys began their connection with the Universal in the old Rex company, operating in and around New York. When the Universal became entrenched at Hollywood they were sent out there as the mainstay of the producing force, and for years they maintained that position. The brilliant manner in which they not only wrote and directed scenarios, but played the leading parts in them as well, made a deep impression upon the film world, and these two have acquired a reputation which brought down envious eyes upon them, and a little later resulted in their being captured by the Bosworth Company. While there, Miss Weber wrote and directed the feature "Hypocrites," which attracted country-wide fame and appreciation of her art in writing and directing.

Twenty years of stage experience gave Mr. Smalley his training for a successful film career. Three of these twenty years were spent in a company headed by Mrs. Fiske, three with the Savage management, one with the Shuberts, one with H. B. Harris, and one with Liebler & Co. Six months with Reliance, five with Kalem, and eighteen with Gaumont talking pictures preceded this popular man's work with Rex as both actor and director.

The Smalleys' connection with the Bosworth Company has not been happy since Hobert Bosworth left it, and their acquisition by other interests has been announced several times. However, Mr. Laemmle's telegram sets their future at rest for the next two years, and they are expected to begin work as soon as the celebration exercises at Universal City are over.

First Terriss Picture Soon

Production Being Made in Beautiful Jamaica—Strong Supporting Company.

THE date of the first release by the Tom Terriss Feature Film Company, recently formed, is soon to be announced. Members of the company to the number of twenty-five, headed by Mr. Terriss, have been in Jamaica, West Indies, for the past three or four weeks busily engaged in the making of the organization's initial photoplay, and advices received in New York from time to time are to the effect that the picture is "shaping up" in splendid fashion and will soon be ready for the market. The title has not yet been announced, following a policy which Mr. Terriss believes to be a good one, but it may be said that the picture will be an adaptation from one of the big dramatic successes of established worth for which the well known Dickensonian impersonator holds the rights.

Among the people mentioned as supporting members in the Terriss company who have already established themselves as favorites, are: Miss Mildred Devorez, Miss Ethel Mitchell, Rienzi de Cordova, Lionel Pape, Rodney Hickok, and Charles Mather. In private life Miss Deverez is Mrs. Tom Terriss, and it may be said of her dramatic dance interpretations, both in the United States and England, Miss Deverez has established a reputation scarcely less brilliant than is that of her husband, whose forte has so long been the interpretation of characters created by Dickens. Miss Mitchell's motion picture experience has been with the western Lubin company, the Pathe company, and various independent feature producing organizations, among them the World Film Corporation for whom she played an opposite lead in Searle Dawley's "A Daughter of the People," with Laura Sawyer. Rienzi de Cordova will be recalled as having done notable work for the Kalem and other prominent companies. Lionel Pape has supported Mr. Terriss in photoplays which he has made. Rodney Hickok has had quite an important part in the production of feature photoplays for the Brady company, the Shuberts, the Sawyer Film Corporation, and the Box Office Attraction Company. Mr. Mather's previous picture work has been for the Edison and Thanhouser companies.

NEW PICTURE HOUSE FOR HOPKINSVILLE.

The Co-Operative Photo Plays Theater Company of Hopkinsville, Ky. recently filed its articles of incorporation. The company will build a moving picture theater on Anderson lot in Main street on which they have recently taken a long lease. The dimensions of the lot are 70 by 190 feet. It is proposed to have the entrance to the theater 50 feet wide by 20 feet deep, and it will be built almost entirely of marble. It is said that the seating capacity of the structure will be 1,200. Under each seat will be found a small grating through which the interior will be heated or cooled. While it is designed to erect the new structure primarily as a motion picture house, it is the intention of the Co-Operative company to put on road shows whenever they can book a good one. With this end in view the company will have a stage 40 feet deep by 65 feet wide built.

PATHE NEWS GETS FEATURES.

Recent issues of the Pathe Weekly News has contained some interesting features of unusual news value. Among them were scenes concerning the arrival of the German auxiliary cruiser Prince Eitel Friederich at Newport News with its prisoners, including the crew of the American vessel William P. Frey; the launching of the new super-dreadnaught, Pennsylvania, the greatest battleship afloat, at Newport News and the mobilization of Italian troops. The Pathe people claim to have shown these features far in advance of any of their competitors.

Brockliss on European Conditions

Lubin's London Representative Tells of Effect of the War on the Picture Business.

J. FRANK BROCKLISS, European representative of the Lubin Company, and a widely known authority on film conditions abroad, has arrived in this country for a brief visit and is making his headquarters at the main office of the Lubin Company in Philadelphia. Asked concerning film conditions abroad Mr. Brockliss said:

"The war, naturally, hit everything on the other side hard Take the allied countries—France, Belgium and Russia, for instance. In France, cinematograph business is practically nil because of the war. When I was in Paris recently the general air of sadness prevented one from even thinking of cinematographs or any other amusement. In Belgium, which has always been a good field, business is dead. Russia has always been a difficult country to handle because of its great distance from London and the Russian method of doing business with long extended bills which are hard to collect. We did a good business there with Lubin films before the war, but when war was declared business was cut down. At present, however, it is beginning to pick up again.

J. Frank Brockliss.

"I can tell you little about Germany or Austria, for all our business there was cut off short and I lost quite a lot of money by it. I am doing business in Spain. In Scandinavia, business is possible, but transportation of film is difficult. Switzerland is in about the same class with Spain. Business with Italy is dead, the loss of parcels in transportation renders the shipment of film impossible. China is beginning to use the Lubin pictures and in Japan and India business is about the same. The Lubin Colonial business is quite as satisfactory as it was last year.

"Conditions in England are quite different from those on the continent. Our motto at home is 'Business as Usual,' and owing to the fact that I have been one of the upholders of that policy since the European conflagration began, my aim has been to keep my usual weekly turnover—cost what it will. I am glad to say that the amount of film I am selling now compares very favorably with what I sold last year at this time and this in spite of the war.

"No, I am not afraid to make some figures. For instance, the total of my sales for the Lubin Company this month amounts to an average for Great Britain and the colonies of just over 100,000 feet every week, and please bear in mind this does not include Australia, which is quite a good field, but is excluded from these figures as Lubin films are despatched to Australia directly from Philadelphia.

"There is no doubt that much of this success has been due to the Lubin pictures—such pictures, for instance, as "When the Earth Trembled" being tremendously popular throughout England. While I am here I am going to look over all the new subjects that are being made at the Lubin plant. What I have already seen has astounded me, and it gives me great pleasure that among the subjects I have seen are so many that have great sale possibilities in England. Most of us differ, of course, on what we like in pictures, but remember I look at the subject from a sales point of view. I'm delighted that the Lubin Company is producing such a great number of sensational and emotional subjects, for which there is a big demand at home. The subjects which have the greatest success in Great Britain are films of especially sensational character. The greater the sensation the greater the sale in the open market. We do not require for the open market films of greater length than two thousand feet, and if a subject is two thousand feet long it must be very strong indeed, especially from a sensational point of view. If it isn't it will only bring a poor sale. To get home a good sale it is necessary that a film should have a strong story and at least two or three sensational "punches."

"Films of three thousand feet to four thousand feet long I deal with on the exclusive market which is becoming of greater importance than the open market in Great Britain, but there is no demand for the five, six and seven thousand footer at all in our country unless it is something colossal.

"Taken as a whole the cinematograph trade in England is still in such shape that we have nothing much to complain of. London being in darkness on account of the anticipated visit of the Zeppelins, the London picture houses are doing rather a poor business because there is no greater dampener than dull lamps to indicate a show, and everyone knows what a great advertising asset light is. Everything is done to prevent light shining upward. Anyone passing his first evening in London is quite bewildered by such a state of affairs. It is wonderful how easily we get used to darkness and we are doing all we can to live up to the motto of "Business as Usual." On the other hand, in England we have a great many thousands of refugees from all parts of the continent, both rich and poor, and cinematographs, being a cheap form of amusement, are benefitted by this increased observation and the provincial shows generally are all doing good business.

"On account of the big advance I have seen at the Lubin factory my first business on my return will be to increase considerably the strength of my organization and advertising to cope properly with the big business we shall certainly do with the new Lubin films."

Muriel Ostriche

MURIEL OSTRICHE who is featured in the Chas. K. Harris photoplay "When It Strikes Home," of which Grace Washburn is the star, is still under twenty (and a nice and pretty girl at that), but she has condensed into her few hundred days of work before the camera a great deal of hard and perilous adventuring. Of German origin, she was educated at the New York Wadleigh High School for Girls and became a leading lady at 17, being a discovery of the late Charles J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Company, who made her the star of a special brand of films, "The Princess," in which she appeared for two years. Then Carroll Fleming directed her in Thanhouser pictures, and her work at New Rochelle led to her becoming a member of the Eclair stock company.

Muriel Ostriche.

Muriel's beauty and popularity are proverbial. She is a clever and versatile actress, and easy to direct. Her tractability before the camera is one of her valuable assets, her intrepidity constitutes her a veritable picture heroine.

Muriel Ostriche's devotion to duty recently temporarily struck her blind. This pretty girl who is famous for her fearlessness, whom nothing daunts, who has risked her life time and again under the edicts of her directors and in order to entertain and amuse the public, ran yet another serious risk recently.

Working in the picture "When It Strikes Home," which Charles K. Harris is producing, for release through the World Film Corporation, Miss Ostriche had to pose in the immensely powerful artificial light of the studio for a close up. The fierce rays instantly paralysed her power of vision and she was totally blind for twelve hours. Miss Ostriche, however, has recovered and gone back to work. She is the object of mingled sympathy and congratulations, for Miss Ostriche is popular and everybody wishes her continued success in her motion picture work.

The dangers that pretty actresses are compelled to encounter strike home, don't they?

Opening of Universal City.

Blaisdell Tells Interesting Story of the Festivities So Auspiciously Begun But So Tragically Ended.

By the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

Los Angeles, March 19.

THE big days of Monday and Tuesday at Universal City are of the past, and the hive of industry out in the San Fernando Valley is pursuing the even tenor of its way. Not much work was attempted on these two days by any of the sixteen companies making pictures in the white city. On Monday the New Yorkers sojourning in this Southern California city realized the difference in their geographical position. The official maximum temperature was 84. Out in the valley undoubtedly it was higher. The heat, however, put no damper on the enthusiasm of the thousands who followed Messrs. Laemmle, Powers and Cochrane through the gates not long after 10 o'clock. There were ceremonies preceding this; and of these a flag raising constituted a part.

Then followed a review of cavalry, cowboys and Indians and an inspection of the big stage, on which were grouped the directors and their companies. Over on the back ranch Henry McRae staged a flood scene, in which a frontier village was wiped out by the waters flowing from a 60,000-gallon reservoir. Luncheon in the big restaurant preceded the viewing of battle scenes staged by Francis Ford. Al Christie's Nestor Company put on a courtroom farce, and the Joker forces entertained. There can be no question as to the interest in Los Angeles in the opening of Universal City. The hundreds of automobiles parked about the grounds and the thousands of persons present fully attest to this.

In the evening there was a ball in the electric studio. The grand march was led by Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Powers, Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Bernstein. After pictures had been taken, all the floor lamps were removed, leaving ample space for dancing. At the end of the building a large illuminated horseshoe served as a gateway to a finely staged reception room. From the converted ballroom there was nothing to indicate that the roof of this annex was the sky. All of the company's players were present and among them the latest additions to the playing and producing forces of Universal City, Gene Gauntier and Jack Clark. The new leading woman and her director were busy making the personal acquaintance of their associates and receiving felicitations. Warren Kerrigan, who was accompanied by his mother and sister, sought out Miss Gauntier and extended a hearty welcome. Miss Mary Pickford, accompanied by Owen Moore and James Kirkwood, made a brief visit. Hobart Bosworth and Mrs. Bosworth were prominent among the dancers. So, too, were Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber.

Tuesday was general inspection day. There was luncheon at the western restaurant at noon, followed by spectacular leaps from the "Wall of Lucknow" by Mr. Polo and company. On the back ranch Francis Ford won a half-mile horse race for the Mrs. Julia Cochrane trophy. The rodeo followed and made a lot of fun. Jane Bernoudez, champion girl roper, gave an exhibition of her skill with the lariat, and later engaged in a spirited horse race with Marie Wolcamp. Henry McRae took many chances on a broken neck in an unsuccessful attempt to master a diminutive incorrigible equine. There was fancy riding, and there were exhibitions of "broncho busting," Indian races—enjoyed apparently not even as much by the spectators as by the participants; relay races, mounted potato race, which was most amusing, and other events.

Then the field was cleared for the aeroplane battle which was to terminate so tragically, and the details of which were printed in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World. Aviator Frank Stites had been troubled by the vagaries of the breeze that swept into the valley through a pass to the south. If he could clear a spur just beyond the little canyon in question it was believed all would be well. To a good take-off he slowly climbed to the danger point and cleared it by a safe margin. He turned to the north and came back above the field, retracing his course over the initial route. Again he crossed the danger point, this time seemingly close to the ground. Then away to the north, climbing steadily, returning at a height of many hundred feet. The aeroplane was in perfect control as the aviator in turning at the southern point sharply banked his machine and came down toward the wire-suspended dummy plane at great speed and at a stiff angle.

From in front it seemed as if Stites had come too close to the object of attack. I have been told that while the airman had asked for a clearance of but fifty feet between his machine and the dummy before the flash powder was ignited the director waited until three times that distance separated the real machine and the imitation. Following the flash, the head of the machine was thrown upward, to such an angle that control seemed to be lost. The plane came to a stop and fell sideways. That Stites never lost his presence of mind is proved by his jumping from the seat of the machine that landed on the ground upside down. The still figure of the airman was rushed to the hospital, where a pulmotor was vainly employed to restore the life that had passed as Stites struck the ground.

President Laemmle, who with all the other witnesses of the tragedy was overwhelmed by it, immediately declared off all further official celebration of the opening of the city. There had been scheduled for Tuesday evening an elaborate dinner and a dance at Nat Goodwin's Cafe at Santa Monica, for which 150 covers were laid. Owing to lack of knowledge of the suspension of the program three or four score of persons went to the restaurant. Dinner was served informally to those who had traveled the long distance.

P. A. Powers Host to Carl Laemmle.

P. A. Powers had planned for Wednesday evening a dinner in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Laemmle, and owing to the fact that it was a private function it was determined to carry out the original intentions. The favors and decorations, which were symbolic of St. Patrick's day, had all been brought from New York City by Mr. Powers. The setting revealed as the diners entered the banquet room in the Hotel Alexandria was one unique in the history of the film industry.

After the diners were seated, a troupe of singers, dressed in Irish costume, paraded about the room singing the songs of the Emerald Isle. Laura Oakley, chief of police of the new film city, began singing "Universal City, California," and before she was well started there were strung out behind her and singing with her many of the diners.

The proceedings were temporarily upset by the appearance of ten girls, garbed in green and white and bearing golden baskets filled with flowers. George Giblyn eloquently introduced each of these to the host of the evening, identifying them by the counties of Kerry, Limerick, Tyrone, Donegal, Killarney, Down, Cork—and the geographical division "never discovered by the Irish kings," County Laemmle; Roscammon, and then the county of Mr. Powers, Waterford, at the mention of which there was hearty applause.

There were insistent calls for a speech from the host. "I have tried to find out what the three leaves of the shamrock represent," said Mr. Powers, as he held aloft the great walking stick of Irish wood which Mr. Giblyn had presented him on behalf of his friends. "I learn that they stand for friendship, love and truth, which I hope will be the symbol of the Universal from this time on. I suppose it is a hard thing to combine friendship, love and truth in the film business, but I think we can round them up. I hope from now on this will be our motto: 'Friendship, love and truth'."

George Magie, who officiated as toastmaster, then presented to Mr. Powers a set of resolutions which had been signed by those present.

Otis Turner, the dean of the Universal directors, on behalf of the employees of the company, pledged increased effort for the good of the Universal. Henry McRae gave a recitation, told a story and made a speech which was warmly applauded. Joe Chappelle and H. L. Donnegan also spoke. Mary Pickford, who sat at the guest table, paid a compliment to the guest of honor and also to the host, and was cheered. Mrs. Isadore Bernstein expressed the love she bore those who worked under her husband. A voice inquired, "How about those over him?" There was handclapping when she quickly retorted, "Not a bit more." Jack Kerrigan and Isadore Bernstein followed.

Carl Laemmle was the next speaker. "I want to tell our friend, Mr. Powers, that I certainly appreciate the little party he is giving," said the president of the company. "It was mighty nice. I didn't expect it of him." Mr. Laemmle led the laughter he plainly expected to arouse. "I also take the opportunity to thank him and the ladies and gentlemen who have come all the way here to attend the opening," he continued, "and I want to assure them I will never forget the days I have spent in their company.

"Of course, you all know we have had our little business troubles, but these are all ancient history." Mr. Laemmle then told a joke on Mr. Powers—a one-sided one, he admitted. There had been a deal, it seems, which came out askew. "Mr. Powers wanted me to come across with my share, but I could not see it that way," said Mr. Laemmle. "It looked like another squabble. So as I wanted to have peace in the family I remarked to Mr. Powers, 'Pat, now you are a good sport; let us match for my share, $7,500. You match me.' He tried to do it and he didn't."

A riot of laughter followed as Mr. Powers, plainly alluding to a story with a racial touch, previously told by Mr. McRae, said with a wry face: "That was where he got the Irishman's money."

The lights were then lowered and the party enjoyed the exhibition of four thousand feet of pictures taken during the trip across the country and of the chief events of the ceremonies attending the opening. As in the backgrounds there were often included some of the chief scenic spots of the continental trip, the pictures have decided interest other than a personal one. At the close, Mr. Powers and Mr. Laemmle shared congratulations on a most pleasurable evening.

Thursday evening there was a "brickbat and bouquet" stag dinner at the Alexandria, attended by the Universal exchange men and the producing directors, at which there was a frank exchange of views as to what is best for the program. BLAISDELL.

Bessie Eyton

THE story of the career of Bessie Eyton seems to fracture all the accepted rules of the game. Her biography is "something different." Her progress has been made in spite of the lack of tradition and the training which are deemed essential to the success of every actress. Here is a leading woman who is yet a mere girl in years; who had no stage experience prior to entering the silent drama; who never has set foot out of her native state; who cannot trace a single actor, actress, or dramatist in her ancestry; who just "grew up" in the great outdoors of California without any knowledge of a big city until she came in "off the range" to act before the camera and who is red-headed! Can you beat it?

Bessie Eyton.

Yet there is no more accomplished actress on the screen today than Bessie Eyton. She is just naturally an actress. Born in the quaint sea-girt town of Santa Barbara, where more of the old Spanish atmosphere lingers than in any other spot in the Golden State, Bessie Eyton grew up between the high mountains and the blue Pacific. So she became equally at home riding the mountainous cattle ranges of the Santa Ynez, or swimming by the hour in the warm southern seas. As a swimmer she is renowned the length of the Pacific Coast. Some of her most daring feats are those in which she dived from the high decks of ocean steamers at sea, or rescued near-perishing actors from pounding surf, or brought jewels from the bottom of some bay, in the course of her photoplay work.

Another line of work in which Miss Eyton has made a wonderful impression on the public is the wild animal jungle-zoo photoplays. She is unequaled in daring and hesitates at almost nothing in her acting with the Selig Jungle-Zoo wild beasts.

Emotional leads of the more refined type, and character studies which bring out the compelling feminity of her own nature, are her favorites; and it is on these that she is building up her really lasting artistic fame. There is no sweeter or more refined feminine personality to be found in Filmland today than that of Bessie Eyton, endeared to the hearts of Filmland's multitudes through her convincing character delineations as presented in Selig photoplays.

CONTRACTS FOR LONG LINE OF KLEINE FEATURES.

Emil F. Johnson, manager of the Empress Theater, Freemont, Nebr., has just closed a large contract with George Kleine which calls for eleven successive Kleine Features, starting with "Officer 666." The list will include the famous classics and all the modern productions. The Empress Theater is a new house and opens March 26th.

Pathe Freres' New Executive Offices

General Offices of the Great Picture Company Have Been Moved from Jersey City to 25 West 45th Street, New York's Uptown Business Center.

By H. C. Judson.

ONE can find significance according to his knowledge of the picture business and his imagination in the choice that the Pathe Freres has made in the site of its new executive offices. The street, especially as one comes westward from Fifth avenue, decidedly impresses one as being a distingushed business center. It is a different atmosphere from Broadway; it is markedly financial and not at all Bohemian or theatrical. The building has that about it that puts one who enters it on his most aristocratic behavior. It suggests a merchant prince kind of prosperity; has an air of conservative finance and well-assured prosperity.

He takes the elevator to the eleventh floor and steps at once into the big main office. A neat railing marks off plenty of space for the reception of the company's guests and while waiting one is interested and somewhat impressed by the busy scenes on the inner side of the railing. He can see in the distance to the right and left, doors leading into the private offices, on which he will notice names of prominent officers of the company. Comfortably filling all the clearly lighted space are desks and tables at which stenographers and accountants and artists are as busily at work as one would have any right to expect. He may notice too that there are two cashiers booths and may wonder why, for it is quite unusual. It happens that in this general office both Pathe Freres and the Pathe Exchange do business. The former is subject to the French laws under which it is incorporated, while the latter is a wholly American concern and as such is differently regulated, so it seems that the two must keep accounts entirely separate and the two cashiers gratings and pay windows facilitate this.

The first office on the right hand side of the main room is naturally given to Charles Pathe, the head of the business, and the fountain head of the company's authority in America. Directly across the space and as far to the left as possible is the office of the Vice-President, Charles Dupuis. This office is also occupied by General Manager Louis Gasnier, who has been director in chief of Pathe productions.

The only film that is handled on 45th Street is that which is bought and there is a committee of six or seven to whose judgment it is all submitted. To give this committee facilities there are three finely appointed projection rooms. A good space is also set apart for a bench with rewinding apparatus for cutting film and near this is a vault for storing it. The assistant managing director, M. Ramerez-Torres, also has an office. The Pathe program and special pictures are not shown here, but as formerly in the 23d Street offices from which the general distribution of offerings is carried on. This is in charge of Jules Burnstein.

The auditing department is, of course, located at 45th Street. Mr. Wessel, the auditor in chief, who has among other duties, charge of the entire pay roll of the company in the United States, is here, as is R. F. Furman, general superintendent of exchanges, and J. K. Burger, comptroller. Publicity expert P. A. Parsons, who showed the World man around the different points of interest, also has an office here and sends out the "dope" about the company's product and its players.

Fine Offices for Paramount

New Building on Forty-first Street Said to Be the Only One of Its Kind in New York—Sumptuous Furnishings.

UNLESS there is some unforeseen delay, the Paramount Pictures Corporation will move into the new five-story Wurlitzer Building, at 120-122 West Forty-first street, early in April. The Paramount offices will utilize all of the space on the second, third and fourth floors, whereas the fifth floor will be given over to the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. In every respect, the building has been designed to meet the needs of film concerns, and probably there will be no finer offices in New York than those soon to be furnished for the use of Paramount.

According to the architects, Maynicke & Franke, the building is the first of its kind to be erected in New York. It is of reinforced concrete with flat slabs, and constructed after the cantilever system that places the entire weight on six columns and relieves the side walls of any burden. This does away with girders. The front of the building is of reinforced concrete, faced with terra cotta. Botticino and green Alpine marble are used in the spacious vestibule, and the wood trim is mahogany. An effort has been made to more than comply with the fire regulations by making the structure so safe that in the event of new laws being placed on the statute books no alterations will be required.

The space secured for the Paramount offices is approximately 50 by 40 feet on each of the three floors. On the right-hand side, as one enters the building, are the elevators and the stairway. The second floor will be partitioned off to give the Famous Players Exchange, now located at 71 West Twenty-third street, the front half, while the rear will be used by the advertising department of Paramount. The office of the Famous Players Exchange will be on the west side of the third floor, facing Forty-first street; adjoining this office will be the accounting department; in the center of the room a space has been marked off for stenographers and such cabinets as they may need, whereas in the rear there will be room for members of the Paramount advertising department that cannot be accommodated on the floor below.

While all of the offices will be expensively furnished, the greatest attention will be paid to those on the fourth floor, to be occupied by the officers of Paramount. In the front, space has been allotted to rooms for William W. Hodkinson, president of the corporation, Raymond Pawley and W. A. Brock. A large reception room will occupy the center of the floor; in the rear there will be a projection room and a directors' room, and running along the east wall will be vaults, cabinets and files. Professional decorators are preparing plans for the decoration of the rooms on this floor that are to be furnished regardless of expense. Costly rugs and draperies are to be used in the creation of an effective color scheme, and radiators and pipes will be concealed behind ornamental coverings. An automatic sprinkler system has been installed on every floor. Communication between all of the Paramount offices will be made simple and convenient by dictaphones.

When plans were first drawn for the new building, it was estimated that the three floors would offer more space than Paramount would need; but since then business has increased to such an extent that the offices at 110 West Fortieth street probably will be retained for the use of several departments that cannot be conveniently placed in the new quarters.

J. C. Graham Makes Record Trip

New United Head Visits Cleveland, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Detroit and Chicago at High Speed.

TELEPHONES, telegrams and limited trains were used to such excellent advantage by J. C. Graham, president and general manager of the United Film Service, when he made a sudden decision to visit some of the distributing offices of the United, that he had left headquarters and returned before many of his lieutenants learned of his absence from New York.

Cleveland was the fist stop, and W. M. Williams, of the United Film Service of that city, had arranged for a conference which included many of the United men of his territory. Mr. Williams then accompanied Mr. Graham to Indianapolis, where S. B. Kramer, of the Indianapolis office, was joined in a meeting of his right-hand men, after which he accompanied Mr. Graham and Mr. Williams to Cincinnati.

H. M. Coffey of the Cincinnati office, had completed the details of a conference at which the new policy and plans of the United were discussed at length and a campaign decided upon which promises to make the Ohio and Indiana territory an interesting spot for the live film man to keep his weather eye on.

Detroit, where Nicholas Palley keeps the affairs of the United well in hand, was next visited and arrangements for a new office to help handle the fast growing business of the Michigan territory started under way.

In spite of the fact that D. J. Chatkin of the United office in Chicago, was away on his usual trip, Chicago was included in the president's itinerary, and A. A. Chatkin, assistant manager and brother of D. J. Chatkin, was joined in an important conference which included the representatives of the Wisconsin and northern Ilinois territory. A large part of this territory has been under the supervision of the Chicago office, but new offices are soon to be opened because of increasing business.

President Graham was delighted with the evidence he received at first hand that the exhibitors in the territory visited are showing a remarkably live interest in the new one-and-two-reel production-policy of the United Film Service. New accounts are being received at a surprisingly rate of increase in all of the exchanges and the comments on the quality of the productions offered are most flattering.

DAVID HORSLEY BUILDING NEW STUDIO.

David Horsley is building a new studio at Horsley Park in connection with the Bostock Animal show which he recently installed in that city in order that he may use the animals of the show in making pictures. The plan is unique in that the camera is set on a solid concrete foundation and can be turned to bear upon each of the eight stages which surround it, enabling the director to pass from one scene to another without delay. Two of these studios will be used for animal pictures exclusively, and are equipped with cages, trap doors and passage ways for the animals. Provision is also made for the operation of the Horsley double exposure cameras to the best advantage.

RELEASE DATES CHANGED.

"The Once Over," a rollicking one-part "Beauty" comedy, has been substituted for the drama, "Dreams Realized," which was announced by the American Film Co. for release April 6th.

A Notable Cast in "The Unbroken Road"

THE Life Photo Film Corporation have just completed their five-part drama, "The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde," and have completed the casting for their next production, "The Unbroken Road," by Thomas Dickinson, Professor of Literature of the University of Wisconsin.

The cast in "The Unbroken Road" is unusual, in that it contains legitimate and photoplay stars throughout the entire list. The cast is headed by Mary Nash, late star of the Belasco forces, who took the leading role in the stage production, "The Woman."

Miss Nash is supported by William H. Tooker, male lead of the Life Photo forces, and Alexander Gaden, former lead of the Universal Film Company, also Thomas O'Keefe, Charles Graham, Arthur Morrison, Walter James, Edna Spence, Frank Dufrane, Nellie Dent, James F. Ayres, Joseph Baker, Sue Balfour and little Pauline Curley, who is now appearing in the legitimate production "Polygamy."

Mary Nash.

Miss Nash, in her first season, supported Ethel Barrymore in "Alice, Sit by the Fire," and in the revival of "Capt. Jinks," "Cousin Kate," "His Excellency, the Governor," "Carrots" and the new production of Galeworthy's "The Silver Box." Her second season, she was leading woman for Andrew Mack and supported Mary Mannering. Clyde Fitch, in observing Miss Nash's performance in "The City," stated that she was the only girl he could find who could handle the part of "Cecily," a part calling for a girl of 14 years of age in the first act, and immense emotional work in the second act.

Miss Nash played in Belasco's production, "The Woman," taking the leading role of "Wanda Kelly," the telephone operator. She played in "The Lure" throughout its entire run in New York, and lately played the leading role with Lou-Tellegen.

The contract with Miss Nash was entered into after she had considered various tempting offers from other large motion picture producers in the country.

William H. Tooker, it will be recalled, has taken the leads in "The Banker's Daughter," "The Greyhound," "Northern Lights," "Capt. Swift" and "The Ordeal," prior releases of the Life Photo Film Corporation.

Alexander Gaden, formerly leading man of the Universal Co. under the Imp brand, first took up his work with the Famous Players' Co. and then joined the forces of the Vitagraph Co. Mr. Gaden has won popularity contests conducted by several newspapers in this country. He first received his theatrical experience, taking such parts as "Jack Rance," "Raffles," "John Strong," "Strongheart" and "D'Artagnan."

The Life Photo Film Corporation started work on "The Unbroken Road" last Monday, and it is expected that it will take five weeks to complete the production. The photoplay itself will have an allegorical prologue and an epilogue based upon mythology.

A BROADWAY STAR FEATURE THRILL.

In "Pawns of Mars," an imaginative story of war between two mythical countries, written by Donald I. Buchanan, Director Theodore Marston blew up an armored automobile, using four sticks of dynamite. To film the explosion a three-sided barricade of logs, lined with sheet-iron and roofed over with the same material, was placed within fifty feet of the automobile to be blown up. Cameraman Reggie Lyons took his position in this shelter and although the barricade was literally bombarded by bits of flying metal, the camera escaped injury and two hundred feet of excellent negative was taken. "Pawns of Mars" is listed as a four-part Broadway Star Feature that will have its initial showing at the Vitagraph Theater.

Sol. Lesser

BACK in 1912 Sol. Lesser invaded New York to buy a program of films for the Golden Gate film exchange which was owned by him and Lester Kahn. They were after the Film Supply Co. program, which was then operating in opposition to the Universal. Harry Raver was general manager of the Film Supply Co., and not knowing the 'Frisco boys by reputation, suggested that five thousand dollars be deposited as a guarantee of good faith that thirty releases per week would be consumed and paid for, C. O. D., for a period of one year. This was a pretty stiff contract at that time, but the papers were drawn up and the money deposited. Lesser not only fulfilled his contract, but he bought in addition nearly every important feature issued on a state rights basis from that day to this, and has never haggled over price. "From Colorado to the Coast" is Lesser's territory, with promises of extending eastward in the near future. Twice each year he comes to New York to look over films. Mrs. Lesser came with him a year ago, but Sol. managed to attend to business while they "honeymooned." A few weeks ago he came again but, this time, alone, for the good wife was back home "minding the baby," their first born. Sol. says he is happy in his brand new parental atmosphere.

Sol. Lesser.

Among the films exploited by Lesser in his territory were: The Mutual Program, Film Supply Program, "Paul Rainey's African Hunt," "The Christian," The All-Star Feature Corp. Releases, The Alco Program and a great many important films in addition.

He is a franchise holder in the New Metro program, also handles the Life Photo releases.

Lesser was the first exchange man to secure the Picture theater exploitation of the Itala Co.'s "Cabiria." Harry Raver promised the big production to him when the film first came over. "Cabiria" in Lesser's hands has broken all film records on the coast. Subsequent Itala releases are also being pushed by Lesser's offices; in fact, Raver has sold every Itala release during the past three years to this enterprising young Californian.

GEORGE E. EMERSON, PHONOGRAPH EXPERT, DEAD.

George E. Emerson, a pioneer in the record making departments of the phonographic industry, died at his home in Newark, N. J., on Thursday afternoon. He had been identified with the experimental branches in the laboratories of various phonographic companies. With his brothers, Victor Emerson (now general manager of the Columbia Phonograph Co.), and Clyde Emerson, of the same company, he began experiments twenty-five years ago.

When the Cameraphone was first launched, combining the phonograph with motion pictures, he was placed in charge of the record department and the success attained by the "Talking Pictures" was in a great measure due to his knowledge and ability.

He made notable productions of the "Mikado, ""Chimes of Normandie," "Pinafore," "Quo Vadis." "Corsican Brothers," with stars like Montgomery Irving, Robert Broderick, Will Armstrong, Will S. Rising, Phin Nares and Hattie Delaro. He leaves a widow and four children.

"Censorship in England"

By Frank Fowell and Frank Palmer.

FEW volumes contributory to the history of the stage of England contain so much interesting and readable material as this work of Messrs. Frank Fowell and Frank Palmer, entitled "Censorship in England." The book is rich both in historic and anecdotal lore. It traces the history of British censorship from the old King of the Carnival, or Lord of Misrule, or Master of Revels, or Abbot of Unreason, from pre-Reformation times down to the present moment. The original censor was really no censor at all, but rather a "Master of Ceremonies," who arranged the program for such festivities as accompanied the end of Lent in the old Catholic days.

Quite a different office was that of the "Master of Revels" from which the censor of the stage play of modern times is developed. The Master of Revels was charged with superintending masks, plays and entertainments of all kinds. The record of the Master of Revels in the great periods of English history is one of the really genuine human documents of literature. Of course, the censor reflects the spirit of the period in which he held office. Thus, the censor in the days of the Tudor dynasty was often arbitrary and always very jealous for the maintenance of royal authority; but he was not altogether illiberal, and allowed something for the necessity of recreation. There was little to do for the censor in the days of Cromwell, for the Puritan was the avowed foe of all entertainments that might divert his attention from what he liked to contemplate best, i. e., the misery of this life and the wrath of God. With the Restoration came a new spirit into the office of censorship. Indeed, you might say that censorship and the spirit of the Restoration were really quite exclusive of each other. There can be little doubt that the censor erred on the side of the licentious in the days of the Merry Monarch. The book then goes on to deal with Jeremy Collier, whose name is famous in English history. All through the work runs, like a thin red thread, the story of the inherent viciousness of the principals of censorship.

We wish we had time within the narrow limits of this hasty review to make room for some of the most amusing anecdotes and historical events which are recounted at such length and with such piquancy in the volume itself. The exhibitions of the censor in the ridiculous art of straining at gnats and swallowing camels are uniformly amusing.

The book contains many admirable things in its appendix, notably a brilliant speech made by Lord Chesterfield in the House of Lords against the proposed licensing of stage plays. A more eloquent plea for the liberty of expression has rarely been heard. There are, of course, all through the book many reductions ad absurdum which make the censor appear in a most ludicrous light. Special mention must be made of the style of the authors which is lucid, brilliant and richly fraught with humor. There is not a page in this book that we have not read with interest and profit, and we certainly feel justified in recommending it to all who are interested in the history and development of the censorship idea in the country of our forefathers.

THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST CENSORSHIP.

J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship has just returned from an extended trip in the Middle West, where he was kept busy following the trail of legalized censorship and killing the monster in its legislative lair. He reports that the censorship bills in the States of Indiana, Michigan, Iowa and Missouri have been killed. Bills introduced in the States of Tennessee, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Delaware and Massachusetts have also been defeated. He says that great credit for this splendid work is due to the organized exhibitors who have everywhere come to the front and made a most vigorous and intelligent campaign against every form of legalized censorship. He also mentions the splendid co-operation between exchangemen and exhibitors.

OPINION OF THE WORLD ENDORSED.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City:

Dear Sir—Please accept my thanks, as an exhibitor, for the stand that you have had the courage to take regarding "The Nigger." I saw its presentation at the Strand and was astonished that any board of censors should have passed it. It is such features as this that give the advocates of censorship their greatest arguments, and the sooner our exhibitors and trade papers frown down such productions the better for the moving picture industry. Very truly yours,

F. W. McCLINTIC, Manager.

Donald Mackenzie.

SOME sixteen or seventeen years ago, in one of those sections of the Scottish Highlands so remote that Gaelic is still spoken and the old men still tell legends their fathers told them of "Prince Charlie," an English nobleman leased several thousand acres of land for the shooting. Arriving at the tiny village on the property which he had leased, he sought information as to the best man available for him to hire to accompany him on his shooting trips. The answer he received was the same from each man he asked, "Donald Mackenzie is a guid mon." The Englishman sought out the popular favorite and found a square jawed, square set young fellow of some seventeen or eighteen years old who vowed with quiet confidence that he could give satisfaction. That was the parting of the ways for the Scotch boy. When the season ended the young man bade farewell to home and parents and accompanied the nobleman to London.

Donald Mackenzie.

There the education of the Scotch boy went on apace. It was found that he had a splendid bass voice and he was much in demand at private musicales. One day a prominent theatrical man heard him and offered him an operatic engagement at Daly's Theater in London to play the part of Lord Enchester in "The Country Girl." He accepted and made good in the role, and so was secured by the late Augustin Daly to play the same part in the United States.

Mr. Mackenzie tells with gusto how he got his first big chance. He had made it a rule to understudy every big part to which he was suited and one night he was playing in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," when W. T. Carleton, who was playing the General, became seized with heart failure in the biggest scene of all, staggered to the wings and then fell. Quick as a flash our Scotchman shot out to the front, took up the part where it had been left off, and to the amazement of the company finished the act in that part without making a single error.

The next day Mr. Carleton showed his gratitude by raising Mr. Mackenzie's salary and giving him the part. A friendship sprang up between the two which has endured through the years and which was shown by Mr. Mackenzie giving to Mr. Carleton the part of the Governor in his fine picture, "The Pardon."

Mr. Mackenzie has been associated with Pathe for over three years as actor and producer. In the "Perils of Pauline" he not only appeared in several episodes as "the pirate" (a part which made a big hit), but he directed the production of many of the episodes himself. His most recent production was the fine three-part Pathe drama, "The Pardon."

JOHN HARDING JOINS KLEINE.

John Harding, formerly manager of Pathe's Chicago office, has joined the Kleine forces and will assume charge of George Kleine's Dallas office. He succeeds Harry Scott, resigned. John Harding is one of the best known film men in the United States and has been actively identified with the business for many years. He was one of the first men in Chicago to enter the film business, having handled the department for Montgomery, Ward & Company in the early days when that institution formed an important factor in the distribution of machines and pictures. He spent ten years with the Edison Company in the capacity of Chicago manager, and later as assistant to Mr. Plympton in the studio at New York.

WALLER INVENTS PRINTING MACHINE.

Fred Waller, Jr., motion picture director, has applied for a patent on a machine designed to print reproductions of still pictures at a rate of 1000 per hour, it being possible to print eight different subjects at once.

LOBBY PICTURES OF LASKY PLAYERS.

The Lasky Feature Play Company has recently made arrangements to provide oil paintings of Blanche Sweet to exhibitors at prices never before made in this country. The painting is a real work of art, showing Miss Sweet at full length, seated, and very attractively posed. The size is sixty inches high and thirty-six inches wide, and the frame is of three inch gold bronze oak moulding. In order that the painting may be more durable it is mounted on compo board and should last indefinitely. These paintings may be had by exhibitors all framed and precisely as described at a price of only $19.50 f. o. b. New York. That is to say, the out-of-town exhibitor in addition to the actual cost of the picture will have to pay only express charges and crating cost.

Besides this oil painting, the Lasky Company has just provided a series of remarkable 14x11 inch photographs of all the leading members in the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. They are printed on Eastman carbon black paper and are genuine contact prints. They are intended especially for permanent lobby display and decoration, and should be framed with a two-inch mat and black picture moulding, making the entire picture from sixteen to eighteen inches in height. These beautiful photographs are offered to exhibitors at only 40c each.

The list of subjects includes Blanche Sweet, Sydney Dean, House Peters, May Allison, Parks Jones, Billy Elmer, Betty Shade, Robert Fleming, Tom Forman, Mildred Harris, Tex Driscoll, Florence Dagmar, Gertrude Kellar, Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Jane Darwell, H. C. Carpenter, James Montague, Earnest C. Joy, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Raymond W. Hatton, Al. Ernest Garcia, Dorothy Abril, Larry Payton, Mabel Van Buren, Page Peters.

These new advertising accessories must be obtained by exhibitors through the exchanges from which they get their film.

CONCERNING ITALA.

The rumor, circulated recently, that the Itala Film Co.'s features would in future be circulated through one of the prominent programs was given credence by a statement issued by Harry R. Raver, who is in charge of Itala's American interests.

"It is true that negotiations have been pending for some time with a view to securing our films for a prominent chain of offices now being operated by one of the pioneers of the film industry in this country," said Mr. Raver. "The final details of the arrangement are still unfinished, however, but the name of our future connection will be given shortly. This will not involve "Cabiria," or subsequent spectacles of similar magnitude, but only our regular output of features. We have been approached by many concerns having chains of offices who were desirous of exploiting Itala Features, but have considered favorably only the firm we are now concluding ararngements with as we desire an affiliation assuring us permanency and prestige."

It will be remembered that Mr. Raver began selling state rights for Itala films in June 1912, and has continued releasing features regularly ever since. Sixty-four subjects were issued representing the sale of nearly seven million feet of positive film. Over $70,000 was paid the United States Government in duty alone on positive prints imported.

Mr. Raver will continue as the American representative of the Itala Company of Torino, Italy, but will handle no films from his own office except the exploitation of "Cabiria" and similar spectacles.

AL. W. FILSON PROTESTS.

A published inference that Al. W. Filson was discharged from the employ of the Masterpiece Film Company brings from Mr. Filson the statement that he voluntarily resigned from the company's employ in the face of the fact that he had a perfectly good six months' contract with it which could have been enforced. When the company temporarily suspended production all the people were let out but him, and that he left with best wishes on both sides.

MARY PICKFORD WINS LADIES' WORLD CONTEST.

The contest that has been running in The Ladies' World for some months to determine the most popular actress in motion pictures among six of the most prominent ones, has been won by Mary Pickford with a total vote of 1,147,550. Her nearest contestant had 702,500. Others in the contest were Alice Joyce, Mary Fuller, Blanche Sweet, Clara Kimball Young, and Norma Phillips.

CHARLES A. GARDNER IN SELIG SPECIALS.

On the "extra" list of actors at the Chicago Studios of the Selig Polyscope Company, will be found the name of "Charles A. Gardner." It is a name that, at one time, was known to almost every man, woman and child in the United States and Canada. There is probably no theater standing fifteen or twenty years that at one time did not feature Charles A. Gardner.

Charles A. Gardner as "Karl," sweet-singing "Karl," with the melodious yodle, had at one time a vogue as great as that of J. K. Emmett.

The old actor has retired from the world of the footlight. But, like the old war horse who sniffs the odor of powder from afar, and is drawn irresistibly near the scene of former triumphs, Charles A. Gardner cannot entirely abandon the fascination of the world of paint and powder, and mimic strife. In his declining years he assumes roles in Selig Spectacular Specials when large casts are necessary, and it is needless to say, that he plays well his part.

Charles A. Gardner is living quietly in Chicago. At one time he was worth many thousands of dollars earned by him on the stage when he was featured in the theatrical world as "Charles A. Gardner Will Enact the role of 'Karl.'"

FROHMAN AMUSEMENT CORPORATION.

The former studio of the Gene Gauntier Players is now the home of the Frohman Amusement Corporation producing forces. President Gustave Frohman of this organization has moved his headquarters to the studio where work is now under way on their next big feature. A six months' lease of the studio property has been arranged by General Manager William L. Sherril of the Frohman corporation, with an option to purchase the property at any time before the expiration of the lease.

Under the direction of Director George Irving, the next film, which is to be Charles Frohman's great success, "The Builder of Bridges," is now being produced. The Frohman corporation has secured one of the best leading men of our present legitimate stage to play the leading role. He is C. Aubrey Smith, now leading man with Margaret Illington in "The Lie." Mr. Smith will also be remembered for his splendid work as leading man with Maude Adams in "The Legend of Leonora," with Marie Doro in "The Morals of Marcus" and with Grace George in "A Woman's Way." It is Mr. Smith's first work before the camera, and he is indeed an important acquisition to the screen.

Miss Marie Wells, a fascinating beauty, is to have a prominent role in the feature.

STAR CAST FOR "WHEN IT STRIKES HOME."

Edwin August is as well known as any of the leading men who appear in motion pictures. He is at present working in the Charles K. Harris feature, "When It Strikes Home," which will be released May 10, on the World Film schedule. Mr. August is well known because of his associations with many of the best known manufacturers, and will have a very prominent part in this forthcoming Charles K. Harris feature. It will be as truly an all star production as any made in recent months, for in addition to Mr. August, there will be seen Grace Washburn, the noted beauty who has just returned from London where she has been appearing in the "revue," "Come Over Here;" Muriel Ostriche, the dainty Thanhouser star whose name is held in great esteem by motion picture lovers, and William Bailey. who has just completed three years as star of Essanay studios in Chicago.

BLACKWELL GETS ALL THEATERS CO.

One of the developments during the past week in New York film circles was the purchase by M. H. Blackwell of the majority of the stock of the All Theaters Film and Accessory Company, which controls the booking rights of the Alliance Programme in New York State.

This deal places Mr. Blackwell in control of the destinies of the concern, and notwithstanding that he already holds the offices of Vice-President of the Alliance Film Corporation, Treasurer and General Manager of the Favorite Players Film Company, he has assumed the Presidency and general management of the All Theaters Film and Accessory Company, while S. S. Welester will remain in charge of the Buffalo office.

Mr. Blackwell is a brother to Carlyle Blackwell, and is well known in the film fraternity. It is safe to assume that his wide circle of friends in the business will extend the best wishes for success in his latest venture.

OPEN BILLINGS' NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

E. C. O'Keefe and V. C. Caldwell opened their new moving picture theater, the Majestic, in Billings, Mont., on Saturday, March 13. The doors were opened at 7 o'clock, and the crowd that gathered for the initial entertainment was an encouraging send-off for the Majestic, and indicated that the public's interest in the new institution can be counted on as a permanent asset. An immense electric chandelier is one of the prominent interior fixtures that immediately strikes the eye upon entering the foyer. It is a beautiful furnishing, and casts a soft, mellow glow. The auditorium is artistically decorated, and all the colors blend together in a most pleasing tint. Although there is plenty of room for more than the 700 seats in the theater, the proprietors considered the annoyance their patrons would be put to when one desired to leave a crowded row if the rows of seats were placed close together and decided to sacrifice space for the convenience of their patrons. The ventilation system of the Majestic changes the air completely every 10 minutes. The operating room is made of fireproof material, and the lighting system is of the indirect type. Feature pictures and regular program subjects will compose the bills at the Majestic.

NEW ENGLAND THEATERS CHANGE HANDS.

Several changes in the management of moving picture theaters in the state of Massachusetts have recently been made. The Gem theater at Athol, Mass. and the Art of Orange, Mass. have changed ownership. At Athol, Frank W. Derby, who has been connected with the Gem, has sold out to H. J. & E. L. Sheerer formerly of the Art of Orange, and they assumed the management on March 22. With the closing of the transaction, Mr. Derby retired from the motion picture industry. At Orange, the Art theater, which has been conducted by the Eastern Theaters Company, has been taken over by Mrs. Herbert Powers, who was the ticket seller, and Frank R. Culbert, the veteran operator, who was formerly connected with the Gem at Athol, has been transferred to the Art at Orange.

The Lawler Brothers and W. J. Cook, who have conducted the picture house in Baldwinsville, Mass. for over a year have given up their lease, and the house is now conducted by a local society.

SOCIALISTS USING BOSWORTH FILM.

Another production from the studios of Bosworth, Incorporated, is being used by a powerful movement to further its cause with the aid of motion pictures. "In the Valley of the Moon," is now being shown by the Socialists as an attraction worthy of their ideas and well suited to their doctrines. In Pittsburgh recently the Socialists presented this photoplay at the Lyceum Theater and, according to the newspapers, difficulty was found in seating the big audience.

"In the Valley of the Moon," is from the pen of Jack London and presents a powerful story from life involving capital and labor. The subject is full of human interest and contains a love story interwoven with dramatic situations together with scenes of unusual spectacular qualities. The principal parts are portrayed by Myrtle Stedman and Jack Conway.

The acquisition of "John Barleycorn," another well-known Jack London story produced by Bosworth, Inc., by numerous temperance societies throughout the United States and Canada, as one of their vital arguments against the use of alcohol, has also created a great demand for this film among local organizations of this character.

WORLD COMEDY STARS TO BE SEEN AT THE STRAND THEATER, NEW YORK.

The Strand Theater, New York, began exhibiting the one-reel comedies of the World Comedy Stars Film Corporation Sunday, March 28th, when Kathryn Osterman appeared in "Housekeeping Under Cover." Phil Gleichman, President of the Comedy-Star, and S. J. Berman, manager of the New York Exchange of the World Film Corporation, are elated with the results of their efforts.

SAENGER COMPANY BUYS ANOTHER THEATER.

Saenger Amusement Company, of Shreveport, La., has purchased the Hardin theater in State street, Texarkana, Texas-Ark. Jack Manning will be manager of the theater. Two new Simplex machines and a Radium Gold Fibre screen have been installed in the Hardin. The Saenger Company operates three picture houses in Shreveport, La., and two in Monroe, La. The addition of the Hardin makes six theaters owned and managed by the Saenger Amusement Company.

"THE AMATEUR NURSE" (Mina).

"The Amateur Nurse" a one reel Mina comedy featuring the youngest film star in existence, a baby of one and a half years, contains many novel situations and is exceedingly funny throughout.

A very absent-minded nurse forgets that she has left her charge in the care of a young man, and after she finishes her shopping, returns to her home without the baby. In the meantime Harry, the unfortunate guardian, is insulted by Sylvia, his sweetheart, who sees him with the baby in his arms and believes that he is a Polygamist. Harry tries to dissuade her, but his arguments are not strong enough, and she leaves in great disdain. By way of making him more uncomfortable the baby tries to test its lungs and even a well-cooked steak does not stop the noise, however, the desired results are obtained when a baby-bottle is given to him by a kind-hearted nurse. All is then quiet and Harry, finding a comfortable place, goes to sleep and dreams that he is taking care of five babies. In the midst of this he is discovered by the frantic nurse followed by cops, tramps, Sylvia and half the town. Reconciliations are soon made and Harry and Sylvia are again united, not to forget the baby and the nurse, also the cops and the hoboes.

The picture is very well acted in every detail and the use of the babies adds a touch that is entirely original. The picture is very good and lives up to the high standard that the Mina comedies have established.

BOSWORTH-MOROSCO FORCES INCREASED.

Charles Whittaker, who came to the coast with the Lasky Company, has joined the Bosworth-Morosco forces in Los Angeles to act as assistant to Oscar Apfel. Mr. Whittaker's experience in the motion picture business has been long and varied and makes him a particularly valuable asset.

Alfredo Gondolfi, one of the best known and most capable camera men in the film industry, has also been secured to "turn the crank" for Mr. Apfel. Mr. Gondolfi has been in the motion picture game practically from its inception, having started with the Pathe Freres in Paris and working at various times with the Gaumont and Itala companies in Europe before coming to the United States to assume the position of head camera-man for the Pathe Freres' American.

GARING OPENS PICTURE HOUSE.

C. N. Garing of Greenville, S. C. will open in the early part of April a 450-seat moving picture theater in that city. "The Garing" will be the name of the new house, and the plans indicate that it will be a structure of which Greenville will be proud. Two Power's projection machines will be a part of the up-to-date equipment to be found in the house.

TWO FAMOUS PLAYER PRODUCTIONS RUNNING.

The Famous Players folk are crowing over the fact that two productions from their studios appeared simultaneously on Broadway during the week of March 22. John Barrymore appeared in "Are You a Mason" at the Strand, and Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green" at the Broadway Theater. Both pictures drew exceedingly well.

KIRKWOOD COMES EAST.

James Kirkwood, who has been directing Mary Pickford for the Famous Players at the Los Angeles Studio, is on his way to New York where he will direct a new Famous Players company with Hazel Dawn playing leads. Allan Dwan takes Kirkwood's place in the Mary Pickford company.

PRINCESS THEATER IS OPENED.

The new Princess theater has recently been opened at Orange, Tex., with H. R. Kitterman as manager. The new house has its own power plant, and uses two Power's 6a projectors. The seating capacity is 300.

ATWATER SUCCEEDS ROBIN.

J. E. Robin has resigned his position as sales manager for the Precision Machine Company. He has not yet announced his plans for the future. L. W. Atwater has been appointed sales manager to succeed Mr. Robin.

PACIFIC FEATURE FILM CORPORATION.

The Pacific Feature Film Corporation has succeeded the Alco Film Corporation of California, and will handle past productions of the Alco, and the future productions of the Metro Picture Corporation.

The President of this concern is Mr. Sol L. Lesser.

Changes at the Vitagraph Theater.

"The Breath of Araby" Succeeds "The Juggernaut" As the Feature.—Other Good Pictures.

A MODERN drama in four parts, whose scenes are laid in the atmosphere of aristocratic France, pervaded by the mysticism of the Orient, entitled "The Breath of Araby," was the feature of a varied bill at the Vitagraph Theater, New York City, commencing Sunday, March 28th. Charles L. Gaskill, the author and producer, succeeded in injecting touches of absorbing realism in the pictured drama and dressed his story in magnificent settings, some rich in Oriental workmanship, others exceptional interiors that are characteristically French.

Helen Gardner, as Mlle. Clothilde, daughter of an aristocrat and a decided flirt, dominates the story that tells in graphic sequence of her endeavor to attract an American, even resorting to the supposed potency of a love charm, a mystic drop of liquid distilled a thousand years ago. In "The Breath of Araby" Miss Gardner is given an opportunity to display her powers of emotional expression and succeeds in portraying convincingly one of the most trying characters an actress is called upon to assume. Her supporting company includes L. Rogers Lytton, Paul Scardon, Templer Saxe and J. Herbert Frank.

Five thousand feet of exceptional comedy will precede the feature, introducing in the principal characters twenty-four of the Vitagraph's recognized comedians. Of more than passing interest is the announcement of the showing of Number 4 of the Famous Jarr Family Series, "Mr. Jarr Takes a Night Off," in which Rose Tapley as Mrs. Jarr accuses Harry Davenport, as Mr. Jarr, of leading a double life because he attended a ball given for the benefit of the "Human Uniques." "Easy Money," a story of two crooks, an actress, a bundle of stage money, an inquisitive youngster and a surprise featuring Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison and Bobby Connelly; "They Loved Him So," a story of three old maids whose dream of love is shattered at seeing their hero scrubbing away at a washtub under threat of a club in his wife's hands, with Flora Finch, Kate Price and Jay Dwiggins in the principal parts, and "The Timid Mr. Tootles," a two-part feature comedy, in which Sidney Drew is seen in the evolution of a timid man, which completes an attractive program.

Menger and Ring.

Makers of Lobby Display Frames Report Material Increase of Business.

Arnold Kornicker, traveling representative for Menger & Ring, picture frame manufacturers with factory and offices at Nos. 304-306 West Forty-second Street, New York City, left the home office this week on an extended tour of New York State and Canada in the interest of the firm. Mr. Kornicker expects to call upon motion picture exhibitors in the territory which he covers and Menger & Ring will forward to him en route any requests for a visit which may be sent to the New York office.

The development of the Menger & Ring business during the past couple of years is of interest in showing the growth of the motion picture industry and the advanced methods which are being used in advertising it. Menger & Ring have been making picture frames for all ordinary purposes for many years, their trade coming from the hundreds of art and stationery stores throughout New York City and vicinity, where orders for framing are taken. A year or more ago they observed that picture frames for the display of photos in theater lobbies were being extensively used in motion picture trade and began making a bid for this class of business. To-day this motion picture theater business surpasses in volume the business of all other classes which they are doing and had been doing for a long time, and it may be observed that the volume of regular commercial framing business has not fallen off to any considerable extent.

Approximately forty men are employed in the Menger & Ring plant in New York City and the conduct of the business necessitates the use of three floors in the large building occupied. Frames turned out by the firm are finished on the premises, down to the painting and lettering.

Mr. Leo. Levison of the Pittsburgh branch of the World Film Corporation has obtained the services of Lester W. Adler of New York City, who will represent the Pittsburgh office of the World Film Corporation on the road. Adler is unquestionably one of the most congenial chaps that one would care to meet and having been associated with Levison a number of years on the road is guarantee sufficient that he will "bring home the bacon."

Building Big Effects

Universal Company Revolts Against Petty Graft and Builds Its Own Castles and Houses at Universal City.

In the early days of motion pictures it was possible to take pictures of fine residences, public buildings and modest homes when needed for backgrounds of picture scenes for the trouble of asking. But after the public got the idea that there were millions of dollars made in the motion picture business it began to demand a share in the way of payment for the privilege of using private property for picture scenes.

Scene from "The Butler's Busted Romance" (Universal) Showing Residence Exterior Constructed Especially for that Picture by the Company's Workmen.

Five and ten dollars and even larger sums were demanded until the demands became out of all proportion to the service rendered.

It was to avoid the necessity of making these payments that the Universal Film Company decided to equip itself with means for constructing any sort of building its stories called for. Accordingly several carloads of marble blocks have been delivered at Universal City, Los Angeles, and the company can now erect anything from a mediaeval castle to a modern millionaire's palace. With other material at hand the more humble home of the worker or the bungalow of the nearly rich may be constructed at short notice.

The accompanying illustration from a scene in "The Butler's Busted Romance" shows an imposing residence constructed especially for that picture by the Universal workmen.

KLEINE ISSUES BEAUTIFUL POSTERS OF IRENE FENWICK.

What are declared to be two of the finest samples of lithography ever made, are the one and three-sheet portrait lithographs of Miss Irene Fenwick, issued by George Kleine. Miss Fenwick, who has recently signed a contract with George Kleine covering a term of years, and her exclusive film services, has just completed her work as "Hetty" in the James Forbes comedy, "The Commuters," at the Kleine Studio, New York City. The lithographs will be ready for distribution with the release of "The Commuters." It is the work of H. C. Miner Lithographing Company of New York.

HETTY GRAY BAKER JOINS RELIANCE AND MAJESTIC-MUTUAL.

A recent addition to the Reliance and Majestic-Mutual Scenario Bureau is Hetty Gray Baker, the first woman Law Librarian of Connecticut, scenario writer and former Bosworth editor.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"PATSY MARRIED AND SETTLED." (Lubin).

In this the last number of the Patsy Bolivar series everything is springtime and sunshine. Four years have passed since his marriage to Jane; they have first a beautiful pair of twins and later triplets. Patsy does not know if this is good luck or bad. However, he is the owner of a prosperous berry farm and is altogether well-to-do and satisfied. On the other hand Sykesy has nothing but troubles, he is near being evicted for non-payment of rent and has to seek employment. Patsy in his happiness forgets the past wrongs he has suffered and returning good for evil gives Sykesy a job picking berries. Many who have been watching the series will regret that the tale is finished, but all will be glad that Patsy Bolivar comes out all right and bids fair to have a long and happy life with the ever faithful Jane.

Clay M. Greene is to be complimented on a very successful series and Clarence Jay Elmer certainly was a real Patsy.

"THE TURN OF THE WHEEL," (Essanay.)

The manipulations of the "wild cat" speculators are portrayed in this thrilling two reel drama, released April 13. The leading character, which part is played by Richard C. Travers, is the moving spirit in a large mining corporation, which needs an ore road in order to compete successfully with its rivals. A speculator discovers this fact and tries to get a controlling interest in the stock in order to hold up the company. He manages to do this through granting a heavy loan on some stock which a frivolous society woman has taken him to get money to pay her debts. The mine executive catches his secretary, a cat's-paw of the speculator, trying to rob his safe, and learns of the plot from him. He is thus enabled to redeem the stock in time to save the society woman from disgrace and his corporation from a "hold-up."

Scene from "The Turn of the Wheel" (Essanay).

"AEROPLANE BUILDING" (Vero).

The building of an aeroplane from the putting together of the first skeleton to the insertion of the propeller, is visualized in this picture. One is struck by the ease and rapidity with which the work is done, but though the work is done swiftly it is easy to follow every stage of the progress and the interest in indeed well sustained.

"STATION CONTENT," (Reliance.)

Wallace Reid and Catherine Henry are featured in "Station Content," a two-reel Reliance drama produced by F. A. Kelsey for the Mutual program. "Station Content" is so called because of the agent, Jim Manning's happy life. Other employees chip in and buy Manning's little girl a doll, but the child breaks it and it is left in the station. When the child dies Mrs. Manning learns telegraphy and goes to the station with her husband.

Several years later Manning has risen to be general manager and in their handsome city home Mrs. Manning feels lonely and neglected. While her husband is away on a business trip she decides to leave for good, and, at the end of a series of mishaps, drives across country and stops at Station Content on account of a storm. There she finds the broken doll. That revives old memories, and just for fun she "cuts in" on the telegraph instrument, finds a bridge has washed out and that the train bearing her husband will probably plunge to the river.

She runs out and flags the train. Circumstances combine to make Manning realize his neglect, and reform.

MONTERAL DISTRIBUTORS FOR GREAT NORTHERN.

The Allied Features, Inc., 201 New Birk's Bldg., of Montreal, Canada, renters of high-grade features, have secured the distribution rights to the productions of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th Street. The following are the first three features to be released by "The Allied:" "The Fight for Fortune," "A Deal With the Devil," "John Redmond, the Evangelist." The latter is a magnificent four reel production featuring the world's most popular dramatic photoplay actor, Valdemar Psilander, and the favorite of two continents, Miss Elsa Frolich.

"SNOBS" WITH VICTOR MOORE.

For the first anniversary week at the Strand Theater it has been definitely decided that the offering shall be Jesse L. Lasky's picturization of "Snobs," in which Victor Moore makes his photodramatic debut. This production will consequently open its week's engagement at the Strand on April 11 and will be regularly released on Monday, April 12.

Scene from "Snobs" (Lasky).

"Snobs" is a picture version of the comedy of the same name by George Bronson-Howard, which ran for a full season without interruption in New York City and which is generally conceded to be the most humorous comedy satire ever produced in this country. Mr. Moore has been widely known as a Broadway star, especially in George M. Cohan productions, and he brings to the screen the same buoyant spirit and rollicking personality which made him a favorite on the legitimate stage.

In "Snobs," Victor Moore plays the role of a poor young milkman who suddenly finds himself the heir of the title of an English Duke with some twenty millions of real money at his disposal. Disney—that is the name of the milkman—naturally sets out to "blow himself" to wonderful clothes, wonderful cigars and most expensive hotel quarters and everything else in his opinion suitable for a noble of high degree with much cash on hand. The transformation of milkman into Duke is highly edifying, and is made by Mr. Moore almost indescribably comical. It is not long, however, before the Duke learns that the very people who seem to fawn upon him mock him behind his back. He becomes bitter and wishes to renounce both title and wealth, being finally restrained only by the one sincere society girl whom he met before the arrival of his good fortune and with whom he has ever since been in love.

In addition to Mr. Moore the cast includes Anita King, Constance Johnson, Ernest Joy and other widely known favorite artists.

"LORNA DOONE."

An Adaptation of R. D. Blackmore's English Novel in the Two-Reel Biograph.

Biograph has added to its long list of adaptations of famous books and novels in the two-reel Biographs; this time it being none less than "Lorna Doone," the old English romance by R. D. Blackmore, to be released April 13.

This novel furnishes a wealth of material for three or four reels of film, and when produced as only Biograph knows how the result is a two-part production that is destined to live as long, proportionately, as the novel from which it has been adapted.

It is more than a passing pleasure to see portrayed on the screen a novel that one has read years ago and, along with the millions of other readers, welcomed an opportunity to see, in physical action, the many encounters that were caused by the enmity that existed between John Ridd and Carver Doone. And it is no less pleasing to know that this always welcome story has been produced by an organization who believe in producing a picture down to the material of the story, rather than up to a specific footage.

This two-part drama has been reviewed in length on page 1943 of last week's Moving Picture World.

"JOHN REDMOND," THE EVANGELIST" (Great Northern).

The theme of this production makes a poignant appeal to the heart and engages the mind as few stories do. It has been interpreted with unerring touch by Valdemar Psilander, who is recognized as Europe's greatest and most popular screen actor, and who in this production plays the part of John Redmond, the evangelist.

After having lost his parents, who died from grief over their son's unjust sentence to prison, John obtains his release and devotes his time to the uplift and betterment of mankind.

While preaching to a crowd one day he himself is accused of having served a sentence. The leader of a gang and his followers proceed to a saloon where they plan an act of burglary. John happens into the same place and distributes tracts; amid mockery and ridicule he departs. One of the gangsters having been chosen to commit the burglary, refuses to do so, and announces his intention of leading an honest life. He appeals to John for moral aid and, with the object of having it serve as a warning, the evangelist tells him his story: How in a quarrel one evening his sweetheart was killed by the bullet of a rival suitor, which was meant for him, and for which accident he was sentenced to a life imprisonment. Through the intervention of the prison chaplain, however, the case was retried, his innocence was proven and he was set free. His first way was to his ill mother, who, shortly after his return, died in his arms.

Nellie, the reformed gangster's sweetheart, rejoices over his reformation; and the evangelist continues his life's vocation.

The Great Northern studio is noted for its fortunate handling of emotional heart-touching situations such as is this. John Redmond makes a strong popular appeal.

"THE GENTLEMAN BURGLAR" (Selig).

"The Gentleman Burglar" is a Selig drama in two reels, to be released Monday, April 5th. A strong cast of Selig players including Wm. Stowell, Lillian Marshall, Edwin Wallock, Lillian Hayward, Marion Warner and others, carry to a successful conclusion a most unusual and exciting pictureplay drama.

Broadway Jim, a gentleman burglar, and Jim Draper, a society leader, bear a startling resemblance to each other. Irma Horne is on the trail of Broadway Jim. Broadway finds a photograph of young Draper in the society columns and reads that Draper is to attend the Trevaine reception where the famous Armanti heirlooms are to be exhibited, and he decides to pose as Draper and make way with the jewels.

He overpowers Draper, is admitted to the reception and is welcomed there as the society man. Irma Horne and John Dixon, posing as maid and butler, guard the heirlooms. When the jewels are shown, Broadway Jim switches off the lights and makes an attempt to secure them, but is prevented from so doing by Irma and Dixon. He is placed under arrest, and the guests are appalled at what they believe to be Draper's kleptomania, but are utterly dumbfounded when the real Draper, who has recovered consciousness in a hospital, puts in an appearance. Irma and Draper are attracted to each other and their friendship ripens into love.

"THE ARTIST'S WIFE" (Majestic.)

The Majestic-Mutual one reel drama, "The Artist's Wife," concerned chiefly with the artistic temperament and woman's devotion. Adair, an artist, has a lovely model, charmingly embodied by Miriam Cooper, named Jean, with whom he is in love. Called in to paint a beautiful society girl, he becomes infatuated and eventually engaged to her. Jean grieves, and Adair's friend, George, tries to dissuade him from deserting his little sweetheart.

A suitor for the hand of the society girl meanwhile becomes infuriated at being put aside, and, wildly jealous, goes to Adair's studio and shoots at him. Jean throws herself between the two and intercepts the shot. It lames her for life, but Adair marries her and becomes her constant and devoted attendant.

"THE WHITE MASK" (Lubin).

This romance written by Clay M. Greene, is an unusual offering and will doubtless create a furore among the lovers of the intensely dramatic. The early scenes are laid at the Belgian court of King Leopold. Yvonne, Duchess of Granville, is the sensation of the hour, when her husband dies and leaves her penniless. She disappears from society and determined to give her son every advantage, she becomes a professional dancer, and to disguise her identity, wears a white mask. Her secret, however, is discovered, she goes to America, becomes rich, and under an assumed name is engaged to a millionaire named Emerson. Then comes a Nemesis, an old lover named Nordoff, who, failing to blackmail her, betrays her secret and Emerson forsakes her. Yvonne's son, Victor and Emerson meet; there is an altercation, and the latter is killed. Yvonne takes the crime upon herself but when the court pronounces her guilty, Victor declares that he did the killing. Yvonne dies in the courtroom. Victor is arrested but eventually released to enjoy a sad happiness in the love of a faithful fiancee. Lilie Leslie gives a wonderful conception of the unfortunate dancer and the production is admirably directed by Col. Joseph Smiley.

"WINDOWPHANIE" FOR PICTURE THEATERS.

One of the most unique and inexpensive ways of decorating a front is by means of the fabric called "Windowphanie," which is now being used by a number of theaters. This modern glass decoration is a thin, translucent material in a variety of beautiful color designs, equaling the effect of regular stained glass, and costing about one-tenth and even less than the solid glass. Anyone can put the material on in a few moments. It is of great durability, and impervious to the inclemencies of the weather.

Owners of moving picture theaters will do well to get in touch with the Windowphanie people, at 19 East 14th street, New York City, and ask for estimates.

"THE RETURN OF MAURICE DONNELLY."

A preachment against capital punishment is the theme of "The Return of Maurice Donnelly," a Vitagraph three-part Broadway Star Feature picture just completed by Director William Humphrey. Mr. Humphrey, to give added realism to an interesting story by William Addison Lathrop, was in continual consultation with scientists and electrical experts, so as to be absolutely correct in every technical detail. Maurice Donnelly is brought back to life after having been electrocuted, his resuscitation being accomplished by means of electricity. Leo Delaney portrayed Maurice Donnelly and to further the cause of science to illustrate the way scientists are now experimenting to again excite the nerve centers of electrically executed persons, allowed a current of two million volts of static electricity to pass through his body, the course of the current being traced by violet ray tubes and electrodes passed over his chest. When the mention of two million volts was first broached Mr. Delaney absolutely refused to even think of lending himself to such a test, but on being told that he would not even feel the current and that static electricity was the unknown force that will, in future generations, revolutionize the accepted axioms of present day scientific theories in regard to organic life, he readily agreed to the experiment. Leah Baird, Anders Randolpf, Mary Maurice, Denton Vane and Garry McGarry assisted Mr. Delaney in the enactment of the picture.

"TECHNIQUE OF ALPINE CLIMBING" (Vero).

In this picture are shown the hardships and difficulties of Alpine climbing and the most modern methods now in use of overcoming such hardships and difficulties. The pictures were taken in the Northern Tyrol and there is no question that both the camera man and the climbers embark in a hazardous undertaking. The pictures show how a party of climbers reach a point within three hundred feet of the top of a steep mountain. Up to this point no special aids are needed, but in order to climb up the steep sides which now present themselves, ropes and hooks, hammers, sticks and rings are called into requisition, and through narrow gorges on precipitous walls the ascent proceeds. Several times the pictures show the daring climber suspended in mid-air with an abyss yawning below. The descent is scarcely less interesting though less dangerous.

A. K. Greenland, formerly with the Billboard, has become the publicity and sales manager for the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation.

"A MAN OF THE HILLS" (United-Premier).

By the writing of "A Man of the Hills," released on the United Program April 5th, Philip Walsh, who is responsible for the scenario has established himself firmly as an author of exceptional talent in the field of photoplaywrights.

The story deals with an ambitious young man who sacrifices his career to clear the name of his wife's father, who is falsely accused of theft. He escapes to the West and after months of solitude and toil strikes a rich lead. He has about become reconciled to his solitary life on the hills when word is received that a son has been born to him. Oblivious to his own peril he rushes to his wife. In the meantime the money, which has not been stolen but lost, is discovered. The father, who hurries to the home of his daughter with the good news, witnesses a happy reunion.

Excellently staged and cleverly acted, this photodrama deserves special attention as a single part production of the better class. The work of Frederick Church in the leading role is artistic and convincing, while Joseph J. Franz, who staged the picture, does a splendid piece of character acting in the part of the falsely accused father.

"MYSTERIOUS MAN OF THE JUNGLE" (Nash).

The Nash Motion Picture Company, of Los Angeles, Cal., announces the release of their second Wild Animal Photoplay production to be released on state right plan, entitled "The Mysterious Man of the Jungle," produced under the personal direction of Thos. S. Nash, who specializes in Wild Animal Photo Plays and produced in their own large studio and zoo near Los Angeles, Cal.

An exceptional story of a man's mysterious power over man-eating beasts. Dramatic in the extreme and photographically perfect. Filled with punches, abounds in thrilling situations, cleverly interwoven with a story of love and adventure. The mysterious man in this wonderful story is shown making friends with pumas, leopards and lions, the most ferocious beasts of the jungle. He has a mysterious power over animals. He plays with the pumas, the leopard brings food for him, bringing him a live hare which he devours. The full grown lion rescues him when he is lost and famished, carries him to water and helps him over the mountain to his cave and watches over him when he is sick. Numerous scenes between lion and man that have never been attempted by the producers on account of the danger to the actors, leading up to the final, thrilling scene where the girl is actually thrown in to the den of hungry, snarling beasts and the daring rescue by the mysterious man.

EXPOSITION NEWS TOLD BY SLIDES.

Cardinell-Vincent Co., official photographers of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, have prepared a weekly service of colored slides telling the news of the great California Exposition. This will be supplied to exhibitors, for one day's use, at $6 a dozen and $10 for two dozen, and with these will be sent free a half dozen 8x10 display photographs.

This should prove an excellent addition to the regular show, as everyone is interested and will welcome the pictures. Those in the audience who have seen the Exposition will have that great joy of telling their friends about the things that are shown. For further particulars see the Cardinell-Vincent advertisement on another page of this issue.

A large force of carpenters, mechanics and plasterers have been busy the past several days at the Lubin Western Studio erecting an Algerian village. Several of the regular dressing room buildings have been transformed into Algerian structures and a number of temporary ones built, in order to have a complete Algerian street, to be used in a big Algerian feature which is to start immediately.

W. Christy Cabanne, the Reliance-Majestic Mutual producer, is responsible for the erection of two complete streets behind the Mutual studio. One of these is composed of modern dwellings and stores, and here Cabanne staged the realistic fire scenes to be used in the picturization of Richard Harding Davis' "The Lost House," in four reels. In the other street scenes for the four-reel Mutual classic "Enoch Arden" are being photographed.

Ben Turpin is something of an acrobat as well as a comedian. In the Essanay comedy, "Curiosity," Turpin plays the part of a mad man. He sets up a table and juggles brooms, chairs and other pieces of furniture in a way that would make a professional juggler envious. He also is proficient at flip flops and all kinds of turning.

"Shorty Turns Actor" is the title of the next comedy in which "Shorty" Hamilton, the famous cowboy comedian, is featured on the Mutual Program by the New Broncho-York Motion Picture Corporation, April 14th. The scenario by Thomas H. Ince grants the little bow-legged laugh-maker many an opportunity to create a ludicrous situation and "Shorty" is said not to have missed his chances.

The Photo Drama Company, which has been staging "Prohibition" at the studios of the Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, New Jersey, is putting over something new in the line of delirium tremens. The subject, instead of seeing the far-famed snakes, is attacked by five hundred spiders and a huge sea-going octopus. This is rather a novel innovation and should do much toward helping the cause for which this play was written.

Pictures in Ward Halls

The Mormon Church's Ward Amusement Halls Are Considering the Advantages of Pictures—May Install Apparatus and Hold Shows—Halls Are Part of Church's Social Activity and a Try-Out of Films in One or Two of Them Has Proved Popular.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CONSIDERABLE interest is being taken in Salt Lake in the proposition of motion pictures for the ward amusement halls of the "Mormon" church and several of the newer halls have installed fireproof projection booths and own their own machines.

The amusement halls of the various wards are built in connection with or on the same premises as the chapels, in which services are held. The larger halls have fully equipped stages and many of them are provided with chairs enough to accommodate a large audience. The halls are also used frequently for dancing parties.

Recently one or two of the ward organizations experimented with moving pictures as a part of their entertainment program. The innovation was an instant success and led to the serious consideration of building the booths and installing first class projection apparatus.

George E. Carpenter, of the Noble Feature Film Company, is credited with having given a big boost to the proposition when he took part as end man in an amateur minstrel show given in Le Grande ward amusement hall. "Carp" was a hit in blackface, but got the biggest hand of the evening when he put on his moving pictures.

PROGRAMS IN SALT LAKE CITY.

Manager Harry A. Simms, of the American theater, with the permission of Louis Marcus, president of the Notable Feature Film Company, has just completed arrangements for Paramount pictures at that house and its sister theater, the Liberty. This means the transference of the Paramount pictures from the Broadway theater, which has had the exclusive showing of the films since the organization of the Notable concern in this city.

The addition of the Paramount productions to the American and Liberty programs means a formidable drawing card for the two big Salt Lake picture houses. Already the World, Fox and other feature concerns are showing at the American, and under the new arrangement every day will have its booking of feature pictures. In addition to the attractions of the World, Paramount, Fox, etc., Manager Simms has contracted for a greater number of General Film productions.

The programs of both the American and Liberty will be evenly balanced with an equal allotment of films, and the plan is to avoid duplication at the two houses.

UTAH SHORTER ITEMS.

A clever program is being issued by the Johnston theater, in Tooele, Utah. The program is in the form of a miniature newspaper, and in addition to the stories of the pictures and forthcoming releases, contains tabloid versions of big news stories from the Salt Lake papers.

The Universal's submarine pictures, taken as a part of the Williamson expedition drew large audiences at the Salt Lake theater last week.

"The Black Box" opened its Salt Lake engagement last week at the Rex theater. Manager Hall was gratified at the great interest taken in the big mystery serial and anticipates record audiences.

To keep pace with popular fads and fancies a Rand theater in Salt Lake has been christened the "Jitney."

Frank R. Roberson, with his travelogues, appeared last week at the Liberty theater under auspices of a local newspaper, and gave his illustrated lectures on Germany and other countries at war to large audiences. This was the second appearance of Roberson in Salt Lake.

KANSAS RURAL EXHIBITORS.

Business Hurt by Heavy Going on Roads in Farming Country.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THE theaters in the Kansas territory, especially in the farming districts, have not been drawing the patronage that they would like to have, but most of the exhibitors take into consideration that the roads have for the most part been almost impassible. Wet snows and heavy rains have been falling all through the territory. The farmers cannot come to town and in many places the rural mail carriers have had to postpone deliveries two and three days at a time. The exhibitors believe that they have done excellently well considering these conditions, and they are still booking the best pictures for their shows. It will only be a short while until the roads begin to dry up.

FARMERS' SHOWS SATURDAYS.

The free show idea has penetrated to Burlington, Kas., and the merchants there have been making arrangements with the moving picture theaters to give a free show to the visiting farmers every Saturday. Pictures of particular interest to the farmer will be shown and the merchants are going to distribute free tickets.

NEW THEATER FOR WICHITA.

L. S. Naftzger, banker and bond dealer; S. B. Amidon, banker and lawyer; L. M. Miller, part owner and manager of the Princess theater, and C. C. McCollister, owner and manager of the Star theater, all of Wichita, Kas., are said to be behind the forces that have formed a corporation with a capital of $75,000 to erect and operate a new moving picture theater with a 75 foot frontage on East Douglas street. It is said that all the stock has been subscribed and the project is well under way. The company also has options on two other properties on Douglas street. It has been rumored for some time that a magnificent moving picture theater would soon be built in Wichita, but this is the first time that it has been made public.

SHORTER KANSAS ITEMS.

Miss Hattie Dumm, a Burlington, Kas., girl, and daughter of Jose Dumm, of that city, has been scoring big successes as a moving picture actress. The New York dramatic critics have accorded her marked attention in her new work. She formerly was with the "Merry Widow" company.

The Rex theater, at Bellville, Kas., gave its patrons a rare treat last week. A man appeared on the streets with a large kodak and took snap shots of the various business men and residents of the town as they were coming and going on the streets. The pictures were shown on the screen at the Rex theater later.

The Bowersock theater, at Lawrence, Kas., was opened last week as the new home of the Paramount pictures.

Burt Sheppard, who was one time chief of Lord Kitchener's scouts and saw remarkable service in the Boer War, lectured between pictures at the Princess theater at Wichita, Kas., last week. Mr. Sheppard has had many narrow escapes and his experience in the army maneuvers has been a varied one. He was born in the bush country of Australia and was reared a cowboy.

Grosvenor Seward, manager of the New Rex theater, at Hutchinson, Kas., had as his guests the teachers and the children in the public schools of the grades that are now studying the poem of Paul Revere's Ride at a show recently when that picture was produced there.

PITTSBURGH SCREEN CLUB EXPECTS CHARTER SOON

Officers of Club Testify as to Purposes of Organization—Hope to Have Rooms Soon.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE Pittsburgh Screen Club is composed of plenty of ambition and enthusiasm and is developing very rapidly, and indications are that headquarters will be secured in the very near future. The officers were recently called together in Attorney Stein's office where testimony was given before a court official as to the objects of the organization. A charter has not yet been granted, but a decision is expected at any time now. After the charter is secured it is expected that every one will get busy and use all of their efforts to boost the organization in every way.

PICTURES OF THE HOLY LAND.

An overflowing crowd attended the Palestine moving picture benefit and musical of the Zionist Council of Pittsburgh, at the Schenley theater, last Monday night. The pictures which were shown comprised six reels of 160 scenes in and about the Holy Land. Rev. J. Leonard Levy of Rodef Shalom Temple lectured on the religious and historic values of the scenes shown on the screen. Dr. Levy made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land several years ago and is thoroughly familiar with the country and its life.

KRITERION IN PITTSBURGH.

With Max W. Herring as manager, the Kriterion Film Service of Pittsburgh, is one of the latest additions to the list of film concerns in this city. A temporary office is located at No. 1 Delray street, but will move to 404 Ferry street May 1st. An application has been made for a State charter and Manager Herring has been advised from Harrisburg that it has been granted.

COMMERCIAL FILM EXCHANGE.

The Commercial Film Exchange started in business at 111 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., last week. William C. Pearce, formerly owner of the Knoxville Family theater, and for the past nine months in the film business in New York, is the manager.

PITTSBURGH BRIEFS.

One of the most popular of the local men in "filmdom" is John P. Donovan. He has just been appointed general manager for the Rowland and Clark interests. Mr. Donovan entered the screen game in its infancy and after managing numerous theaters in this city was appointed manager of the Regent in East Liberty. Messrs. Clark and Rowland have now put him in full charge of their business. Mr. Donovan has a personality that has gained him hosts of friends.

The dramatization of Jack London's latest story, "In the Valley of the Moon," was shown in moving pictures last Sunday afternoon in the Lyceum theater by the Pittsburgh Socialist Educational League. Lately there has been no attempt to put a stop to Sunday showing of moving pictures in this theater by the Pittsburgh police.

Jerome Casper will succeed John P. Donovan as manager of the Regent theater in East Liberty, Pittsburgh. Casper is well known in local theatrical circles

Censors and Serials

Ontario Board of Censors Has Determined to Pass on No Serial Picture Hereafter Until the Exchanges Are Ready to Put It All on the Screen for Them at One Sitting—An Installment of a Current Offering Displeased and This Is Said to Be Reason for Ruling.

By David K. Billings, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the most radical decisions made by the Ontario Board of Censors came last week in the form of a letter from Chairman Armstrong which means that the release date of all serials in Ontario after this will be held up a good many weeks. The letter, which has been sent to all the exchanges, reads:

"I beg to advise that the censoring of serial stories by this board has been very unsatisfactory in the past owing to the fact that we get only a small instalment of a story to deal with at one time.

"You are therefore notified that this board will not censor any instalment of any serial in future, and if your exchange wishes to buy serials you are requested to submit the entire story at one time, otherwise the board will not deal with the films at all."

The immediate cause of the notification by the board was the inconvenience caused to exhibitors by the condemning of the seventh instalment of "Runaway June." In the case of the "Black Box," which is to be released next week, the board consented to review the scenario, as the release date had been extensively advertised, but in future it will not be possible to release any serial until the entire picture has been censored.

TORONTO BRIEF ITEMS.

The principal event of the week in Toronto is the remarkable improvement in business noticeable at nearly all the theaters. This is apparent not only in the theaters, but also around the exchanges, where renewed activity is waking the managers from their stagnant habits, caused by lack of work.

A special exhibition of the temperance film, "John Barleycorn," was given in Loew's Winter Garden last week before the members and delegates of the Dominion Alliance, the largest temperance league in Canada, which was holding its annual convention in the city. Over 800 people saw the exhibition, which was given at 8:30 in the morning, and listened to Carl Pierce, representing Bosworth's, who spoke of the advantages of the film as a campaigning feature.

"Damon and Pythias" at the Grand theater broke all attendance records for a single feature at that theater, which has shown several big pictures this season during dark weeks.

The World Film Corporation and the Canadian Universal Film Company are both looking for larger quarters on account of the increased business, especially developed in the country districts.

SUNDAY SHOWS AND CLEVELAND CHARITIES

President of Associated Charities Fears to Countenance Sabbath Exhibitions.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

JOHN R. HERNDON, president of the Cleveland Associated Charities, of Cleveland, Tenn., has taken exception to certain articles attributed to the association and to himself in connection with accepting the proceeds of the Sunday show which was recently given at Cleveland in an effort to raise money for the unemployed. In writing to the editor of one of the Chattanooga papers Mr. Herndon said: "Your Cleveland correspondent, writing about the Sunday pictures held in Cleveland said: 'It is understood that the president of the associated charities notified the treasurer not to receive the funds; that the board did not approve of that method of raising funds for charitable purposes, and that the treasurer would take charge of the money and devote it to cases of emergency, but not under the auspices of the association.'" Mr. Herndon then says that the quotation does not do him justice, as he did not notify the treasurer not to receive the funds, but asked him to hold the amount until the executive committee could pass on the matter. He did not declare he was opposed to the plan, as the board had not met and had not been canvassed privately. It was suggested that the gentlemen who undertook the Sunday shows might retain the money and disburse it as they thought best. Mr. Herndon further stated that the executive committee would probably hold a meeting shortly and would take a definite action on the matter, either receiving funds or returning them to the donors. In discussing the matter Mr. Herndon said: "The question involved is not so much the pictures which were shown on Sunday as it was the precedent which had been established. There is no intention of charging that the gentlemen who were responsible for this Sunday show are trying to drive in a wedge whereby they will operate regular Sunday shows. However, some of us feel that it will be a precedent nevertheless, which will lead to other pictures which are less appropriate for the Sabbath."

D. L. WILLIAMSON RECOVERING.

Daniel L. Williamson, wealthy manager of two motion picture houses at Jackson, Tenn., who was struck over the head with an iron bar by negro footpads on March 4, is now out of danger, according to a statement made by Dr. J. L. Cook, at the infirmary. Mr. Williamson is getting along nicely and expects to be out in a few days. The hold-up occurred shortly after he had closed up one of the theaters for the night and was leaving for home.

NEW LILLIAN AT CLARKSVILLE.

At Clarksville, Tenn., work was begun on March 8 preparatory to rebuilding the Lillian theater, destroyed by fire on December 30. A good deal of debris from the fire had to be removed before excavation could be started. The architects for the new house are Joseph & Joseph, of Louisville, Ky., who have built about thirty high class motion picture houses in Louisville and various cities through the South. The new theater will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. The bulk of the stock is owned by the Colonial Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn., but a part of it has been sold to the Clarksville investors, who took small blocks of a few shares at $10 a share.

CINCINNATI SHORT ITEMS.

Mrs. R. A. Waters, of Lenoir City, Tenn., recently purchased a complete moving picture outfit to be installed in a new house which will have a seating capacity of about 300 persons.

The Alabama Theater Company, of Alabama City, Tenn., is making arrangements to open a new theater which will have seating capacity for about 500 people.

T. A. Anderson, of Monterey, Tenn., is making arrangements to open a moving picture theater which will seat about 250 persons. The work is well under way and the theater will probably open the latter part of this month.

J. B. Abrams, of Athens, Tenn., is another exhibitor who has just joined the ranks. Mr. Abrams is preparing to open a theater which will be able to accommodate about three hundred persons.

B. Lowenstein & Brothers, of Memphis, Tenn., recently tendered a special moving picture matinee in the cafe, admission which was limited to women. The films showed the actual fitting of Gossard corsets. A pretty story entitled "How Marjorie Won a Career" is woven into the pictures. They were shown for two days between the hours of 3 and 5 o'clock. Admission was free.

A special moving picture performance was recently given at the Princess theater at Nashville in an attempt to raise funds for the benefit of the unemployed. The Nashville Rotary Club and other local organizations helped to boost the sale of the tickets which could be procured at several cigar stands and other stores besides at the box office. The resulting funds were turned over to the woman's auxiliary of the Workingmen's Relief and Loan Fund Bureau.

H. Jones, representative of the Maxwell Company, manufacturers of the Maxwell automobile, recently rented the Palace theater of Jellico, Tenn., in order to show in pictures the construction of the car.

A moving picture play showing the boy scout organization of Chattanooga, Tenn., is to be produced through the efforts of the Chattanooga Council of Boy Scouts and the Chattanooga Motion Picture Company. The film will be 1,000 feet in length. The scenario was written by Miss A. Marie McPherson, who took part in a contest, the prize for which was $25.

SOUTHWESTERN NOTES.

By Midwest Special Service to Moving Picture World.

A FINE of "not more than $100" or three months' imprisonment is provided for "any person who wears any hat, cap, bonnet or other headwear or headgear at any theater moving picture show or other place of amusement in Muskogee, Okla.," is a measure offered to the city council for passage. Caldwell, of South Hills, Va., who is operating a string of small houses at South Hill, Blackstone, Lawrenceville, Clarksville, Burkesville, and Victoria, Va., and W. E. Dye, of Hundred, Va., who is opening houses at Hundred and Hazard, Va. Practically every sale covered a machine as well as booths, etc.

The Gem Theater Company of Maysville, Ky., has made arrangements whereby a motion picture theater will be opened at Dover, Ky. The new theater will only play one night a week for the time being, as the town is not large enough to support a regular house. The company is also preparing to start a chain of one night stands through the small towns of Eastern Kentucky.

A cooperative movement has been started at Hopkinsville, whereby a new theater will probably be started shortly. It has been stated that one-half of the money needed has been subscribed.

A new electric light plant has been completed at the Lyric theater, of Jackson, Ky., and the proprietors have started afternoon as well as night shows.

J. E. Powell, of Lewisburg, Ky., closed the Opera House, and shipped his moving picture equipment to Owensboro, Ky., when he became connected with the old Nickelodeon theater.

Making Pictures Valuable

Louisville's Censorship Board for Children's Films That Are Shown at Special Hours in Theaters Is Tackling Problem of Getting Most Out of Pictures—Four Valuable Committees and What They Are Doing—A Commendable Undertaking.

By G. D. Crain, Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Louisville Censorship Board of Motion Pictures for Children recently met at the assembly room of the Louisville Free Public Library, and adopted a constitution as well as a set of by-laws. The object of the censorship board, according to the constitution, is to see that only such films as are suitable for children shall be shown by moving picture houses during hours set apart by them for featuring children's performances and also to secure cooperation of the manufacturers of scenarios in providing suitable films for children's performances. It is further provided that the board shall work through four standing committees, Scenario, Library, Publicity and Parent-Teacher. The purpose of the Scenario Committee is to arouse local interest in scenario writing, to read all scenarios presented to the board and to indorse or reject them. The manuscripts which are endorsed will be sent to J. J. Murdock, executive manager of the Keith circuit, who will make an effort to have them produced. The Library Committee will stimulate interest among children by acquainting them with the stories of the films to be shown in the moving picture approved by the board. The Parent-Teacher Committee is to secure appointment of special moving picture committees in the various Parent-Teacher Associations of the city. These committees will make the effort to interest parents and teachers in the movement, as well as to provide means for those children to see the shows who could not otherwise do so. Miss Annie S. Waters, principal of the Kentucky Home School, was elected temporary vice-president, to serve until the regular election in May. Mrs. Fred Levy presided at the meeting. Mrs. Emil Tachau was elected corresponding secretary. A letter was read from the Alumni Club of the Horace Mann school, offering to cooperate with the board and describing a similar effort which is being made in New York City to promote moving pictures for children. Many other letters from clubs in all parts of the country have been received by the board during the past month, asking information as to steps to be taken to organize children's motion picture shows.

THEATERS AND UNION PIANISTS.

Union musicians in five motion picture houses of Louisville went out on strike as the result of a new wage scale which became effective on March 14. An agreement, made two or three years ago, between the musicians and the Louisville Photo Play Association, expired at that time, and the Norman, Ideal, West Broadway, Preston and Highland theaters refused to re-engage the men at the new scale. Nine men in all were affected. Two of these men were employed by the Norman, two at the Preston, three at the Ideal and one at each of the other houses. The managers of three of the houses explained that there had been considerable depression throughout the whole country this winter in the moving picture business, and for this reason they could not afford to accept the new scale. The old scale prescribed a salary of $12 a week for a pianist and where three or more players were employed a leader had to be employed, who received $15 a week. The new scale demands $18 a week for the leader. Small houses employing but one musician, usually a pianist, must recognize the player as a leader at a salary of $18. Representatives of the union musicians stated that the new scale was agreed upon as a compromise following a dispute two years ago and that it is not a "new scale" at all, inasmuch as its provisions were accepted more than two years ago.

LENT HARDLY AFFECTS SHOWS.

Strange as it may seem, the Lenten season is not affecting the moving picture business to any great extent in Louisville. In some cases the legitimate show houses have reduced prices during the Lenten season in order to play to good crowds, as a great many people will not attend regular shows during the period. However, it has been noted that many people who will not attend theatrical productions will go to the motion picture house, which they do not consider in the same light. The effect on business in the down town district has been better if anything. It is stated, however, that some of the outskirt or suburban houses, which are located in districts near one or more large Episcopalian or Catholic churches, have been hit rather hard for the time being.

REAL ESTATE NEAR SHOWS.

Real estate dealers of Louisville in some instances have noted that prospective purchasers of property are taking a good deal more interest in the distance to the nearest motion picture house than they formerly showed in the location of churches, schools, etc. One real estate man recently stated that it was no uncommon thing to have a purchaser ask where the nearest picture house was located and then complain of the distance.

MINING COMPANY SHOWS FILM.

The Walton Coal Company of Walton, Ky., has followed the lead of several other big mining concerns in isolated sections of the State by purchasing a complete moving picture outfit which will be installed at once in a building which the company recently put up for the purpose.

LOUISVILLE BRIEFS.

The big multiple reel production, "Rule G," of the Blazon Film Company, made a tremendous hit when shown at the Majestic theater of Louisville.

Madame Olga Petrova, movie star in the Alco production of "The Tigress," Milton Royle's big play, appeared in person at the Keith theater of Louisville, at the same time that the pictures were on exhibit at the Novelty theater.

William Farnum and Kathleen Williams were recently seen in "The Spoilers" at the Mary Anderson theater. This was the third and probably the last time that the popular photoplay will be shown at the house. The masterpiece drew big crowds at every performance during all three engaments.

A motion picture house for negroes will be installed on the first floor of the new six-story building, now being erected in Louisville for the Colored Knights of Pythias. When completed the show house will be one of the leading colored theaters of the entire South. The entire building will cost about $150,000 and it is stated that the theater will not be a portion of the building to be neglected.

J. B. Winters, of Underwood, Ind., owner of King's Shows, was recently in Louisville, where he purchased a number of song slides and eighteen reels of film from the Owl Feature Film Company.

Ohio Censorship Struggles

All Moving Picture Interests in Cleveland Are Taking Concerted Action on the State's Unsatisfactory Laws Dealing with Moving Pictures and Theaters—Legislature to Have Line-Up on Question—Notes on the Work of the Censor Board.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE concerted action of all moving picture interests in Cleveland, taken and contemplated at two recent meetings, exerts new strength in the campaign against legalized criticism of screen plays.

The Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, at its weekly meeting, practically decided to use the screens of its members in a movement to educate the public to what is termed the iniquities of legalized censorship. At the same time the Film Credit Association, an organization composed of film renters and exchanges, wedged into the situation with the proposal that each of its members personally solicit the assistance of business men as a forceful means of approaching the legislature.

Two measures now confront the legislature—a bill introduced by Senator Louis E. Myer for abolition of the State Board and rejection of all censorship except the National Board, and the proposal of the Federated Church of Cleveland for establishment of local boards in Ohio cities, co-operative in action.

With this complicated situation the film interests have come to the conclusion that now is the proper time for enlightenment of theatergoers and for an expression of their own minds in the State Legislature.

"Cut-outs" which the film exchanges and exhibitors term ridiculous, and rejection of entire reels which previously had passed the National Board will be used as evidence of inefficiency and over-zealousness on the part of the State Board.

C. M. Christensen, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's Cleveland exchange, at both meetings, read a copy of a letter he sent Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, member of the State Board, regarding confiscation of deleted film. He issued a warning that all "cut-outs" must be returned to the headquarters of his company. Mr. Christenson expressed the feeling that discrimination is exercised against Mutual films.

"Sixty-six out of the first eighty-eight films rejected by the State Board were Mutual releases," he declared. "Nine out of every ten of our productions are slashed and deleted until the plot of the story is absolutely lost. Delays in reviewing force changes in booking dates continually. Even when they are passed upon they are sped through in such a manner as to cause wear and tear on the film equal to six weeks of ordinary projection in a theater."

Disaffection concerning the censorship problem has arisen between the Federated Churches and the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce in view of the chamber's stand against the former orginization's proposal for local criticising boards. Kenneth Sturges, secretary of the Chamber's recreation committee, declared that body was opposed to both the bill of Senator Myers and the measure fostered by the Federated Churches.

MAYOR BAKER ON PICTURES.

Moving pictures, as an educational agency, were given first place over colleges and other institutions of learning by Mayor N. D. Baker in a recent address at The Temple, Cleveland, "If I were given my choice between pictures and a college," he said, "I would choose pictures for pure educational value. Pictures have a power for education that is in its infancy in development." The Mayor did not, however, give entire support to film productions as encountered now. He branded them too sensational.

OHIO BRIEFS.

John F. Harley, representing Henry W. Savage, made arrangements in Cleveland for a showing of the nine-reel production "Uncle Sam at Work," in Engineers' Hall. The film follows the book of Frederick J. Haskins, "The American Government," depicting the work of the various divisions of government.

The Miles theater, East Ninth street, was the first Cleveland theater to secure a booking on the Billy Sunday pictures. The films were projected as an added attraction to the vaudeville bill throughout the past week.

J. C. Graham, president of the United Film Service, came to Cleveland recently to pay a business call on W. M. Williams, manager of the Cleveland exchange. Mr. Graham and Mr. Williams went to Cincinnati to look over the film situation in southern Ohio and Kentucky. The newly elected president of the United expressed himself as extremely pleased with the progress Mr. Williams is making with the service in this territory.

The American Feature Film Company, Cleveland, formerly controlled by N. F. Evans, with branch offices in Toledo and Cincinnati, has sold a large interest to Fred G. Schramm. Mr. Schramm will take over the management on his return from New York, where he is looking up new productions.

R. J. Greenwald, formerly operating as the Exclusive Feature Service, Cleveland, has taken over the Kriterion territory for the distribution of that corporation's productions. He is maintaining offices in the Columbia Building.

The many requests made to the management of the Duchess theater, Cleveland, influenced the return engagement of "The Spoilers," featuring William Farnum.

The Rex theater, Oberlin, has been sold to Ira West, the second change of management in the past three months. Mr. West plans to make a number of changes which include adoption of feature program.

The Royal theater, Galion, has inaugurated a popularity contest which is proving a highly satisfactory publicity "stunt." Seven candidates are hard at work, running neck-and-neck for the prize which the theater management offers.

JOPLIN, MO., REQUIRES CENSORED SUNDAY SHOWS

Mayor McIndoe Says Only Highest Class Films Can Be Used on Sabbath.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

MAYOR HUGH McINDOE, of Joplin, Mo., has made the announcement that henceforth all scenes depicting drunkenness, suicides and crimes are to be barred from motion pictures shown there on Sundays. "It is not the intention of the city," explained the mayor, "to deal harshly with the theater owner. We shall not try to dictate what sort of pictures they shall show. If they want to run sacred pictures, all right, but our idea is not to compel them to do that. All we will do is to put a stop to the showing of pictures of the kinds that I have described." "The Night Out," which is said to be a picture that was condemned by the National Board of Censorship, was barred by the mayor and police and the theater that was to have run it on Sunday.

FREE SHOWS ATTRACT BUYERS.

Harrisonville, Mo., has grown several thousand dollars richer since the merchants have geen giving free moving picture shows every Saturday. The farmers have been coming into town whether the weather was bad or good and purchasing enough necessities to see the pictures free.

In the same city "The Dawn of Plenty," illustrated show and lecture, was obtained by the National Bank from the International Harvester Company, and invitations were sent by mail to the farming patrons and friends of the bank. The bank drew large crowds to the city to witness the pictures that would help the farmers in their work and at the same time amuse and entertain them. The merchants of the city began to think on this matter and they decided to give free entertainments every Saturday. The stores give away the tickets and many teams line the hitching racks every Saturday now and not a merchant in town has been complaining of hard times. These shows are ideal for country towns and many film companies have made pictures of farming life with good stories built about it that interest the country people more than any other kind of pictures do. The merchants have realized this and they have been booking orders for various films that are sure to entertain and educate their patrons.

THE 12TH STREET THEATER.

In a recent issue of the Moving Picture World it was stated that E. E. Richards was manager of the Twelfth Street theater. This was in error. A. W. Durrin is manager of the Twelfth Street theater, which is owned by the Standard Amusement Company. Mr. Durrin has departed from the ranks of the five-cent theaters and changed the program of his house to features and the admission to ten cents. He did this in face of the fact that Twelfth street is a thoroughfare lined with five-cent theaters and the owners all say that it is impossible to operate a ten-cent house on that street. Mr. Durrin turned on the 12,580 watts of new nitrogen electric lights that have recently been installed in the artistic canopy and showed what could be done on Twelfth street. His house has been well filled at every performance. The fatures that he has been running at his theater are usually the ones that have appeared at the Willis Wood the preceding week. If the features are very good. Mr. Durrin runs them all week, which is something that no theater except the Willis Wood has dared to try in Kansas City. The plan has worked well and it is now the policy of the theater to operate in this manner hereafter. If the pictures are not very good they are run three or four days and then another feature is substituted.

MISSOURI ITEMS.

The Royal theater at Kansas City gave a benefit performance for the unemployed in Kansas City last week. The film "Rule G" was shown. The women of Kansas City who did the marvelous thing of establishing a complete factory for the making of any kind of textile clothing within four days for unemployed women of Kansas City had the theater for the day and the ten performances netted them much more than $500. The tickets to the show were sold for ten cents each, but anyone could pay any amount for the tickets and many did. The women that have been aiding the unemployed of Kansas City in this way do not have to call on charity in this work, but have made it self supporting.

Harry Arnote, of Liberty, Mo., has bought the Electric moving picture theater from Roy Hayes. He immediately took charge and reduced the price of admission except on special occasions, when he will revert to the old five and ten-cent scale. He is now operating the shows for five cents admission. Roy Hayes will probably travel for a moving picture film company, but will maintain him home at Liberty, Mo. Mr. Arnote has taken an option on the Airdome and will probably purchase that later in the year.

Gus Bennert, proprietor of several moving picture houses at Springfield, Mo., has closed the Diemer theater there. He said that the theater had never been a money-maker and that it was not intended as such when it was opened. He declared that the theater had served its purpose and hinted that it was started as opposition to some other theatrical proposition. It was reported that the People's theater had also closed, but Mr. Bennert said that this is not true and that he has no intention of closing it.

One of the biggest moving picture theater transactions in Missouri took place last week. O. E. Wilson, of Columbia, Mo., has sold the Broadway Odeon and the Annex moving picture houses to W. B. Gage. Mr. Gage has been employed for some time at the Western Union telegraph office there and he will continue shows at the two theaters without interruption. Mr. Wilson is going to the Panama-Pacific Exposition to operate a moving picture show in the Missouri state building.

Grubel Brothers, a theatrical syndicate of Kansas City, Kan., obtained a lease on the Kirby arcade at Springfield, Mo., and will open a moving picture theater there. They have also taken the lease of W. A. Rathbun, who owns a pool hall in the Kirby building. The Grubel Brothers have been considering increasing their string of theaters in Missouri by purchasing ground for the erection of new houses at Springfield, but they later decided to lease the ground.

IN CALIFORNIA.

H. H. Brix is having plans prepared for the remodeling of three buildings on J street, Fresno, Cal., into a moving picture house, the work to cost about $20,000.

The Alhambra Motion Picture Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., with a capital stock of $350,000 by A. M. and Agnes C. Kennedy, of Los Angeles, and John W. Eginton, Jr., of Santa Barbara. The Alhambra Film Manufacturing Company has also been incorporated there with a capital stock of $250,000 by A. M. and Agnes C. Kennedy, of Los Angeles, and Elmer J. Boeseke, of Santa Barbara. Still another incorporation in the southern city is that of the C. K. Film Company, with a capital stock of $250,000, the incorporators being the same as those of the Alhambra Motion Picture Company.

A. C. Pillsbury, a photographer of San Francisco, has gone into the Yosemite Valley to take seven reels of pictures featuring Indian legends.

The new theater of Turner & Dahnken at Watsonville, Cal., is rapidly assuming form and will be opened about the first of May.

The Unique theater, at Santa Cruz, Cal., has installed a new Powers Cameragraph No. 6A, as has also Grogg's theater, at Bakersfield, Cal.

Charles W. Parker is preparing to open a moving picture house at Butte City, Cal.

Fred Frisk has taken over John's theater, at Elmhurst, Cal., and has renovated the house throughout, installing new seats and projection equipment from the Independent Film Exchange of San Francisco.

W. Brandts-Buys has taken over the Castle theater, at Newcastle, Cal., and is installing considerable new equipment.

The Tokay theater, at Stockton, Cal., is being remodeled and renovated.

A new theater is being erected at Manteca, Cal., by J. J. Rawleigh, H. S. Erstad and J. L. Delmege.

Mr. Rork, of Mojave, Cal., is to give a moving picture entertainment at Tehacapi, Cal., one night each week.

F. O. Adler has purchased the Grand theater, at Redlands, Cal.

M. Para, of Bakersfield, Cal., spent a week in San Francisco.

School Films Measure

California Senate Considering Bill That Provides for Use of Pictures in State Schools—Board of Education to Open Bureau to Provide Equipment, Films, Extra Slides and Everything Needed at Lowest Prices—Will Make Marked Advance in Educational Efficiency.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspon dent of Moving Picture World.

THE use of moving pictures and photography in education in all the schools of California is provided in Senate Bill No. 936, which has just been introduced into the Legislature by Senator Carr, and which has the endorsement of the State Board of Education. This measure provides for a bureau of visual education under the direction of the State Board, which shall procure in any manner necessary films, slides and photographs suitable for promoting education, which shall be loaned to the various schools of the state as needed, and to other institutions when not in use in schools, except that slides and films shall not be used for commercial purposes.

The State Board is to act as purchasing agent for securing at cost to the various schools of the state such moving picture equipment as they may desire to acquire. A complete catalog will be published showing the list of films, slides and similar material on hand, as well as such as can be rented or borrowed for school use. The bureau will provide all necessary help and information to the schools of the state for the use of visual education in their work. It is planned to make arrangements whereby schools in remote country districts may make use of moving pictures the same as schools located in the large cities. The outlook is that the measure will be passed by both houses of the Legislature without opposition.

CLUB SECURES QUARTERS.

A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Screen Club of San Francisco was held on the evening of March 8, and the committee on club rooms announced that suitable quarters had been found in the Tivoli Theater Building. This announcement was received with much satisfaction and the president and secretary were authorized to sign a lease immediately for a period of two years. N. K. Herzog, who has acted as secretary of the organization since its inception, presented his resignation to the Board of Directors, and this was accepted. Ralph Marks, secretary of the Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, was appointed to fill the unexpired term and assumed his duties at once. Leon Boreis, manager of the local branch of the General Film Company, was elected to the directorate to succeed N. K. Herzog. Work will be commenced at once on the fitting up of the permanent quarters of the organization, and within a few weeks the club rooms should be in a complete form.

THEATERS DIVIDE SERVICE.

Arrangements have been concluded whereby Paramount service will be featured by both the Tivoli theater and Grauman's Imperial, instead of at the latter house exclusively, as has been the case in the past. This arrangement also carries with it a change in policy that is expected to be of material advantage and one that will probably be appreciated by the public. Instead of featuring double bills, as has been the rule of late, one feature only of five or six reels will be shown, the balance of the program of seven reels to be filled out with a comedy, or other short subjects. The regular Monday release will be taken by Grauman's Imperial and the following one by the Tivoli. Uniform prices of 10 and 20 cents will prevail at both houses.

MUTUAL ADDS TO FACILITIES.

The Pacific Mutual Film Corporation is remodeling its offices on Turk street to secure more room, the changes being made necessary by the steady increase in business. During the past year the office space has been more than doubled, but in spite of the improvements available room is at a premium. Manager J. R. Crone has recently added several men to the travelling staff and to the office force, and has promoted Mr. Stout to the position of assistant. This branch is now enjoying the heaviest volume of business in its history.

QUARANTINE RAISED BY PROTEST.

The quarantine that has been maintained in certain sections of San Francisco for some time owing to an epidemic of diphtheria, has been lifted by the authorities at the urgent request of moving picture exhibitors. The quarantine was first placed into effect in the North Beach section, and children under the age of fourteen years were not allowed to attend public places of amusement. Later the quarantine was extended to the downtown district and this brought forth vigorous protests from the owners of large houses, with the result that it was lifted from the entire city.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

M. E. Cory, of the Sunset Motion Picture Company, is planning to make another business trip to New York at an early date.

The National Cash Register Company has fitted up a neat moving picture theater in the Palace of Liberal Arts at the Exposition and is showing Kinemacolor pictures. An automatic dissolving view apparatus for showing slides is proving of special interest to moving picture men.

The Southern California counties have fitted up a moving picture theater in the California Building at the Exposition under the direction of Charles Wilson. A Powers Cameragraph No. 6A forms a portion of the equipment.

The Palace, at Union and Gough streets, has changed hands and is now being conducted by a Mr. Kennedy. This house is located but a short distance from the Exposition grounds.

The Wigwam theater, Twenty-second and Mission streets, has been making some changes of late in the operating room, and has installed a new Motiograph projection machine.

The American theater, opened by Edwin James, of Portland, Ore., has been equipped with Simplex machines by G. A. Metcalfe.

C. A. Du Bosch, representing Hugo Reisinger, of New York, is visiting the local trade in the interests of the carbon line of this importer.

G. A. Metcalfe has installed a Westinghouse motor-generator set in his Eddy street quarters, connected to Baird and Simplex machines to enable operators to become familiar with the equipment.

The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has placed three advance men on the road to handle the advertising on "The Spoilers," "The Christian" and "Cabiria."

Charles Klopot, formerly manager of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, at Los Angeles, and later in Oregon with "The Spoilers," is making a stay in San Francisco enjoying the Exposition.

Mike Zar, recently with the Berkeley theater, at Berkeley, Cal., is now with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

The Portola theater has enjoyed such a splendid run on the "Hypocrites" that this attraction has been booked for a second week.

Exhibitors and the Law

Pennsylvania State Department of Labor and Industry Commends Attitude of the Average Exhibitor Towards Its Work—Department Supervises Theaters Outside the Larger Cities—Building Code Strictly Enforced and New Theater Plans Closely Scrutinized.

Special to Moving Picture World by Pittsburgh News Service.

IT has been estimated that fully three-fourths of a million men, women and children gather nightly in amusement places in Pennsylvania. The Department of Labor and Industry has jurisdiction over all these places of amusement, except those which are located within cities of the first and second classes. The necessity of seeing that the lives of this vast number of people who nightly throng theaters are safeguarded is, therefore, apparent to every fair-minded person, the more so as two-thirds of the audiences in these places are composed of women and children. Also large percentage of them are strangers to the building, and ignorant or indifferent as to the means of egress, except through the door by which they entered. They have a feeling of security that all exits are open and that there would be nothing to impede their escape from the theater in case of an accident. The department is accordingly doing all in its power to see that conditions in these places of amusement are such as to warrant this feeling of security.

During the past year a large percentage of theaters were thoroughly inspected. If unsafe conditions were found, instructions were given to the management to correct these defects. In practically all cases the owners of the buildings wanted their theaters in the best condition. With scarcely an exception they gave the inspectors of the Department of Labor and Industry their fullest cooperation in whatever improvements were suggested. The proprietors, knowing all the exits from their house, were naturally apt to underestimate the possibility of danger to patrons who did not know these so well until the inspectors called it to their attention. The department is gratified to find this willingness on the part of exhibitors, which is not astonishing when one considers the responsible and intelligent men behind the picture houses today.

The number of this class of amusement houses in the state is increasing at the rate of about one a day. As the plans for these establishments are submitted to the department for approval they are carefully examined. Proper seating arrangement, adequate exit facilities, proper width of aisles and passageways, standard installation of moving picture machine booths and adequate fire protection—all of these particulars are given careful attention.

MADISON MAY HAVE CENSOR.

Motion picture theater men in the town of Madison, N. J., will probably be subject to an informal censorship of moving pictures according to the discussion on the subject which was recently held in the home of Arthur Herrington, president of the Board of Public Improvement. The educational committee, of which Professor Edwin Lee Earp of Drew Theological Seminary is chairman, on motion of Stark B. Ferris was ordered to make an investigation of picture theaters. It is thought that there will be no permanent official action, but the committee, it is understood, will consult frequently with the management of picture houses.

REEL SHOWS BILLY SUNDAY.

Billy Sunday, the great evangelist, who is holding a series of meetings in this city, was recently seen at the Boyer Orpheum, of Chambersburg, Pa., in moving pictures. This afforded many people who had wished very much to see Mr. Sunday, and who did not have the opportunity to go to Philadelphia, the chance to see him, exactly in his action, all his gestures and little mannerisms, just as he uses them in his sermons. There are about 1,000 feet of film to the picture, and it held the attention of the people throughout the entire exhibit.

BOOKING ORGANIZATION ELECTS.

Announcement was recently made of the organization of the Exhibitors' Booking Offices, Incorporated. The new company will conduct a co-operative moving picture booking business. Some of the leading moving picture theaters in the city are interested in the new project. The following officers were elected at a meeting of the company held at 1330 Vine street: President, Samuel Wheeler; vice-president, William T. Delmat; treasurer, William J. Walsh, and secretary, J. Emanuel.

ARCADIA SOON TO OPEN.

The list of Philadelphia's attractive photoplay houses will shortly be augmented by the Arcadia theater. The new entertainment house is now in course of erection on the north side of Chestnut street, east of 16th, and it expected that it will be completed prior to the ending of the month. It will be beautiful architecturally, fireproof and safe from a building aspect. Due to the fact of its central location it it expected that the new theater will be very popular with a particular clientele. Announcement of the exact date of opening of the theater will be made shortly, and at the same time the policy to be followed will be announced.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

Charles C. Hildinger, manager of several moving picture theaters at Trenton, N. J., recently offered an award of $25 for the arrest and conviction of the person who exploded a chemical that was so offensive that it drove 200 persons from one of his theaters. He also asked that the police find the person for violating the malicious mischief act. Detectives were assigned to the case and they will endeavor to discover the guilty party by investigating the sale of such material.

A thief who recently entered the home of William Metxel, treasurer of the William Penn theater, Preston and Lancaster avenues, West Philadelphia, overlooked $5,000 worth of silverware and took only $250 worth of jewelry which was lying loose upon a dresser.

A moving picture theater of the most modern type of construction has been opened at Front street and Alleghany avenue. J. Ridgeway, manager of this new establishment, announces that he purchased the majority of his equipment from the Calehuff Supply Company, which equipment includes two No. 6A machines.

TWO NEW ST. LOUIS EXCHANGES.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE St. Louis Film Service Incorporation has opened an exchange at 3217 Locust street, just across from the Pathe Exchange. The new offices are very complete, and are specially designed for the rapid and accurate handling of films. The building, which is one story high, to comply with the insurance rules regulating moving picture exchanges, covers 2,200 feet of space, and is first-class and modern in all respects. There is a fine wide reception lobby, that leads past the reception room and office to the booking and shipping rooms, bright and comfortable rooms for the clerks and office force, a private office for the manager, Mr. Cotter, complete poster and advertising department and film vaults large enough to hold the stock on hand at all times. J. W. Cotter, who is manager of the exchange, is an old timer in the moving picture business. He was formerly connected with the Universal Company, here and at Kansas City, and opened the first Universal Exchange in St. Louis. The new service is supplying a program of 21 reels a week and seems to be making headway. A special showing of the subjects released was shown at the Princess theater recently to a large gathering of exhibitors.

WORLD FILM EXCHANGE OPENS.

The new St. Louis exchange of the World Film Corporation is to serve as a pattern for all other exchanges of the corporation.

The St. Louis office, which is located at 3626 Olive street, in the heart of Film Row, has 2,700 feet of floor space, and is divided into three offices and a wide lobby or reception hall. The reception lobby extends thirty feet toward the center of the building and ends at the counter that separates the shipping room, which occupies the entire width of the building from the rest of the offices. The first room of the suite is Manager White's private office; after that comes the cashier's and bookkeepers' offices, with windows for the transaction of business with the public opening into the lobby. The methods of office procedure, management, and accounting, manner of handling films, paper and publicity, and all of the innumerable details demanded by the modern motion picture exchange have been systematized and worked out by R. L. White, manager of the exchange, and W. R. Scates, division manager of the World Film Corporation, to such a degree of perfection that the executives of the Corporation have decided to adopt the St. Louis system as a pattern and model for all of its other exchanges.

ST. LOUIS SHORTER NOTES.

Fred A. Keller, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, at 13th and Pine streets, announces a special feature department, which will handle the big Mutual features. The first release under the new plan will be "The Quest," an American Film Mfg. Co. subject, which will be released March 22. This will be followed by the "Lost House," a Majestic; "The Outcast," a Reliance, and "The Devil," released by the New York Motion Picture Company. Special advertising and special paper of all kinds will be devoted to these features under the new plan of distribution.

J. Sweeney, formerly manager of the Novelty theater, at Grand and Easton avenues, is now city salesman for the Kriterion Film Service.

The Shenandoah theater, at Broadway and Shenandoah avenue, gave a special school children's matinee recently that proved very popular.

G. Wagner, secretary of the Swanson-Crawford Film Exchange, at 14 N. 9th street, has assumed management of the exchange since Sam Werner has been in charge of the United Program's offices, at 3628 Olive street.

The new theater that is being built by D. T. Williams and wife, at 3520 North Newstead avenue, will be ready for its initial bill by the first of April. The new house will seat a thousand patrons, and will have all the up-to-date features and improvemenuts of a modern theater. Mr. Williams is also building an airdome that will be used when the weather gets too warm for the house.

A Cutting of Throats

Harrisburg, Illinois, Exhibitors Are Trying to Make Their Patrons Rich While the Money Lasts—Hot-Headed Retaliation to Unfair Competition Brings About a Pretty State of Affairs—Report Excites Sympathy Rather Than Admiration.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A MOST deplorable state of affairs has come about in Harrisburg, Ill. The Grand theater, unable to draw with its regular program in a legitimate way through proper presentation, policy and intelligent advertising, commenced to give away real American money—$75 every week—$25 three nights a week, on "lucky number" tickets as an inducement for the public to patronize their show.

The owners of the Orpheum, Star and Colonial, three other houses in the city, did not pay much attention to this cut-throat competition for a while, continuing with their established programmes in the hope that they would still be able to hold the patronage of the real photoplay lovers of the town, even at such tremendous odds. But it seems they have come to the conclusion that there are few patrons who really want good pictures, or at least that Harrisburg lacks enough to make good offerings a paying proposition while an exciting competition is going on. They, too, it seems, have now fallen from grace and have started a money distribution. At this distance it does not look like a cold-headed move on their part. We can at least sympathize with their exasperation, if not with their cutting—it got the better of their common sense. The pictures need not be mentioned—they don't seem to count in Harrisburg just now, but the Orpheum is giving away $300 every week while the money lasts.

This advertisement has been appearing in the Harrisburg papers every night in a two inch by six column space, the same as the Grand used.

"$300 in cash every week starting Monday, March 8th, at the Orpheum. $50 every night. Tickets will be given at Orpheum, Colonial and Star. If you are at either of the theaters when your name is called you will be notified by 'phone to come to the Orpheum. $50 every night at 7:15 whether you attend the Orpheum, Colonial or Star."

It happens that the Orpheum has been a good customer of the World Film Company. Now these features are, of course, no longer shown there and this has got W. R. Seates, central division manager of the World Film, with offices in Chicago, indignant enough to be willing to attempt to break up the Harrisburg scrap. He says that he'll spend a week there, if need be, to get the Orpheum back on his service list.

It is, indeed, a story that makes every one who hears about it indignant. The business must be profitable if people will go to such lengths to get control of it in a single city. Looked at with the eyes of cold philosophy, and as a specimen of how human brains sometimes work, it is as interesting as some rare plant.

CENSOR WOMEN WANT POWER.

Claiming that they are only figureheads without power to act the four women censors of Elgin, Ill., of the new appointed board, want an ordinance passed investing them with authority. The censors are Mrs. W. H. West, chairman; Mrs. A. W. Craven, Mrs. W. L. Goble and Mrs. George B. Watts. As the matter stands the censors are only permitted to view pictures and do what they can in raising the standard of pictures shown in Elgin houses by moral suasion. The progress made, so far as this method goes, is entirely unsatisfactory to the censors. They want authority to prevent the exhibition of films that do not meet with their judgment. And this is not all that the assiduous censors want to censor. They are bent upon having all phases of the motion picture situation in Elgin without flaw. They are now diligently poring over that part of the building ordinance relating to theaters and jotting down notes for amendments. Ventilation and sanitary appliances will come in for severe measures.

The present board of censors is the result of an agitation by a number of organizations of women started a year or so ago. They laid their case before the mayor, who told the women to pick out a committee to act as censors. They complied and the censors mentioned above were appointed by the mayor, but without power.

SUNDAY PETITION FAILS.

Gailsburg Will Not Vote on Sabbath Shows—City May Show Its Own Pictures.

The Galesburg petition lacked 604 legal signatures and the Sunday moving picture show question will not go on the ballot at the spring election.

Rumors that an attempt would be made to open the picture houses on Sunday were followed by threats of drastic ordinances. Manager R. C. Schroeder of the Colonial offered the use of his theater for any mass meeting if the church people wanted to protest against the Sunday operation of shows. The Galesburg Mail points out that there certainly is a serious issue of Sunday recreation for the poor and suggests that moving pictures, among other things, be given in the new Coliseum which the city is to erect this summer.

NO RACE FEELING WANTED.

Some recent remarkable features just released are not going to "get by" in Illinois if a bill introduced into the lower house of the Illinois Legislature passes. It provides a fine of $200 to $1,000 for exhibiting pictures or plays tending to incite race riots. But who will be a just censor of such plays in pictures?

WORK ON THEATER STOPPED.

Building Commissioner Offlighter in Springfield ordered remodelling work stopped on Joseph Hand's picture house at Ninth and North Grand avenues because it did not conform to the code. The code showed only the misprint "Springfield's public shall be built of brick" instead of "all moving picture houses shall be built of brick," and the City Commissioners decided to visit the house themselves.

The Apollo at Princeton has been experimenting with Saturday matinees planned for the visitors from out-of-town.

The Morrison Company of East St. Louis has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,000 to do a general amusement business. The incorporators are George H. Morrison, C. Gus Hugh and Charles Fairchild.

The Cort at Monmouth has become a popular price house, charging five cents every day and Saturday. Feature days, five or six reels, will be given for ten cents.

James McGavock is rebuilding the Coliseum at Chicago Heights.

Smallpox has gone from Erie and picture shows have reopened.

The redecorated and remodeled Orpheum at Elgin has been opened. Paramount pictures have been added to the program.

"Country Store" Ads

Post Office Department in Washington, D. C., Takes Cognizance of Advertisements of "Country Store" Scheme and Admonishes Newspapers to Refuse Such on Score of Their Being Like Lotteries—Schemes of This Kind Have Not Been Countenanced by Best Exhibitors.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEWSPAPERS throughout the country have been advised to refuse to accept advertising matter having a bearing on so-called country stores which have been operated quite extensively by motion picture theaters, as well as the legitimate houses, because of the fact that they closely resemble lotteries, which latter are barred from the mails. The Washington correspondent, when informed that the local papers had refused to accept the advertisements of a local theater in which the country store was featured, made inquiries of the Post Office Department concerning the matter. The officials queried declined to declare all country store schemes to be in the nature of lotteries, although they could not cite an instance where "chance" was not involved, but stated that their attention had been called to the country store matter on numerous occasions by postmasters and in each instance they had informed them that matters pertaining thereto should not be admitted to the United States mails.

The action of the Post Office Department in taking such a stand is particularly gratifying to those of the exhibitors who are endeavoring to conduct their business strictly upon merit. The more experienced among them have never countenanced the division of profit through the utilization of any such schemes and several who have tried the country store features, possibly in order to meet competition or to stimulate business, declare that the results are far from satisfactory. This is particularly true of the smaller houses which are placed at a disadvantage through limited seating capacity. Where prizes were offered on one night each week, it was found that at that time that a good business would be enjoyed, whereas on other nights there would be but the usual attendance, or possibly less if the neighborhood was one where the people were not accustomed to make many visits to the motion picture house in the one week. At one theater where the country store was operated each week day it was found that it soon grew monotonous to the patrons of the house and it was discontinued following the action of the Post Office officials. In all cases it was found that the country store failed to attract the better class of people.

EXPRESS COMPANIES PETITION TO RAISE RATES

Commerce Commission Requirements for Service Have Destroyed Profits

Exhibitors and exchangemen are facing a higher cost in the expressing of films for the various express companies have filed a petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission asking for a rehearing of the express rate case as a result of which the present tariffs were placed in force last year. The several companies state that under the present rates they have suffered a deficit of nearly three million dollars during the ten months commencing February 1, 1914, although they have done their utmost to make these rates a success.

The companies were put to the necessity of meeting an unavoidable increase in many of the elements of cost due to improved service instituted under the orders and the suggestions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. During this period, they declare, their business has substantially increased, but notwithstanding this and the economies practiced, the gross revenues have not been and will not be sufficient to enable them to continue their present standard of service, which service cannot be impaired without serious injury to the shipping public. Under the plan proposed by the companies, that of a readjustment of the elements composing the rate structure, the gross revenues of the companies will be increased 3½ per cent. The companies interested in this proceeding are the Adams Express Company, the American Express Company, the Southern Express Company and Wells Fargo & Company.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

It is reported that J. F. Thomas contemplates the reopening of the Regent Theatre in Richmond, Va., which place has been closed for several months.

Fred C. Wright, of the Colonial theater, Hagertown, Md.; Mr. Gebhardt, of the Clover theater, Baltimore, Md.; N. J. Hoerrmann, of the Palace theater, Petersburg, Va., and Edward Rossiter of the Crescent theater, in Baltimore, were among the many visitors seen in the local exchanges during the week.

Herbert M. Osborn, manager of the Washington office of Pathe & Company, Inc., has opened a branch at 28 West Lexington street, Baltimore, Md., with Harry E. Reddish, formerly of the Electric Theater Supply Company, in charge.

H. Clay Evans, of the firm of Evans Bros., operating the San Toy theater and the Opera House in Lonaconing, Md., was here last week and contracted for weekly service with the Pathe Company and for the Exploits of Elaine.

C. O. Moss, who operates the Charlotte, N. C. branch of the Washington office of the United Film Service Company, was a visitor. Mr. Moss reports that business is improving in the south.

J. E. Simpson has opened the Broadway theater in Charlotte, N. C. This is a very attractive house with marble front and an elaborately decorated interior with a seating capacity of about 600. Music is furnished by a six-piece orchestra and an admission charge of 10 cents is asked.

The Piedmont Amusement Company has opened the Broadway theater, in Danville, Va., with P. V. Phillips, formerly manager of the Paris theater owned by the same company in Durham, N. C., in charge. This house has a seating capacity of five hundred, is equipped with a four-piece orchestra, and is a ten-cent house.

It is reported that W. A. Sells has taken over the Park theater in Raleigh, N. C.

Ottawa Holmes has opened up Fairyland, which has been closed for some time.

The Columbia Amusement Company, of which Julian and Fulton Brylawski and Alan J. Bachrach are the members, has relinquished its lease to the Casino theater, Seventh and F streets, Northwest, and the house will be operated by its owners, the Mayer Amusement Company. This house runs both vaudeville and pictures.

A. Parish, of the Virginia theater, Richmond, Va., stopped over in this city on his way to New York, booking quite a number of features.

P. S. Geras also visited Washington from Charlottesville, booking reatures for the Victoria theater at that place.

A. C. Cunningham, representing the Atlas Film Company, of St. Louis, Mo. is in town.

A. N. Waters, who for the past year has been manager of the Apollo theater, on H. street, near Seventh street, Northeast, has accepted a similar position at the Paramount theater, in Roanoke, Va. During his stay in Washington has made many friends and all are sorry to see him go. The Paramount theater is a larger one than the Apollo and does not operate a Sunday show.

Mr. Waters is succeeded by Harry M. Moorehead who has been operating the Royal theater and later the Holliday street theater (stock) in Baltimore, Md. Previous to that time he was manager of the Grand and other theaters conducted by Pierce & Scheck in that city.

The National City Feature Film Service, in the Bank of Commerce and Savings Company, of which Alex G. Irvine is the manager, is about to undergo a change of name and will herafter be known as Irvine's Feature Film Company. W. H. Irvine, formerly with the World's Special Film Corporation, is now connected with the concern as vice president and general manager. This concern is now looking for larger quarters.

W. H. Irvine reports that he will have two large houses in this territory during the summer months and is desirous of obtaining large features of the type that can be run for a week or more.

The Lyric theater, in Petersburg, Va., is running vaudeville and pictures.

The Treble-Clef Musical Movies, is the name of a new company with offices at 414 Ninth street, Northwest, formed to handle the Treble-Clef productions in this territory. Nicholas Weems, formerly of Baltimore, Md., will act as district manager.

Edward Cowan of the Precision Machine Company, of New York, is here on a booster campaign which has as its aim the placing of a Simplex projector in every theater in the territory.

J. K. Burger, comptroller of exchanges of the Pathe Company, spent several days at the branch here.

Sidney B. Lust, of the United Film Service Company, spent several days in New York during the week.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to M. P. W. from Indiana Trade News Service.

CLIFFORD COLE, proprietor of the Orpheum theater, Elkart, was arrested recently for operating his theater on Sunday. The charges were preferred by Chief of Police Roth. The case will be a test and will be vigorously presented to determine whether that city can have Sunday amusement places as are in evidence in South Bend and Mishawaka, a short distance from here, and other cities in the state. The popularity of the open theater on Sunday was shown, recently, when more than 2,500 paid admissions were recorded on that day. The prosecution will be aided by the Law and Order League of Elkart, which has retained attorneys to assist the prosecutor. The defendants have engaged Robert E. Proctor, Perry L. Turner and Ira H. Couch, Elkhart attorneys, and three attorneys of South Bend to fight the case.

Clarence C. Johnson has made arrangements with the management of the Majestic theater in Sullivan to take moving pictures of institutions of general interest in that city. The pictures will be used in Johnson's educational productions throughout the country. He recently filmed a wonderful picture of the foot and mouth disease, showing the killing of over 400 head of cattle. It is the only motion picture of its kind in the United States.

The Switow Dream theater was closed for a few days while repairs were being made to strengthen the roof. Manager Walker is enthusiastic over the prospect of the owners fitting up a roof garden and showing the pictures there during the hot days of the summer. He believes it would be a winner.

Mr. A. L. New, Greenfield, has been receiving contracts for the erection of his new theater building in the rear of his magnificent block on Main street. It is to be fire-proof in every particular, with several exits, and will seat, very comfortably, 850 on the ground floor.

A Picturized Romantic Novel

$10,000 for 1000 Words!

THIS announces a startling departure in the motion picture industry—the first continued novel ever presented on the screen; a romantic story similar to those appearing in the Saturday Evening Post and other leading magazines; a "Flying A" production selected as the best of 19,846 scenarios submitted in the Chicago Tribune's $10,000 Photoplay contest; a story that will appear in the Chicago Sunday Tribune and 500 other leading newspapers; a novel now being produced in chapters at the magnificent Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Mfg. Co.; and $10,000 is offered for a sequel to the story—a $10,000 offer open to every man, woman and child.

The First Continued Story

The Saturday Evening Post and other leading magazines depend largely on the continued story for their steady circulation. The announcement of this first continued story to be offered Theatres, means to exhibitors the same steady patronage given the leading magazines; it means a story similar to those being run in the Saturday Evening Post, produced in motion pictures—a suspense story full of heart interest—a story that will bring patrons back each week to see the next chapter, just as they follow the stories in the Saturday Evening Post.

Feature Chapters

This mammoth production will be brought out in feature chapters; the first chapter will be a feature in three reels, and will be released May 3rd. Thereafter a two reel feature chapter will be released each week.

Each chapter will be an absorbing recital of love and adventure, based on true-to-life experiences. There will be logical thrills—heart throbbing suspense—deep interest.

This will be a picturized romantic novel—the portrayal of a story that will touch every heart.

"Flying A" Quality

$800,000 is being expended to make this the most phenomenal film production ever brought out. The entire resources of the American Film Mfg. Co.—acknowledged one of the greatest film organizations of the world—are being used to make this a master production.

It will be a "Flying A" feature with the assurance of "Flying A" quality—representing the very highest standard of motion picture production.

A Money Maker for Exhibitors

This mammoth feature is bound to be the greatest money maker ever offered exhibitors. Think of running such a story as appears in the leading magazines, in picturized form at your Theatre. Think of the continued interest that will bring your patrons back each week to see each feature chapter. Think of the $10,000 prize offered to any man, woman or child, sending in the most acceptable suggestion for a sequel to this story—"The Diamond from the Sky." Think of this "Flying A" feature, with all these powerful attractions, and you will realize that this is the greatest production ever offered exhibitors.

The Men and the Companies Back of this $800,000 Production

BACK of this gigantic "Flying A" feature are two of the most successful men in the film industry—S. S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Manufacturing Company, and John R. Freuler, President of the North American Film Corporation.

These men are film producers; they have planned this great effort for many months. They bring into play the entire power of the magnificent "Flying A" studios at Santa Barbara, California; Chicago, Illinois, and London, England.

A Master Stroke

The producing of this "FLYING A" feature represents a master stroke in filmdom. It represents the combined effort of many of America's greatest film experts and literary lights. It means careful planning and study to give exhibitors the production that will draw packed houses regularly. Its success is already assured.

The payment of $10,000 for the scenario alone, indicates the effort that is being expended to make "The Diamond From the Sky" the most powerful box office attraction ever presented.

The Story in 500 Newspapers

The Chicago Sunday Tribune—the World's Greatest Newspaper—and 500 associated newspapers will run this story simultaneously with the appearance of the films.

The story itself is a literary masterpiece. It was written by a genius. It has style—the style that grips and thrills. It has deep heart interest, suspense, true-to-life adventures. It will appeal to man, woman or child.

If you are interested in seeing some particular newspaper in your vicinity run this story, call on the Editor at once, and have him address the Syndicate Department of the Chicago Tribune, Chicago, Ill., for full particulars. DIX THEATER CO. TO BUILD.

A new high-class motion picture house will be erected on the southeast corner of Ferdinand and Dix avenue by the Dix Theater Co., recently incorporated, for $75,000. The principal stockholders are Frederick Schneider, Joseph N. Schneider and John S. Affeld. Plans which are not yet completed call for a brick structure to cost $75,000. It will seat 1,500 people, and will be one of the prettiest of the outlying theaters in Detroit. The work of construction will begin sometime in April.

Michigan Theaters Corp.

Leading Managers of State Affiliate to Buy Features—Brings Exhibitor and Producer Nearer and Cuts Middlemen's Profits—Practice of "Bidding" for Price by Exchange Men Cause of Movement—Will Affect Business Methods.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE leading owners and managers of moving picture theaters in all sections of Michigan have incorporated an association known as the Michigan Theaters Corporation. The object of the association is to rent feature films direct from the producer, thus eliminating the commissions of the film exchanges and distributing companies. Exhibitors will get their features for less money and may save at least 50 per cent. by the new arrangement.

The officers are: A. W. Blankmeyer, Grand Circus theater, president and general manager; A. Arthur Caille, Majestic and Maxine theaters, vice-president; A. Warren, Wyandotte theater, secretary and treasurer. Board of Directors: August Kleist, Pontiac; Henry J. Guthard, Detroit; Arthur Caille, Detroit; William Klatt, Detroit; A. W. Warren, Detroit, and A. Stocker, Detroit. Temporary offices will be at the Grand Circus theater, Detroit. The corporation held its first regular meeting on March 16 and outlined its future plans.

To a representative of the Moving Picture World, President Blankmeyer said: "We are combining to protect ourselves and to do away with the practice of bidding for features, an evil that is becoming very prevalent. Not alone this, for we have found more than one exchange who will promise to give an exhibitor a feature at a stated price, and then sell it to his competitor with the excuse that he could get more money for it.

"In this Michigan Theaters Corporation we will have 100 members by April 1st. They will consist of exhibitors who run high-class features only. What these exhibitors will want are the best features obtainable. The producer will sell his feature to us for a certain amount of money, for which we are in a position to pay cash. For instance, on the basis of a feature costing $1,000, the corporation would send it to members only at these prices: $50 for first run, $40 for second, for the next thirty days $20 per day, next 20 days at $15 per day, next 30 days at $7.50 per day, which includes paper, advertising matter, etc. Our corporation has established a credit with a Detroit bank for $10,000, so that we have the best of financial backing. Each exhibitor will be issued a franchise, which he can cancel by giving four weeks' notice. The exhibitors who belong are all located in territories that do not conflict, so that there can never be any trouble on that score. No exhibitor can buy more than five shares of stock, which have a par value of $10 each. Should the corporation make any profit, it will be turned over to the exhibitor, who will receive a credit on his future service.

"We believe our plan will ultimately result in a national organization of exhibitors, divided into various classes in the different states for the purpose of doing business direct with the producer. Competition is getting so keen, and the price of features is becoming so high, due entirely to the practice of bidding, that in my opinion, the moving picture industry faces a crisis unless there is something done quick. The exhibitor to-day is at the mercy of the exchange man. The exhibitor and the producer are too far apart. They should become closer related. Many exhibitors will have to quit the business unless they are better protected and can get their features for less money. They cannot stand the present pace.

MAJESTIC READY TO OPEN.

Detroit's largest and finest photoplay house, the Majestic, located at Woodward avenue and Willis street, will open Thursday, April 1st, according to an offcial announcement made by the management. The scaffolding is down, the seats are being laid, and the various contractors have given their assurance that they will be all through in time for the opening date. The tentative policy is to change photoplays four times a week. The Majestic will be under the management of M. W. McGee, formerly of New York, and a man who has many years of experience in the moving picture business. A. Arthur Caille is president of the company.

EXHIBITOR M. W. McGEE.

M. W. McGee, manager of the new Majestic theater, Detroit, Mich., which opens about April 1st. Mr. McGee was formerly located in the east, and is a member of the New York Screen Club. The Majestic will be the largest moving picture theater in Michigan. It will accommodate approximately 2,000 persons on one floor, and will be one of the most beautiful playhouses in the United States. The Majestic is located at Woodward avenue and Willis street, about a mile from the center of the city. It is operated by the Majestic Theater Company, of which A. Arthur Caille is president.

M. W. McGee.

DREW TO HAVE NEW THEATER.

Frank Drew, manager of the Avenue theater, announces that he has closed a deal whereby he takes a 30-year lease of the building to be erected at 250-254 Woodward avenue, Detroit, the annual rental being about $25,000. The proposed theater will be known as the Drury Lane and will have seating capacity for 600 people. Moving pictures will be shown exclusively at ten cents. The building will be so constructed as to have a lobby 20 feet wide and 40 feet deep, with entrance on Woodward avenue. In the rear will be the amphitheater, 60 by 62½ feet in size. A $10,000 pipe organ will be installed, and in addition there will be an orchestra. Work on the structure will start April 1st, and will be completed by November 1st. It will be the second large theater to be erected on Woodward avenue, between the Campus and Grand Circus Park.

George W. Trendle, of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, is expected back from his southern trip early in April.

Against Censorship Bill

Massachusetts Joint Legislative Committee on Mercantile Affairs Reports as Unfavorable Both Bates Bill for State Censoring of Film and "Twenty-Minute Bill"—Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children Favored Censor Bill.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE joint legislative committee on Mercantile Affairs has reported as unfavorable that bill which provided for the censorship of all moving picture films by the State Board of Labor and Industries.

This bill was presented to the Massachusetts Senate by Senator Bates of Dorchester at the petition of Carl C. Carstens, special agent of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. It provided that all films be reviewed and licensed by the State Board of Labor and Industries.

A public hearing was given to the bill at the State House a month ago. About three hundred women appeared in favor of the bill. These women represented various women's clubs throughout the state and pleaded with the board to report the bill favorably. They contended that all crime should be eliminated from a film, as such pictures made a great impression on the younger generation and incited them to practice what they saw depicted on the screen. Representatives of Mayor Curley of Boston appeared before the Committee and argued against the passage of the bill, stating that there have been no crime-inciting or immoral films exhibited, as far as he knew.

The legislative committee has also reported that the so called "Twenty Minute Bill" is unfavorable. This bill, which provides for an intermission of five minutes after a film has been on the screen for twenty minutes, was repealed from the statute books last year.

WEST MEDFORD WOMEN WILL CENSOR FILM

Pictures Are to Be Admitted; But Women's Club Will Supervise Them.

The moving picture war in West Medford, Mass., which caused a division in the women's societies of that town, is over, but any films shown there will be subject to the strictest censorship. William Cliggott was the petitioner for the theater license. At the request of Mayor Haines, the West Medford Women's Club held a meeting last week and a committee was appointed to act as censors for all films, which are to be shown in the city. Mrs. Sarah Connell, president of the club, is chairman of this committee. Associated with her are Mrs. Clara Runney, Mrs. Jennie Kelsey, Mrs. Lila Woods and Mrs. Gertrude Wilkins. Mrs. Connell has stated that only the best and highest variety of films would be passed by her board and declares that the petitioner for the license has assured her that only the most conservative pictures would be offered.

PICTURES KNOCK AT BROOKLINE'S DOORS

Aristocratic City Has No Regular Shows as Yet; But May Admit Them.

Brookline, New England's richest town, is again confronted with the problem of granting a license for a moving picture theater. The only license held in the town, at the present time, is that granted to the Brookline Friendly Society, which gives shows Fridays and Saturdays. This is not a commercial proposition and according to the terms of the license the revenue received from the shows must not exceed the expenses. If such a thing should happen, they are to reduce the price of admission.

Two petitions for new houses have been presented to the selectmen. John A. Curtin, who is now a member of the school committee, has petitioned in behalf of clients unknown to the selectmen for permission to build a playhouse, which will seat 1200 person and to cost $200,000. The other petitioner was A. J. Hayman, a real estate dealer.

If a public hearing on the petitions is granted, it is expected that there will be a repetition of scenes enacted a year ago at the hearing on a petition for a picture house on Washington street, near Brookline avenue, when prominent citizens, including many clergymen, appeared against the proposal and the petitioners were given leave to withdraw.

FIVE NEW THEATERS.

This Year to See Addition of Important Picture Houses in Boston.

Five new moving picture theaters, the total value of which will exceed one million dollars are to be erected in and around Boston, in the near future.

A $200,000 house is to be erected by the newly incorporated $7,000,000 company, the Olympia Theatres, Inc., in Central Square, Cambridge, Mass. This house will be the largest in the University City with a seating capacity of 2500. Operations will begin during the second week of April. This house will face the busiest portion of Central Square and the lobby entrance will be almost directly at the entrance to the Cambridge subway. The building will extend a distance of over 300 feet. It will have but one floor and one balcony. The building will be fireproof and have every modern convenience.

The ground has already been broken for the new Fenway theater, a $300,000 picture and vaudeville house to be erected at the corner of Boylston street and Massachusetts avenue, Boston. An improved heating and ventilating system will be installed. A $25,000 organ is one of the features planned. The opening will take place shortly after Labor Day. The new building is to contain two large bowling alleys in the basement and two stores on either side of the main entrance to the theater. The structure was designed by Thomas Lamb of New York.

The Loew interests are planning the erection of a $400,000 house on the site of their Orpheum theater, Boston. Work will be started on this project in the near future. The Orpheum property, which is situated on Washington street, through to Hamilton place, is owned by Harvard College. It was formerly the Old Music Hall, and since then it has been known by various names. The Loew interests have obtained a new forty year lease on the property. The plans for the new structure are now in the hands of the architect.

A theater, which will seat 1200 persons, is to be built in Hyde Square, Boston, at a cost of $100,000. Plans are being prepared by G. Henri Desmond, a prominent Boston architect.

The city of Revere is to have a new theater, which will be erected at the corner of Broadway and the Revere Beach boulevard. It will cost $75,000.

NEW FENWAY THEATER.

The ground has been broken for the new Fenway theater, a $300,000 moving picture and vaudeville house, to be erected at the corner of Boylston street and Massachusetts avenue, Back Bay, Boston. The house will be equipped with every modern improvement and convenience. An improved heating and ventilating system will be installed. There will be a retiring room for ladies with a matron in attendance. A lounging and smoking room for men and a $25,000 organ will be among the features planned. The opening will take place shortly after Labor Day. The new building is to contain two large bowling alleys in the basement; two stores on either side of the main entrance to the theater on the ground floor. The house will be absolutely first class and fireproof in construction. The front will be of terra cotta. The structure was designed by Thomas Lamb of New York. There will be a large orchestra pit, seating twelve musicians and sixteen exits have been provided.

E. H. HORSTMANN IN BERMUDA.

President Ernest H. Horstmann of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has left for a short vacation at Bermuda. The vacation is well deserved, as Mr. Horstmann has been one of the busiest men in New England for the past seven months working over the incorporation of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., of which he is clerk, besides fighting several bills in the legislature, which have been adverse to the moving picture industry.

BOSTON SHORT ITEMS.

Mrs. Thomas McEvoy has reopened the Olympic theater, Leominster, with United Film Service.

Harry F. Campbell, New England manager for the Fox Film Corporation, was hurried to the Commonwealth Hospital, Boston, last week, where he was operated upon for appendicitis. On the second day of following the operation, Mr. Campbell was the recipient of a large bouquet of flowers from the members of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. During Mr. Campbell's absence, the Fox interests are in the hands of Abraham Carlos.

Correcting an error in this column last week, we will state that the Boston branch of Picture Playhouse Film Co. is managed by Herman L. Craig, not Norman L. Craig.

William Halley, formerly with the Eastern Feature Film Company, but now associated with B. O. Wetmore, of Boston, opened a film exchange called the Union Film Exchange, in White's Opera House block, at Concord, N. H. The fire officials compelled them to close on account of the great fire risk. They opened in three other buildings and met a similar fate. It is now their intention to establish their exchange at Manchester, N. H.

Manager C. W. Ripley of the Colonial theater, Brockton, Mass., announces that he is doing a remarkable business using first-run United Film Service, with three changes a week, with seven reels to a change.

L. E. Badger has purchased the Lion theater, Springfield, Mass., and has renamed it the Majestic.

Plans are afoot for the construction of a moving picture theater at Nos. 542-544-546 Main street, Worcester.

J. Pilver, proprietor of the St. Johnsbury theater at St. Johnsbury, Vt., is having his popular little playhouse thoroughly renovated and remodeled.

On April 5, the Dreamland on Washington street, Boston, will be compelled to close its doors. This theater is one of the oldest exclusive picture theaters in the city. The owners of the land and the building have decided to raze the structure to make room for a modern business block. Herman Sivovolos, who has been the manager of the house for the past five years, has resigned from his position and is now affiliated with the American Feature Company as a roadman.

The State of Massachusetts has purchased a moving picture machine, which is to be used at the State Hospital at Foxboro. It is planned to entertain the inmates of the institution.

The Loew Boston Theaters Company has been incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, with a capital stock of 6,000 shares, valued at $100 par. The directors are Marcus Loew of New York, president; Laurence D. Beggs of Philadelphia, treasurer; Maurice Douglas Flattery of Brookline, Mass., clerk; Leon S. Westcoat of Philadelphia and David Bernstein of New York City.

MAINE NEWS LETTER.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Manager A. L. Ehrgott of the Bangor branch of the General Film Company, has gratuitously furnished to the Aroostook County Tuberculosis Association educational films to be used in the society's fight against tuberculosis throughout Aroostook county. These films are two recent Edison releases, "Cost of Human Lives" and "The Temple of Molock."

Adalard Fournier has opened a theater at Jackman, Maine, and will use Universal service.

Among the moving picture representatives in Bangor during the past week were N. Ross of the Paramount service, Boston, and Walter Nelson of the Mutual Special Feature department, also of Boston.

Manager Edward Farrell of the Boston office of the General Film Company was a recent visitor in Bangor.

Paul P. Peakes, proprietor of the Chic theater at Milo, using General Film service, was a visitor to Bangor recently and reports fair business.

John Smith, proprietor of the Bon Ton theater at Mattawamkeag, was in Bangor during the week on business.

Proprietor Stephen Bogrett, of the Bijou theater, Bangor, has been in New York City on business during the week.

"The Black Box" opens at the Palace theater, Bangor and the other theaters on the Maine Universal circuit in the week beginning March 21st.

Proprietor John J. Hone, of the Presque Isle Opera house, who was in Bangor during the week, states that he is up against a unique proposition in the censorship line in his home town.

David F. Perkins and Louis Albion, actor-playrights of Portland, Maine, and Hamilton Osborne of Newark, N. J., author of the famous novel, "The Running Fight," have sold their joint moving picture interests in the play of the same name to the Famous Players Film Co. for a considerable sum, the contract having just been closed.

Bangor motion picture theaters are considering raising prices to at least ten cents for admission in the evening, and possibly in the afternoon. There are three theaters in Bangor devoted exclusively to moving pictures, the Park, Palace and Graphic. The Park theater admission price is five cents afternoons and ten cents in the evening. The Palace and Graphic are both five cent theaters, and, while in the past there has never been any agreement between managers of local houses regarding prices, it is now felt that the time has come when the public will be willing to pay ten cents for night admissions, at the lowest.

Bangor has witnessed fierce competition in the motion picture business during the years since it first became popular here, and the theaters have not always proved to be highly profitable. The feeling among the managers is that it is high time that a reasonable admission be paid for the high-class entertainment provided in Bangor theaters. The local houses give shows that bring from 15 cents to a quarter in other cities, and they feel that they should apply business principles to the box office.

Greely's theater, at Portland, has found that its patrons favor five subjects in six reels, a policy that provides the best entertainment the theater has offered for a long time. Most of the films are comedies.

The Committee on Mercantile Affairs and Insurance of the Maine Legislature has reported "ought to pass" on the act relative to the use of the cinematograph, which was reported in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World.

It is rumored that at Calais out of town parties are negotiating for the purchase of property on Main street, adjoining the Government Building lot, on which it was proposed to erect a modern motion picture theater.

Manager Greely, of the motion picture house of that name, in Portland, is the only picture man in the Maine legislature. Mr. Greely did not have a theater in which to stage the production, but it was Greely's show in the Maine House of Representatives on a morning last week just the same. He was the leader in the only two fights of the morning session. He won in one, and fell down in the other. In both cases he put up the stubbornest kind of a scrap. He talked in favor of an amendment to refer the whole matter of dividing the town of Bristol, and won it. The second scrap was on a woman's reformatory, in which he lost out. Mr. Greely is one of the popular men in the legislature.

EFFECT OF PICTURES ON SCHOOL CHILDREN

Cincinnati School Authorities to Keep Records of Work of Students Who Have Seen Films.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHILE the high educational value of films of certain kinds, designed especially with reference to their instructive possibilities, is generally admitted by school and church authorities, there has been some doubt as to the effect upon the minds of children of the ordinary run of films, such as are shown at the average picture show; and it is for the purpose of obtaining some accurate data on this point that an experiment of considerable interest is being conducted by the principal and teachers of the Vine Street school, in Cincinnati. Every morning each teacher ascertains from the children which of them attended a picture show the evening before, and a record is made of this information, which is compared with the work done by the children during the day. It has been found that nearly 50 per cent. of the children attend the picture shows, and as the city school authorities are encouraging the investigation, "there is no doubt that the studies of the children are affected by their attendance upon moving picture shows," said Superintendent Condon, in this connection. "Pictures of the right kind are stimulating, while others are harmful. Some plan must be worked out for taking advantage of the children's interest in pictures to have them see only the right kind, and the co-operation of the owners and managers of the theaters will, of course have to be secured for this purpose."

Such records will have very little real value. If a child ate too much ice cream after the show it might be billious and sleepy next day. Many other considerations enter into the effect of any one picture on a child's mind. There are many kinds of food and many kinds of pictures.

TWO BIG HOUSES ADOPT FILMS.

One of the most important defections from the so-called "legitimate" theatrical field to the moving picture department which has occurred recently was announced last week by the management of the Anderson & Ziegler Co., operating three large Ohio houses and one in Indianapolis, at least two of these four will shortly be turned into film theaters. One of these. the Columbus Lyceum, is already running pictures, and it is announced that the new policy will be inaugurated at the Dayton Lyceum this week and at the Indianapolis Lyceum on March 25. The Walnut Street theater, in Cincinnati, which has always done a big business as a member of the Stair & Havlin circuit, will probably continue showing the attractions of that organization until summer, when, as last year, it will devote itself to feature pictures. Clay E. Brehm, Cincinnati manager for the World Film Corporation, has closed a contract with the Anderson & Ziegler Co. for exclusive feature film service, three features a week, a piece of business of extremely desirable proportions.

WILL OPEN PROJECTION ROOM.

The Cincinnati Theater Supply Co., which recently leased new quarters at 123 and 125 Opera place, a location of decidedly show business atmosphere by reason of the proximity of the theaters and of other film exchanges and moving-picture interests, is planning to equip as an important part of its new plant a handsome and complete projection parlor, where exhibitors can see the pictures under exhibition conditions before booking them. The company has been at 29 Opera place for some time. The new lease is for five years, at an annual rental of $4,000.

PATHE WEEKLY HELPS MAN FIND HIS WIFE.

Frank Stears, clerk at the Hotel Munro, saw the film at a local house, and thought he recognized in one of a group of Red Cross nurses, taken on a steamer en route for the war, the wife of one of his guests, Allan A. Campbell. He told Mr. Campbell, who went to the theater, only to find that the picture had been routed out of town. It came back, however, and at the Pathe office a special performance was staged for Campbell's benefit. The film was run over and over again before him, and he identified, without question, a woman prominently shown in the foreground in one scene as his wife, from whom he has been separated for some months.

CINCINNATI BRIEFS.

It is understood that Jackson's Family theater, in St. Bernard, a Cincinnati suburb, is to be considerably enlarged during the summer, to be ready with its greater seating capacity in ample time for the opening of the fall season. The case of the additional seats and other improvements for which plans have been prepared is estimated at about $5,000.

Manager C. C. Hite, of the Mutual, is rather proud of the large audience of exhibitors which turned out for a special performance which he announced recently to be held at the Royal, at which "The Quest" was the film shown. No less than forty-five local exhibitors attended the exhibit of the picture as guests of the Mutual, which, according to Mr. Hite, exceeds former records by over thirty.

L. W. Foster, of the Arcade Theater, one of the popular houses of Avondale, is trying a venture into the film business on the brokerage basis, which is somewhat new in Cincinnati. He has obtained quarters for the enterprise in the same building as that occupied by the World, at 17 E. Sixth street, with E. F. Lemping as manager.

Charles G. Williams, of Coshocton, O., recently appointed as a member of the State Board of Censors to succeed Harry E. Vestal, who tendered his resignation, has brought cheer to the hearts of exhibitors and film men by his announcement that his point of view in censoring films will be, as nearly as possible that of the average man and woman, and that he will cut out, therefore, only such scenes as he believes would really injure morals. B. B. Buckley, a Dayton lawyer, is said to have refused the position, giving business reasons therefor, as the place does not pay a large salary—only $1,500 a year.

Manager Camplin of the Alhambra theater, of Springfield, O., has inaugurated an innovation which is becoming extremely popular, in the shape of a play room for small children, equipped with a sand pile, blocks, bubble-blowers, etc., in charge of a competent maid. Mothers may thus leave their children in good hands while attending the matinee or shopping, and the result means great good will for the Alhambra.

Licensing Operators

Buffalo Board of Aldermen Are Discussing Methods of Examining and Giving Licenses to Picture Operators—It Has Been Proposed to Give Full Licenses to Any Operator Who Has Filled the Job in Any One House for Six Months Consecutively.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent of Moving Picture World 229 Oxford Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

ARGUMENTS for and against the proposed licensing of moving picture operators in Buffalo were recently heard at a meeting of the Aldermanic ordinance committee of that city. The plan provides for the appointment of a board of examiners to determine the fitness of the operators. According to the proposed ordinance the operator must be 21 years old. William A. Bean spoke against the proposition. He said that such an ordinance would not be sustained by the courts. He said in part: "All danger from fire has been eliminated by the installation of non-explosive and non-combustible films and the fireproofing of booths. The Scientific American says the best moving picture theater city in the country is in Buffalo. The houses here are safely built and commodious for patrons." Mr. Bean said fifty-eight theaters in Buffalo would find it unprofitable to pay a higher rate of wages to operators. William J. Evans, attorney for the operators, offered an amendment that any man continuously employed for six months in any one house be given a license upon payment of the fee. Attorney Percy S. Landsdown and others spoke against the ordinance. Among those who spoke in favor of the plan were A. A. Geddes, F. C. Taylor, Albert Ryan and Charles Riehl.

NO NEW YORK SUNDAY LAW.

City Attorney S. H. Millener of Tonawanda, N. Y., says he has been unable to find a law prohibiting moving picture shows on Sunday in New York State. Mayor Cordes of Tonawanda has therefore decided to permit Sunday shows. This is the outcome of a movement begun by the churches of that city to have theaters closed there on Sunday. Petitions had been served on the Mayor, requesting him to see that the Sunday closing law be enforced.

NOT COMPETENT TO CENSOR.

L. C. Sherman of Schenectady, writing to an Albion, N. Y., newspaper, says police forces would not be satisfactory as censors of moving pictures. He says police officers in general are not competent critics and that they have enough to attend to with their regular duties.

SYRACUSE OPERATOR'S RATES.

The moving picture operators of Syracuse, N. Y., have asked the exhibitors of that city to sign an agreement which contains these and other features:

Houses running night only from 6:30 to 11 p.m. are to employ one operator at $15 a week for six days. Matinees are to be paid for at the rate of fifty cents an hour or a fraction thereof. Sunday work is to be paid for at the rate of $1 an hour. Houses running from 2 to 11 p. m. are to employ one operator at $20 a week of six days. He is also to get $1 an hour on Sundays. Houses opening before 2 p. m. must employ two operators to work a split shift, or, in other words, six hours. The head operator is to be paid $20 and the second man $18 for a week of six days and on Sunday they are to receive $1 an hour. All extra or relief operators are to be paid 50 cents an hour or a fraction thereof.

ON STATE CENSORING.

The Buffalo Enquirer has made this comment: "The movement to create a State board of censors has not succeeded yet, but it probably will. Any movement which would create several new jobs and might lead to more is likely to win in time in the State of New York." The writer then pays a tribute to the censorship devised by the People's Institute of New York.

NEW YORK STATE BRIEFS.

Chief of Police Hyatt of Albany, N. Y., has warned exhibitors of that city that children under age, unaccompanied by parents or guardians, must not enter the theaters.

A report from Oswego, N. Y., says that C. H. Eddy of the United Film Syndicate has been making preliminary plans to arrange a feature film around the various scenes in that city.

R. P. McMindes will open the Hippodrome moving picture theater at Painted Post, N. Y.

E. Otto Davis has bought the Orpheum vaudeville and moving picture theater at Butler, Pa.

Fire recently damaged the Elite moving picture theater of Kenmore, N. Y.

The Gem, a small moving picture theater of Ogdensburg, N. Y., has been closed permanently. The house was formerly the Bijou.

Burt C. Ohmann has accepted plans for the moving picture theater which he will build at the rear of the Press building in Lyons, N. Y. The theater will be of hollow tile and steel and will seat 800.

H. L. Clark has taken charge of the City moving picture theater at Ellwood City, Pa.

The Buffalo News recently printed a story that moving pictures taken at the battle fronts are being collected and shown before generals and staff officers of the Austrian and Hungarian armies.

W. H. Faville is considering plans to erect a $4,000 three-story building in Dolgeville, N. Y. A theater on the ground floor would seat 800 persons. Architect Berg of Utica, N. Y., has prepared tentative plans for the house.

N. R. Lockwood is seeking permission to run moving picture shows in Music hall controlled by the authorities of Norwood, N. Y.

As the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has endorsed moving pictures in Yonkers on Sunday, theaters are open there on that day. The decision was the outcome of a test case carried to this court by several exhibitors.

NEBRASKA NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

The State of Nebraska and exhibitors probably will cooperate in showing educational pictures after next fall.

Dr. G. E. Condra of the conservation commission is working on a plan to rent films of local or State interest to the theaters. This has been done in a small way, but nothing on a broad plan has been attempted. School children in the cities where the films were booked would be interested and the local exhibitor, it is believed, would receive additional patronage.

The Elite No. 2 theater in Omaha gave a special boys' show for Probation Officer Miller and a number of boys who had good records with the local authorities.

E. V. Cramer will operate as a ten-cent house the Empress at Alliance which he purchased from Harry DuBuque.

Frank Johnson of Louisville has discontinued his restaurant business and will operate a moving picture show in connection with his ice cream and confectionery store.

J. C. Schulenberg has bought the moving picture show at Shubert from T. Hill.

JACKSONVILLE NEWS LETTER.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" was shown here on March 17 and 18 at the Imperial theater, managed by N. W. Ramond. The picture was brought to the theater by Lawrence H. Smith, said to represent the Chattanooga Film Exchange.

Now the Southern Amusement and Investment Company, which is interested in some of the local theaters, has booked the same picture from the Bery Levey Circuit, Inc., of Los Angeles and were expecting to show it early in April. When Mr. Silverman, manager of the Southern States' territory of that company, learned of the exhibition of it at the Imperial he called Mr. Ramond on the telephone and explained the situation to him, this occuring on March 17, so Mr. Silverman claimed. He then communicated with attorneys here and they filed an injunction against Mr. Ramond, Mr. Smith and Arthur S. Dickinson (Chattanooga Film Exchange) on March 18 in the Circuit Court. A temporary restraining order was allowed from 11 to 3 p. m. The case was heard at noon, and Judge Gibbs, finding that the complainants had no correspondence from the makers of the film, dismissed the case at 1:30. Later in the afternoon the attorneys for the Levey interests received a wire stating that the Keystone Company had made no contracts with any other company but the Levey circuit for territory including Florida. The local attorney then filed bond and replevined the film. When the officer went to the theater at 6:20 the film and Mr. Smith were gone. What had become of Mr. Smith and "Tillie's Romance" nobody told and now it will be up to the courts to find out the answer. The Levey representative claims that his company has exclusive right for the state of Florida, as well as other southern states.

At the Savoy crowds stood outside waiting to see Chaplin in a Keystone picture there. The Prince theater lobby was thronged all evening, waiting to get in to see "A Fool There Was." The Republic, with "In the Land of the Head Hunters," kept many people waiting to gain admittance. The Grand, with a General Film program, had big crowds and many were kept waiting for room to get in. The tourists are filling up the city, many of them on their way back from farther down the state have stopped over in Jacksonville for a few days before taking their way homeward.

The Florida Motion Picture Co., Inc., with offices at 328-329 St. James Bldg., recently organized by Mr. G. Harry Hamilton and Mr. Fred Heider. The company is being backed by some local capital at the present. Four and five-reel pictures will be produced at first. It is the intention of the management to put on four and five-reel subjects, taken from stage productions. One of the first pictures is to be "The Harbor of the Sun." Another is to be "Children of the Big City," taken from stage production, "Juno Bassetti."

STUDIO NOTES.

Mr. Guy Coombs, who has been playing the leads for Director Kenean Buel's company, has been appointed to direct Civil War pictures for the Kalem Company here. Mr. Coombs has had a great deal of experience in war pictures, having worked in most of the Kalem war pictures of previous years' production. Preparations have been in progress the last few days getting the wardrobe, arsenal, equipment, etc., ready. Some scenes have been taken and in a few days war will be on in earnest at the Kalem studios.

Miss Fania Marinoff, who is here for the two-reel picture, "The Private Secretary," being taken under the direction of Director Kenean Buel, will finish in a few days. In the story of the picture Miss Marinoff's character is shipwrecked and eventually saved. It is a coincidence that Miss Marinoff, when six years of age, was shipwrecked and was later saved from the waters.

WITH NEW ORLEANS THEATERS.

The "Istrione," Jackson, Miss., is making its bookings with one eye on the calendar, by which it is noted that this is Lent. No attempt is made to give a religious trend to the program, but greater care is being exercised with a view to eliminating anything that could be considered in any way irreligious or improper to the season.

The "Majestic," Jackson, Miss., has elected to play to the tired folks, with particular reference to the poor business man. The management guarantees that the blues will fade away entirely after being subjected to the magic of the Majestic screen. "The Walls of Jericho" is a recent booking.

The "Majestic," Clarksdale, Miss., has just shown the last episode of "The Million Dollar Mystery" and will shortly book another big serial. "The Master Key" is still running. Altogether Clarksdale, like a number of other small towns, seems to be especially strong for the serials, there being less likelihood of missing an episode in a small town and consequent more sustained interest.

L. Nobile, owner of the "Pictureland" at Garyville, La., and the "Victory" at Lutcher, La., recently booked a number of big World Film Corporation productions. M. D. Barefield, owner of the "Happy Thought," Hollandale, Miss., is also a new addition to the World ranks.

Sugar's theater, Monroe, La., in addition to its popularity contest recently noted as boosting the box office receipts, has inaugurated "merchants' matinees." Tickets to these performances are given away by the several merchants who are doing the paying. These tickets are good as votes in the popularity contest so Sugar gets them going and coming.

B. R. Hadfield, special representative of "Runaway June," reports big and growing bookings for the feature in the Southern territory.

Messrs. Barr and Bourgeois, traveling representatives for the World Film Corporation out of New Orleans, are sending in enthusiastic reports of business conditions throughout the territory.

"The Black Box," Universal, has opened at Fichtenberg's Alamo, drawing big from the start. The publicity has been good, the name of Oppenheim, the author of the play, being featured largely.

Pearce's "Trianon," New Orleans, has a beautiful ceiling; it was noted recently by several hundred Orleanians standing in line waiting their turn to get inside for a Sunday night performance, the feature of which was "The Master Mummer."

The Moving Picture World's New Orleans correspondent has changed its name from Southern Newspaper Bureau to Trades Press of New Orleans.

The Lyceum, Monroe, La., is putting across some good features. Recent bookings shown are "All Aboard," "The Love of Women" and "Stars Their Courses Change," the latter featuring Francis X. Bushman.

The "Bijou," Laurel, Miss., recently showed "The Master Mind," Jessey L. Laskey play released through Paramount, to big houses. A number of shorter pictures were shown in connection with the feature making an excellent program.

The "Arcade," Lake Charles, La., recently showed "Tillie's Punctured Romance" to big houses.

The "Dreamland," Lake Charles, La., has just begun "The Master Key," showing the first episode to big houses that promise to hold up throughout the serial.

W. H. Gueringer, New Orleans manager of the Fichtenberg interests, was laid up some days with la grippe but is soon to be on the job again.

William Morgan Hannon, scenario editor of the Coquille Film Co., New Orleans, was recently operated on for appendicitis. He is convalescing and will soon be back on the job.

N. L. Knight has purchased the "Peoples," Baton Rouge, La., from E. P. Bradley. The house was recently put in first class shape. The house seats 300.

Theaters in New Orleans

Interesting Analysis of Business Conditions in the Picture House Field of Southern Metropolis—City Has Only 175,000 Whites—Many Suburban Houses—Effect on Prices—Marked Difference in Site Values on Canal Street and on Secondary Streets.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Trades Press, New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS exhibitors were not pleased with the remarks on the exhibition business of the Southern city made by C. W. Seelye, director general of sales for the World Film Corporation, in a recent article. Mr. Seelye was quoted as saying, in effect, though more forcefully, that New Orleans exhibitors were away behind the procession and that the big houses on Canal street were not up to the standard of other cities of its size, also that they were at fault in not charging higher prices and doing more advertising.

That the allegations made by Mr. Seelye are in a large part correct was not denied but, according to New Orleans exhibitors, he only half stated the case and therefore gave a false impression, indicated that the situation was due to lack of push on the part of the exhibitors rather than to the special difficulties which it is thought, since he did not state them, that he was not aware of. The phrasing of the interview was startling in its bluntness and to this is charged much of the displeasure aroused.

J. E. Pearce, Southern manager for the Pearce interests, said, while not denying that Mr. Seelye might speak as an efficiency expert, that Mr. Seelye could not have made the statements attributed to him if he had known more of what he was talking about. Not only did Mr. Pearce question Mr. Seelye's authority on such matters in general; he said that special conditions existed in New Orleans of which Mr. Seelye could not have made himself aware in view of his statement, and that Mr. Seelye's comparatively recent entrance into the picture game was against the attachment of much weight to his remarks in the premises.

Mr. Pearce has been in the exhibition business for a number of years, being a member of the house that operates a number of theaters in a number of cities, and speaks, presumably, with some authority. He pointed out that New Orleans despite its paper population has only about 175,000 white people, or moving picture patrons, in it. As to the assertion that New Orleans' Canal street houses are not up to the standard of houses on the similar thoroughfares of other cities he noted that the opinion of a number of well traveled picture people, including himself, was to the contrary.

It is thought, however, that Mr. Seelye could not have meant to make the unqualified statement that he did with reference to the "Plaza" (Fichtenberg) and the "Trianon" and "Tudor" (Pearce), as these houses are representative of the latest and best in exhibition houses. There are, however, a number of cheaper—and cheap-looking—houses on Canal street further away from the center of town whose modernity might be questioned. These houses though would not ordinarily be included in an estimate of Canal street, as they are past Baronne street, beyond which Canal street is not so great a thoroughfare.

There are a number of good picture houses off Canal street, but that was one of the things that Mr. Seelye was objecting to, that there were not more good houses on Canal street. Mr. Pearce noted in this connection that Canal street property is dearer than property on less important streets, dearer by much more than is similar property on the main thoroughfares of other cities with reference to property on secondary streets.

Mr. Pearce expressed himself as being of the opinion that New Orleans gets the higher prices on proper occasion, not higher prices for the house but higher prices for the pictures when the pictures are of unquestionably superior quality. His contradiction of Mr. Seelye on this point was not full; he is of the opinion that there is a special reason for the impracticability of every day high prices in New Orleans.

G. J. Dureau, Jr., acting in charge of the Fichtenberg interests in New Orleans, suggested the greater number of suburban houses in New Orleans as a reason for the difficulty of getting the higher prices in New Orleans every day. There are nearly a hundred of these houses and they cover the residential section rather thoroughly, and a great part of the picture fandom of New Orleans goes to these houses in preference to the Canal street or downtown houses. This is probably true to a greater extent in New Orleans than in most other cities, there being more neighborhood life in New Orleans, each neighborhood being self-sufficient to a larger extent than in most other large cities. These houses of course do not charge the higher prices and owing to their peculiar position as neighborhood centers are strong competitors.

Mr. Seelye was in town for a few days only and has not been heard from directly at New Orleans since the publication of the interview, but it is learned indirectly that he is disposed to stick to his guns, or at any rate to maintain the general correctness of his observations with possible amendments of their seeming harshness and certain qualifications. That Mr. Seelye desired to offend the New Orleans exhibitors is considered unlikely, though he certainly has done it. It would seem that he would have foreseen the effect of his remarks, but he apparently didn't, which leaves one nothing to believe but that he meant something less offensive than is set forth in the interview.

THE NEW 3,500 SEAT HOUSE.

The Pearce interests, as intimated in the World of March 27, are back of the plan to build an immense picture theater in New Orleans, with a rumored capacity of 3,500 seats, and on Canal street. J. E. Pearce, Southern manager for the Pearce interests, stated this last week in commenting on the World's story. He would not go into the proposition in detail, contenting himself with saying that it was coming; he would not put a date.

The Pearce interests have had this plan under way for some time, it was learned. The first intimation of the plan came through the announcement that C. R. Seelye, director general of sales for the World Film Corporation, had made a report to his New York office on the practicability of such a venture. Whether the plan originated with Mr. Seelye's office or with the Pearce interests was not learned, but the Pearces will pay the bill.

GULF STATE BRIEFS.

Pearce's "Trianon," which was noted some weeks ago by the World as about to put in an organ, has contracted with M. P. Moller of Hagerstown, Md., for the instrument. It will cost $9,000. It is now under construction and will be installed as soon as possible.

"The Champion," Keystone films, had an eight-day run in Pearce's downtown theaters in New Orleans, setting a new record for a picture.

"The Price He Paid," United Program, has broken all house records at Fichtenberg's "Dreamworld." It is booked for three weeks solid according to announcement by the New Orleans office of the United Program.

World Film Corporation

HAS ORGANIZED A

FILM CLEANING, COATING AND RENOVATING DEPARTMENT

In this department we are making use of a process that has proven very successful in doing that work for OUR films. We have sufficient capacity to take on outside work.

The quality of the work is guaranteed, as Mr. S. E. Hartman, who is in charge, has demonstrated to us that the solutions used are able to give new life to old films.

We will be pleased to submit costs on this service on request, and we promise prompt deliveries and guarantee satisfaction.

The High Water Mark In Feature Pictures

Never before in the history of feature films has the demand for a production been so heavy that a second edition of NEW COPIES has been necessary. This is the new mark established by

Biograph's Masterpiece

Judith of Bethulia

In Four Parts

What stronger endorsement could a production have? What speaks more convincingly of the merits of this production than the fact that a second edition of NEW COPIES was necessary? And what better barometer of the anticipated bookings could be offered than the aforementioned edition of new copies?

What JUDITH of BETHULIA has accomplished during the past year it will repeat this year. The exhibitors who have booked JUDITH three and four times will book it again and do even better business than they did before; because the people realize more and more each day the massiveness, the grandeur, the beautiful settings and the wonderful acting and directing in

Stories of the Films

General Film Company.
VITAGRAPH.

THE HEART OF JIM BRICE (April 1).—Jovial and big-hearted, Jim Brice, of the Howard Detective Agency, is sent to trap bribe-takers in a nearby city. Bidding his wife and three children good-bye, he departs and on reaching the city poses as a writer on Civic Reform. He makes the acquaintance of Commissioner Hazard of the Utilities Commission, who is being urged by his unscrupulous colleagues to accept a bribe from the waterworks company in return for a franchise which will freeze out all rival companies. On the verge of ruin through his wife's extravagance, Hazard finally succumbs and promises to sign the franchise. The Commissioner, taken by Brice's genial manner, invites him home to dinner. Brice and Danny, the Commissioner's son, become great friends and the detective manages to save Danny's father if possible. He manages to obtain a glimpse of a note sent to Hazard appointing time and place for the bribe transaction. He and Hazard then go to the club, where Jim encourages him to drink heavily. Hazard falls asleep, thereby missing his appointment. At midnight, Brice wakes him up and takes him to lonely Danny. Upon their arrival at Hazard's home, Brice shows the Commissioner an extra he had purchased, containing news of the arrest of the bribe conspirators, adding that Commissioner Hazard—despite rumors—was not in the deal. After learning how he had saved him, the Commissioner, overcome with gratitude at his narrow escape, shakes the detective's hand warmly. Mrs. Hazard, at a bridge party, hears gossip of the arrests of high officials, and frightened, hurries home. There she learns the whole truth, and thoroughly repentant, promises to give up her extravagant ways and devote her time to Danny and her husband. Brice takes leave of the happy family with the pleasing thought that he had saved and reunited them.

WHEN DUMBLEIGH SAW THE JOKE (April 2).—One of the boys tells a joke in the office and Dumbleigh, not understanding it, sits there like a bonehead. It is evidently an extremely funny joke for everyone bursts into convulsions when they hear it, so Dumbleigh grieves and broods over his inability to see the point and partake of the merriment. His gloom is deepened when he received word that his best friend, Wood N. Head, has just died. As he sits among the mourners at the funeral services, a great light suddenly bursts upon Dumbleigh. He sees the joke, and bursts into a roar of laughter. The other mourners are shocked and highly indignant, but poor Dumbleigh cannot now stop laughing and the men are about to seize him, when, to everyone's horror, Dumbleigh sneaks up to the corpse and tells his departed friend the joke. Galvanized into life by the witticism, the late departed comes to life and lets out a howl of mirth, in which the mourners, after hearing the joke, boisterously join. When the corpse jumps out of his resting place, however, everyone dashes for the door. Dumbleigh goes too, still laughing, and his ridiculous antics attract such a crowd, a policeman arrests him for obstructing traffic. On the way to the station house Dumbleigh tells the officer the joke. He sees the humor of it, but walks Dumbleigh right along just the same. Arraigned in court, the magistrate himself cannot help chuckling at the mirth of those around him, so he asks Dumbleigh to tell him the joke; when the latter leans over to whisper in the magistrate's ear, the poor fellow finds to his horror, that he has forgotten it! The official gets angry and sends Dumbleigh to a cell to ruminate until he can recall the joke, with the understanding that he is to stay there until he does.

JANET OF THE CHORUS (Special—Two Parts—April 3).—On visiting Barry, his penniless nephew, Uncle John, millionaire woman-hater, finds him in dire straits. He asks him to come and live in his apartments while he is abroad and promises Harry a substantial income as long as he remains single. Barry feels he is in "pretty soft." Becoming deeply interested in Janet, the dainty chorus leader at the Folies, he secures an introduction to her and his twentieth-century Lochinvar methods wins her heart completely. They are married and Barry takes her to Uncle John's apartment to live. Several days later Uncle John wires that he is returning on account of the war in Europe. Barry is panic-stricken, but Janet laughingly tells him to intrdouce her as the housekeeper, Mrs. Jenkins' little niece, and dresses up as a child. The young husband is rather doubtful, but decides to take a chance. Uncle is unsuspecting on his arrival, and all goes well, although very amusing complications occur, because of his treating Janet as a child and bringing her presents of roller skates, dolls, etc. Uncle becomes quite attached to "little Janet" and Barry nearly has a fit when he sees her kiss Uncle good-night several times. Uncle later tells Barry he has decided to adopt Janet and take her traveling with him. After Uncle has gone and Barry recovered from the shock somewhat, Janet appears and they decide to take a walk somewhere to think over what is best to do. She changes into long clothes, and just as they are starting out, Uncle comes up the stairs. He has forgotten something and returned unexpectedly! All are speechless for a moment, then Janet prevents a row by contritely explaining matters, and asks the old gentleman sadly but coquettishly if he wants the dolls and skates back? Uncle cannot keep from smiling and with an affectionate arm about Janet and his nephew says, "Let's have dinner."

THE JARR SERIES (Episode No. 4—"Mr. Jarr Takes a Night Off"—April 5).—Mr. Jarr is stuck by Fritz, the shipping clerk in the office where they work, for two tickets for the ball to be given as a benefit for the Human Uniques, side-show freaks, put out of business by the hard time and moving pictures. Fritz's sister, Fatima, the professionally fat lady, is the head of the movement. Mrs. Jarr happens to find the tickets in her husband's pockets that night, and at once decides he is leading a double life. A quarrel results, but Jarr goes to the ball just the same, taking with him Dinkston, the Harlem poet. Jarr dances with the Circassian beauty, and Dinkston with the fair Fatima, causing great jealousy on the part of Malachi Hogan, a scrappy little Irishman, who is in love with Fatima. Mrs. Jarr, worried over her husband's "night off," leaves the children in charge of Claude, the fireman (Gertrude, the servant girl's beau) and sallies forth to watch Mr. Jarr. As she arrives at the ball, Fatima and Malachi have a row, she trips and falls to the floor, smashing a big hole in it. She crashes through, with Malachi, onto the heads of a bunch of gunmen who are holding a ball on the floor below. A terrific riot and shooting fray follows, the police reserves are called out and everyone arrested. In the interim, Claude, the fireman, seeing flames shooting out from the building, feels it is his call to duty, and after thoroughly drenching the Jarr children, to render them "fireproof," rushes out. The grouchy Magistrate in the night court sentences all the revellers to sixty days in jail, including Mr. and Mrs. Jarr, but Jarr has sufficient presence of mind to telephone Gus, the saloonkeeper, who is a powerful politician, and he has everybody turned loose with an apology. The Jarrs return home to their wet and wailing offspring, with a determination to stop the nights out.

THE TIMID MR. TOOTLES (Special—Two Parts—April 6).—At the office where Mr. Tootles is employed; the clerks make him the butt of all their jokes, and even the boss himself joins in the merriment at Tootles' expense. The mere presence of a woman plunges him into the most ridiculous embarrassment, and with the exception of Maria, the slavey at his boarding house, he is afraid of them all. One day, however, an adventure comes into his life. A lady in a limousine nearly runs over a child, who is rescued by Tootles. The lady thanks him and invites him into the car, insisting on bringing him to his destination. It happens that when the lady alights at a store, Tootles' fellow-clerks strolling by, see their much abused friend apparently enjoying the height of luxury. They are hardly able to believe it, but when the stylish lady comes out of the store and enters the car with him, they simply stare open-mouthed. Next day at the office he is surrounded and questioned eagerly, but Tootles has gained wisdom, and nonchalantly tells them "just a lady friend of mine." From that time on everyone speaks to him respectfully, and the boss calls him "a sly devil." To continue the affair, Tootles ostentatiously buys candy and flowers galore, pretending they are for his "lady friend." Things might have continued indefinitely but for the fact that it is revealed his "lady friend" is the boss's wife! The boss seizes a gun and Tootles nearly meets instant death. He manages to protest his innocence and the boss finally permits him to bring before him the woman to whom Tootles did send the candy and flowers. The poor fellow desperately fetches Maria to the office, after she has "dolled up," where Tootles' "explanation" bring forth an apology from the boss, while Tootles takes Maria in his arms.

EASY MONEY (April 7).—Immediately after receiving a telegram advising her of a most pleasing engagement open for her in the West, Mrs. Sterling, an actress, packs up hurriedly to catch the Western Limited. She cashes a $500 check and stuffs the bills into her silver mesh bag, laughing at the warnings of her maid not to carry it so loosely. Sam Decker and Jack Hilton, two crooks, board the same train and take seats not far from Mrs. Sterling. By chance she meets an old acquaintance on the train, Mowbray, a former stage manager, who proudly exhibits a huge roll of crisp, new twenty-dollar gold certificates—all cleverly executed stage money. Bobby eyes the bills with much interest, and when his mother and Mowbray step out onto the observation platform, the youngster decides the old bills in his mother's bag are too shabby, so he changes them for the bright new stage money. The real money he places in the traveling sponge bag. A little later, the two crooks catch a glimpse of the big roll of bills and that night, in the sleeper, they manage, unnoticed, to abstract it from underneath Mrs. Sterling's pillow. The thieves make a clear getaway, and the colored porter is accused of the theft. Bobby then penitently confesses the substitution of the money, and after the porter's feelings are soothed by the presentation of a genuine yellowback, all enjoy a hearty laugh. Meanwhile the two crooks celebrate their "easy money" adventure by partaking of a big dinner at a swell cafe. The waiter presents his bill, and they pay him with one of the counterfeit bills. The cashier notices the imitation at once and a detective is sent for. The two crooks don't know what to make of it when they are arrested for passing counterfeit money, until they find the balance of their roll is also "phony." Then Hilton and Decker collapse utterly, and upon being recognized as well-known crooks, are led off to jail, and a long sentence.

HER GETHSEMANE (April 8).—Stunned by grief at the loss of his mother, Howard Stanton goes to pieces, and as a consequence, his work suffers. Marguerite Clayton, a friend off his mother's, realizes that the young man is ruining his life because of his inability to throw off his grief. She pleads with him to brace up and make the success of his life which his mother would wish him to, were she still living. Filled with renewed courage, he resolves to follow her advice. Backed by her gracious friendship and mother-like sympathy, Howard's efforts eventually gain him the junior partnership in his firm. He tells Marguerite the glad news, and it is then brought home to him how much the girl means to him. He asks her to marry him, but Marguerite, while loving him deeply, gently reminds Howard that she is several years his senior. He waves her objections aside, but her final decision is that if he has tired of her at the end of five years, when she will be what the world calls an "old woman," she will simply drop out of his life. He laughs at the thought, they are married, and for four years they find perfect happiness. Then Marguerite's niece, Janet, arrives on a visit and Howard's unconscious admiration for the girl's youth, awakens a fear in Marguerite's heart. Shortly afterwards, she notices Janet and Howard appear to have secrets, and when she finds an ambiguous note in the waste basket, becomes convinced that Howard and Janet have fallen in love. She quietly prepares to leave, and on the way out, meets her husband and the girl. After a heart-breaking moment of general misunderstanding, Janet brings in a young man and introduces him as her college boy husband, her marriage to whom she had feared to tell Marguerite.

THEY LOVED HIM SO (April 9).—To secure a living model for her painting of "Samson," Miss Prism, an eccentric old maid artist, advertises for one, and among those who apply is a brawny longshoreman, Mike McCarty. He proves to be Miss Prism's ideal model and she engages him at once. Mike's wife is quite proud on learning that he has been picked to pose for the model, but he tells Miss Prism nothing of his wife or family. As the painting progresses, Miss Prism and two of her maiden lady friends conceive a romantic attachment for the burly fellow and after much hero worship, the ladies one day send him home with flowers in his buttonhole. Mrs. McCarty sees these, also some traces of facepowder on his sleeve, and after seeing a mental vision of her husband posing surrounded by a bevy of "chickens," she determines to make a personal investigation. On the last day of work on the painting, Mrs. McCarty presents herself at Miss Prism's studio in fighting trim. The old maids take refuge behind their hero, but when he beholds his wife's angry countenance, conditions are quickly reversed, and he takes refuge behind the old maids. Mrs. McCarty wades in and, although the hero-worshippers valiantly endeavor to protect their idol, they are a sorry-looking group when she gets through with them. Mike dives through the nearest window, and the old maids, on learning that their assailant is Mike's wife, become greatly enraged and join Mrs. McCarty in a thrilling chase after Mike. The women corner him in his home, and his wife has to turn to and defend him from the other women. She tells them she will "attend to him," and at the end of a wash-stick forces him to give the ladies an exhibition of his skill at the washtub. Their dreams of love shattered at seeing their gallant hero scrubbing away at the tub, the women faint in Mrs. McCarty's arms.

THE RETURN OF MAURICE DONNELLY (Broadway Star Feature—Three parts—Special—April 10).—Maurice Donnelly, a one-time reputable lawyer, but now "night-hawk" chauffeur and associate of crooks, is dared by "The Rat," a gang leader, to make forcible entry into a private house. He takes the dare, and it proves to be the home of Edith Dent, a fellow student at the law school he attended. He holds her up and his mask becoming disarranged, mutual recognition follows. She is shocked and induces him to resolve on reformation. "The Rat," on learning this, remonstrates with him; they quarrel and Donnelly knocks him down. "The Rat" and his gang then determine to get square with the "quitter" and plan to "frame-up" something on him. They lure Donnelly to a saloon, where a policeman is mysteriously murdered and the crime fastened on Donnelly. Edith Dent, believing the man is innocent, volunteers to act as his counsel. She proves a master at technicalities of the law and puts up a good fight for her client, but eventually loses out through the perjured testimony of the gangsters. Donnelly is sentenced to die in the electric chair and is sent to the death-house. Appeal is then made to the Governor for clemency, but in vain, and after a touching farewell with his mother and Edith, Donnelly passes through the "little green door" to the death-chair. Awaiting in agony to identify the body of her client, Edith remembers reading of a scientist's successful resuscitation of dead animals, and his desire to try the experiment on the human body. She communicates with him, secures his consent, and by special permission, the prison physician delivers the body to the Donnelly home without performing an autopsy. The experiment is performed, it is successful, and Donnelly revived, goes with the police and Edith, to Shanahan's that night, where Donnelly appears before the gangsters in the flesh, paralyzing them with fright and astonishment. "The Rat" hysterically confesses, which eventually leads to a very happy sequel.

ESSANAY.

IN THE PARK (Charles Chaplin Comedy—March 18).—Chaplin takes entirely too much interest in a "spooning" couple on a park bench and is thrown off for his inquisitiveness. He flees and is knocked over by a projecting limb of a tree and falls into a baby buggy, thereupon the nurse maid proceeds to give him a pummelling.

In his flight he runs into a tramp who has "lifted" the pocketbook of the girl "spooner." The tramp picks Chaplin's pocket of some bologny sausage, but while he does it Chaplin extracts the pocketbook from the tramp's pocket with his cane. A giant happens along and the three fight for the spoils.

Bricks are thrown and both the giant and the tramp are "knocked out." Both "spooners" also are struck by the flying bricks and "laid out cold." When they wake up the girl finds her pocketbook gone and accuses her sweetheart. She then jilts him. He goes to the river to commit suicide, but has not the courage to jump in.

Chaplin finds him and after taking the man's watch and money helps him carry out his wish to die by kicking him into the river. The rest of the party find a policeman and pursue Chaplin to the water's edge. The policeman tries to arrest Chaplin. A fierce battle ensues, in which Chaplin hurls them all into the water.

A COAT TALE (April 1).—The wife falls in love with a coat that an itinerent peddler shows her, but her husband fumes when he hears that it is worth $100. He not only refuses to buy it, but he throws the peddler out of the house. Later, stung by remorse, he buys a coat for $6.95 and sends it to his wife with a $100 bill tucked in one of the pockets. She is delighted with it until she learns that her neighbor across the hall has one for $6.95 just like it. Then she throws it out of the window. A negro street cleaner picks it up and brings it home to his wife. When the husband comes home he finds his wife in tears. She tells him that she has thrown the coat out of the window. He tells her about the $100 and both start in search of it. He accosts every woman he sees and at last is arrested. His wife, meanwhile, finds the colored woman and starts a fight with her. She is brought to the station. There she learns that her husband must either pay $100 fine or go to jail for 100 days. But he finds the bill in the coat pocket and they leave the station arm in arm.

THE OTHER WOMAN'S PICTURE (April 5).—Will Strickland, adored of his wife, Dora, is swept off his feet by his passion for Helena Raymond, the other woman. He struggles against his lawless affection, but the frailty of his will bends before the storm. He falls. Helena gives him a picture of herself and Strickland substitutes it for the picture of his wife in a locket that is one of the love tokens between them. Griscom, a mutual friend of the Stricklands, tried to save Strickland from the inevitable consequences and meanwhile hides her husband's duplicity from Dora. But the fates intervene. Will is called to Brazil and there he is killed by a jealous man when he flirts with his sweetheart. Griscom, who had accompanied him to Brazil, gathers up Will's effects and takes them home. Among the effects is the locket with Helena's picture. This Griscom hides from Dora. But Dora asks for it. She knows the dearest possession. Griscom reluctantly gives it to her and her ideal of her husband is shattered. Griscom comforts her with love shining in his eyes.

THE LADY OF THE SNOWS (Special—Three Parts—April 6).—Charlton Trevelyan, an English society man, declares his love for Helen Mason, a calculating girl of his set. She rejects him and accepts the Hon. Travers Langdon, a member of the Canadian parliament. In a newspaper appears a story to the effect that Patricia Sutherland, a Canadian girl, has been left a fortune on condition that she marry Trevelyan. Trevelyan, embittered by Helen's treatment, determines to marry the heiress and leaves for Canada. He arrives at the home of Archbishop Hillaire du Bertrand, Patricia's uncle. The archbishop procures him a position on the Royal Northwest mounted police.

He wins recognition by closing Pete's gambling place. Pete plans to wreck a train in his territory so that Trevelyan will be disgraced. The attempt is foiled by Gloria Templeton, secret agent and authority on Indian affairs, who is known to the Indians as The Lady of the Snows. Later, Helen learning of the strange will and Trevelyan's intention to marry the heiress, breaks with her husband and comes to him. In the wilderness, close to the hut of the Lady of the Snows, he refuses her love. He loves Gloria Templeton. Both he and Helen are lost in a blizzard and get shelter in Miss Templeton's cabin. Helen, learning of Trevelyan's love for this woman, maliciously asks him about his approaching marriage to Patricia Sutherland. Gloria shows her disgust for him.

Trevelyan writes to Gloria that he will refuse to marry Miss Sutherland. Helen goes to the archbishop to tell him that Trevelyan is in love with a woman other than his niece. The prelate sends for Miss Sutherland. When she comes down, Helen sees Gloria Templeton. Trevelyan, coming to the house at the archbishop's invitation, learns that Gloria Templeton is Patricia Sutherland. She creeps into his arms.

THE FABLE OF THE BUSY MAN AND THE IDLE WOMAN (April 7).—The hard-working business fellow goes to his daily toil, leaving his wife behind. At 9.30 the poor slave is grinding away. He answers a couple of letters and stocks up on food for the afternoon and decides he has done enough work for a day. He then goes to the club and recuperates, coming home in a taxi. A business man is too tired to walk. But wifey! She goes for a walk for her figure's sake, returns home, fires the cook, hires another K. M. She tries on a new frock, attends a remnant sale and captures a bargain. Meets a friend, goes window shopping and makes mind purchases to the extet of $8,000. At noon she attends a meeting of the Suffrage League and she and other girls of her age partake of macaroons and cocoa until they become almost disorderly. The afternoon is spent just as languidly and that night when Hubby comes home, she wants him to go to a dance. But Hubby tells her that he has worked all day and she has done nothing. Can you beat it? Moral—Woman is the weaker vessel.

SOPHIE'S FIGHTING SPIRIT (April 8).—The other woman finds she is out of vinegar and, as her husband is too deeply interested in a book on New Thought, she goes to a neighbor's to borrow some. Sophie, the neighbor, runs out of vinegar at the same time and, her husband, in explaining it, gets too much interested in the other woman. Sophie takes him by the ear and sets him on a chair in the house. Shortly after, she suffers an attack of cholera morbus. Her husband runs for a doctor and the other woman's husband just passing the house, is pressed into service. He tries the New Thought on her, but it doesn't work. The doctor gives her arnica instead of internal medicine. Meanwhile the other woman sees her husband's vinegar jug outside the house and starts hammering down the door. When Sophie takes the arnica she pitches into the other woman and the two have a rough and tumble fight. Finally while the women are resting, they see their husbands on the roof laughing at them. They knock them off with stones and forgive each other.

ANDY OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED (April 10).—Andy of the Royal Mounted and another trooper are both in love with a little school teacher, who shows the light of knowledge to the children of the settlers in a tiny Canadian hamlet. The school teacher favors Andy's suit and the other trooper is correspondingly despondent. He loses gracefully because Andy is his best friend, but his trouble preys on him. He goes into a saloon, gets drunk and is caught by his colonel and discharged from the service. Later, he shoots a gambler in a brawl and while making his getaway, rescues the school teacher from death when her horse runs away. Andy comes upon him administering to her and starts to take him back despite her pleading. But she holds a gun on him while the ex-trooper escapes into the states. Andy forgives her and they embrace.

AN OPAL RING (Special—Two Parts—April 9).—Gerald Livingstone is admiring an opal ring in his library when his friend Jimmie Rogers comes in and taunts him with his love for jewels. Livingstone bets Jimmie that the first pretty woman he sees will kiss him in return for the ring. The two stroll out and in the shopping district see a beautiful woman just entering a taxicab. She is Miss Proctor for whom at the moment when Livingstone sees her, her uncle is providing an escort of one of the best detectives in the city. Livingstone follows her mindful of his bet. He is taken for the detective at the apartments of the duke and given charge of Miss Proctor. He saves her from the attack of five foreign sinister looking ruffians and is wounded in the fight. Next morning he is decorated with the cross of St. Petros for bravery. That morning he is sent for by the duke and is left alone with Miss Proctor. She thanks him with a kiss, he gives her the ring and comes back to his apartment. He denies to Jimmie that he has won his bet and Jimmie tells him that the woman he rescued is Carlotta Marie Victoria, queen of Campania, a Balkan state, and Livingstone knows he has loved and is loved by a wearer of the purple.

EDISON.

WON THROUGH MERIT (April 5).—Far away in the small town of Linciln, Michigan, is a young man named John Corbin, whose ambition never seems to effervesce, although so strongly charged with desire and avidity that it always seems about to run over and fade into memories as has the ambition of many another. John controlled it and when the opportunity presented itself in the form of an examination for a position as stenographer at Washington, he was able to grasp it, wrestle with it and conquer it. In Washington, John meets George Merrill, an old friend, who has a civil service position. As he is crossing the street, John has a chance to rescue a girl from almost certain death in front of an approaching automobile. Plans are made for a sightseeing trip and George takes John around to the house of a friend, who, he says will accompany them on the trip. The friend turns out to be Helen Morse, whom John rescued from in front of the machine. They go sightseeing and the principal buildings in the National Capital are viewed.

After a year John has become a promising law student, and Helen, who is in the same department with him, helps him in his work. A year later he is advanced. John loves Helen, but is reluctant to assert himself because he misconstrues George's attentions to her. When George returns from a trip West and tells him he is to be married soon to a Western girl, John loses no time in getting to Helen's house where they come to an understanding.

A CLEAN SWEEP (April 6).—Because of his lack of confidence in Pete Range, whose occupation was taking down and removing stoves, Waddy Fixit started to do the work himself. A short time previous, Artie Jason, who had been directed to the Fixit home by one of Cupid's arrows, arrived and in order to hide her wooer from her father, Tillie hastily opened the fireboard in back of the stove and thrust Artie into the chimney.. Artie was sitting there dreaming of twentieth century Santa Clauses and the time they must have getting down the chimney, when Tillie's father entered and started to take down the stove.

Simultaneously, Bill Black, a chimney sweep, started to remove the soot and dirt from the long chimney. In a short time, Artie becomes unrecognizable, besmeared as he is with soot. In the room a few feet away is Tillie's father himself covered with soot. There is chaos in the room. Everything has taken on a dark tint and Mrs. Fixit is furious. The chimney-sweep continues to drop sundry things down the shaft with the result that uncomfortable Artie begins to think the place a veritable Hades. A long string is dropped down, lighted at the lower end for the purpose of lighting up the shaft. Bill Black decides that the chimney is clogged and gets permission from Mr. Fixit to blow it out with gun powder. Just as Tillie's father has succeeded in pulling the stove over upon himself, the charge in the chimney goes off and Artie lands in the room, covered with soot. Tillie's father is pinned beneath the stove and, taking advantage of this, Artie works it so he gets the father's consent to marry Tillie. The minister takes one look at Artie and tells him there can be no marriage of a white girl with a negro.

Mrs. Fixit then rushes her husband, Artie and the chimney1sweep into the bath-tub and scrubs them. She then hangs them on the line to dry, later taking them in as she would articles of clothing, Artie is then allowed to marry Tillie, while the others, as clean and as white as so many lilies, look on.

SNAP SHOTS (April 7).—Meersham Bowles looks with unveiled admiration upon a photograph of a pretty girl. He makes overtures to the photographer for the purchase of his studio, but can come to no agreement. He goes home and smokes that 100-horsepower pipe and soon he is speeding through space. He buys the gallery and hardly has he taken possesion, when a bevy of well dressed ladies enter. They remove their veils and their faces are seen to be mistakes. A man attired in a sand paper collar and the remainder of a "tough guy's" make-up enters, leading a ferocious bull dog. The animal takes a dislike to Bowles and chases him about the studio.

An army general enters and poses himself after Bowles has indicated that he is too busy. Bowles develops the negative and the general's picture is all foot. A baby, an overgrown one, enters with its mother. Baby falls downstairs, crawls along the street and then climbs a telegraph pole. Bowles photographs baby on top of the pole, just before they are precipitated to the pavement. They get up and return to the gallery. But no pretty girls. Bowles is still in hopes they will show up. He goes into the dark room to develop the negative and baby decides to dismantle the studio. Portraits are pulled down and things are confused generally. Mother and baby refuse the picture as there is nothing but a blur of heads. An agent sells Bowles some explosive developer anl Bowles starts to use it. A fat man arrives and complains that his photograph does not suit. Bowles poses him again, this time gratis, and when he pinches the bulb, the camera explodes. He seeks safety in the dark room, where the fat man attacks him. There is another explosion and both are lifted into the air. They land on the pinnacle of a church steeple as Bowles' pipe goes out.

THE STONING (An Adaptation of the Story by James Oppenheim—Special—Three Parts—April 9).—Ruth Fenton, the idol of her parents, is acquainted with Alec Peters, a brakeman on the train which conveys her to school in the adjoining village every morning. When she is graduated from school, Alec sends her a note inviting her for a walk some evening, as he has been put on a new run with a two hour layover in her village. Unsuspectingly, she meets him after choir rehearsal. Mr. Fenton admonishes her bitterly for keeping company with Alec, who, he says, is no good. In his ultimatum to Ruth he tells her she may never darken his door again if she is caught with Alec. She meets him and he persuades her to go away with him. In the city they register at a hotel as man and wife and Ruth thinks it great fun. Very soon Alec begins to maltreat her, with the result that she leaves him. Unable to get work, she ends up in a cheap house and lives there under awful conditions. In the meantime Ruth's parents are failing, and the doctor states that the return of Ruth is the only thing that will save Mrs. Fenton. The minister of the place determines to get her and after tracing Alec and eventually locating Ruth, brings her back. The change in Mrs. Fenton is remarkable.

Ruth is prevailed upon to take her old place in the choir on Sunday and when she takes her seat the girls arise and walk out, as does a share of the congregation. The minister preaches a strong sermon, using as his text, "Judge Not." Ruth is discouraged and remorseful when she sits down and thinks over the events which have occurred so rapidly, and the next morning her body is found in the lake. At the funeral the minister brands the hard-shelled congregation as murderers.

AN UNPAID RANSOM (Adapted from the Story "The Under Secretary" by Scott Campbell —April 10).—Unable to go to the pier to meet his daughter, Helen, who is expected on the Brazilian from Europe, the Hon. John Dearborn dispatches his secretary to meet her. When he arrives at the pier, he is informed by the Kandalls, who accompanied Helen on her trans-Atlantic voyage that a man with a Van Dyke beard, who represented himself as Mr. Dearborn's new secretary, had approached the party a few minutes before, introduced himself and departed with Helen. He appeared in a great hurry and said he would return later to attend to the baggage. The secretary returns to Mr. Dearborn, and as he is about to enter the house, a boy hands him a letter, sent by a gang of kidnappers. The letter states that the gang has Helen and will release her upon the payment of $10,000 by her father. After a consultation, it is deemed advisable not to inform Mr. Dearborn of the letter. The secretary immediately goes to Steven Banks, Helen's fiance. and gives him the facts. Banks decides to find Helen unassisted if possible, and starts out by questioning the chauffeurs near the pier where the Brazilian docked.

Eventually he finds Connelly, a frank, unsuspecting Irishman, who tells him that he had a passenger with a Van Dyke beard that morning. Connelly tells Banks that the stranger sent him into a store for cigars and when he came out the curtains of the car were down, the stranger complaining that the light hurt his eyes. Arriving at an address in Thirteenth street the stranger directed Connelly to go upstairs for a trunk. After a futile search, Connelly returned to the sidewalk, and was told by the stranger that he had made a mistake, as an expressman took the trunk away that very morning. Then the stranger walked into the house and Connelly was dismissed.

After listening to his story, Banks arranges with Connelly to change clothes. Disguised as a chauffeur, Banks goes to the Thirteenth street address and goes up to the same floor as Connelly had in the morning under the pretext that he has lost a baggage check. As he is looking a man with a Van Dyke beard enters, and accuses him of being a spy. There is a fight, during which Banks fires several shots. The police enter just as Banks is being overpowered by the gang of kidnappers. Banks then breaks down the door of the room where Helen is a prisoner, and soon the girl is with her father, who is entirely ignorant of the attempt at blackmail.

WHEN GRATITUDE IS LOVE (April 3).—Jack Howard is somewhat disappointed upon receiving a telegram from Millicent Olney, his sweetheart, to the effect that she cannot be at the station to see him off when he leaves for the Catskills to regain his health. In the mountains, he rescues Maud Clark from a perilous position on an icy slope, after she has been thrown from her horse and injured. Maud's father suggests that Jack go to one of his lumber camps and live in the open, prescribing an open air diet in lieu of medicine. Jack arrives at the camp and by his performances as a wrestler wins the admiration of all of the rough lumbermen, save Thibeau, the champion of the camp, who meets defeat in the sawdust pit at the hands of Jack. Thibeau's revengeful appetite is appeased later when he and Jack are cutting down trees together. When Jack is down, Thibeau swings his axe and cuts Jack's foot. His tight legging saves his life. Jack is taken to Maud's home and Maud, realizing his dangerous condition, jumps upon her horse and rides cross country to the doctor. Thibeau enters the Clark home at night as Jack is in bed and attacks him, but Maud arrives upon the scene just in time and after she has stunned the intruder with a heavy boot, calls for assistance and her father overcomes Thibeau. Jack continues to convalesce and upon receipt of a letter from Millicent that her engagement to Count Vignoma will be formally announced soon, he realizes that he owes Maud a debt of gratitude. She has owed him one for some time and they both pay their debts without any further discussion.

KALEM.

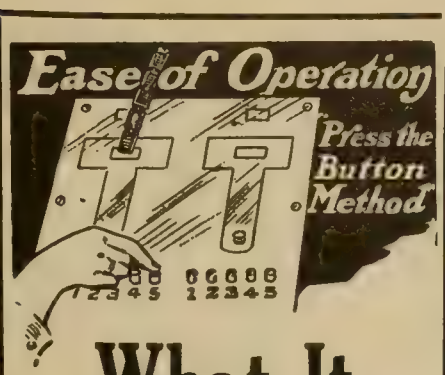
THE SIREN'S REIGN (Special—Three Parts—April 2).—Upon her brother's death, Marguerite takes his place as a member of the firm. She secretly loves Blake, her partner. The latter meets Grace, a soubrette. Blinded by her beauty, Blake makes her his wife. Two years later finds Blake, Morrison & Co., in financial difficulties as the result of Grace's extravagance. Hardy, a faithful employee, endeavors to warn Blake, but is prevented by Marguerite. Grace becomes weary of her married life. She even regards her baby with aversion. Blake's love for her makes him unable to realize his wife's true character. Marguerite calls upon the woman in an effort to make her realize what her extravagance has caused. Grace, however, coarsely reviles Marguerite and orders her from the house.

Shortly afterwards, Grace departs for New York where she is to visit relatives. Business takes her husband to that city. He makes the stunning discovery that Grace has returned to the stage. Later, Blake sees her in a famous cafe, in the company of a man of notorious reputation. Maddened, Blake appears before his wife and orders her to return home. The woman spurns him scornfully. Late that night, Blake forces his way into Grace's apartment. Mocked again by the heartless woman, the husband becomes insane. He throttles her. An hour later finds Blake on his way home. Upon his arrival he arranges his affairs. Although Marguerite has not been informed of her partner's return, she is filled with a peculiar sense of fear.

She gets Blake's butler on the 'phone. Even as she talks to him, Marguerite hears a sudden report. The butler drops the receiver and rushes to Blake's room. He finds the man on the floor, a bullet in his breast. Marguerite hastens to the house. She arrives just as Blake is dying. It is then the man learns of her love for him. Placing his child in Marguerite's arms, he begs her to care for it.

A LIFE IN THE BALANCE (Episode No. 22 of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series—April 3).—Owing to the steep grade at Lone Point, King attempts to tighten the brake of the freight car which is sidetracked at that station. The brake chain snaps and the car commences to roll down hill. King promptly loses his head. Instead of jumping to the ground, he clings to the brake wheel in terror. Helen, who has witnessed the accident, vainly shouts out to King, ordering him to jump.

The girl telegrapher knows that the steep grade will cause the runaway to travel at terrific speed by the time it reaches Elbow Curve. This would mean derailment of the car and death or injury to the man on top of it. Spurred into action by the thought of King's peril, Helen seizes a coil of rope, mounts her broncho and dashes across country.



What It Stands For

The Automatic taken as the latest type of Ticket Selling Machine embodies all the most useful points and actually performs far more efficiently than human hands.

With the improved motor drive it is perfect in every detail and considered by experts the most wonderful Ticket Selling Machine in the world.

It Stands for Absolute Accuracy, Simplicity and Speed

The time will surely come when the Automatic will be as much a feature of every Theater as the Box Office Itself.

It marks the beginning of the New Box Office management for Quick Service and Accurate Records. It accomplishes the work of several employees, and leaves no doubt as to correct total.

Although the Automatic has achieved a rapid success, it is the ambition of the Company to have every Theater equipped the Automatic Way throughout the world.

If you are not yet acquainted with the Automatic, write for our booklet, "Selling Tickets by Electricity"

1476 BROADWAY. NEW YORK CITY.

Helen's destination is Reed's Gully, through which the freight car must pass before it reaches Elbow Curve. She reaches the spot a few minutes before the runaway appears. Hastily making the rope fast to trees on opposite sides of the gully, Helen swings out hand over hand until she is above the center of the track. The freight car appears. King, still clinging to the useless brake wheel, sees Helen and understands what she intends doing. The man stands upright. Just as the runaway dashes beneath, the brave girl seizes King with her free hand. The rope's rebound aids Helen in her supreme effort to raise King. The man grasps the line and follows his rescuer back to safety.

THE SECOND COMMANDMENT (Special—Three Parts—April 5).—Deserting his wife and daughter, Richard Stevens flees with Mirza, the wife of a sunworshiper. The latter had been killed by Mirza while fighting a duel with Richard. A year later, Richard's wife dies, after entrusting her daughter to the care of a friend. At the same time, a son is born to Mirza. Seventy years pass. Warren Stevens, the grandson of Richard and Mirza, meets Helen Royce, the granddaughter of Richard and Alice. Helen is intensely religious, while Warren is the leader of a cult of image worshipers. While Warren's followers meet in his room at the hotel, he leaves by a window and robs their rooms of valuables.

Warren falls in love with Helen. She refuses him because of his religion. Before renouncing it for Helen's sake, Warren is tempted to commit one more robbery. Fate causes him to enter the girl's room. Thus Helen becomes aware of Richard's character. Shortly afterward, Helen's father dies in spite of the best of medical attention. The girl becomes interested in Clinton, a Christian Scientist. A paralytic stroke leaves Helen helpless. Burglars enter her apartment. In her extremity, the invalid concentrates her mind in prayer. Suddenly Helen's strength returns. She confronts the burglars, capturing one of them. He proves to be Warren. Again Helen allows him to go, but Warren is captured by the police shortly afterward. Her heart filled with gratitude toward the man who taught her the efficacy of prayer, Helen weds Clinton.

HAM'S HARROWING DUEL (April 6).—A grapefruit which Evelina heaves at her husband, sails through the window and hits Ham, who is arguing with Bud. Ham drops unconscious. While Evelina's husband flees for his life, the woman discovers the result of her marksmanship. She orders Ham brought into the house. Bud tries to follow, but the door is slammed in his face. He peers through the window and sees his pal being treated like a prince by Evelina, who is endeavoring to make amends for her carelessness. In vain does Bud pantomime a request to Ham for some of the edibles the latter is demolishing.

An idea strikes Evelina. She gives Ham $100 upon condition that he help make her husband jealous. Bud sees the money passed and makes up his mind to get it. Hastening to a costumer's, he disguises as an anarchist. When Tom, Evelina's husband, returns home, he finds Ham singing in the parlor. Before he can mop up the place with the intruder, Bud enters with a revolver in each hand. Taking the money from Ham, he orders his pal and Tom to stand on their heads. But warns the men that whenever they hear him coming, they are to repeat the performance.

When Bud departs, Tom learns of his wife's scheme. Giving Ham another hundred, he induces him to fight a mock duel. Evelina comes upon the two just as Ham apparently kills her husband. To the "dead" man's intense satisfaction, she throws herself over his body and begs him to come to life. Bud returns at this moment. Ham and the "dead" man frantically endeavor to stand on their heads. Evelina, upon seeing how she has been fooled, goes after Tom with a vengeance. At the same time, Ham discovers the anarchist's identity. While Evelina settles accounts with her poor husband, Ham gives Bud the chase of his life.

THE THUMB PRINTS ON THE SAFE (Special—Two Parts—Episode No. 11).—Did Merriman steal his own rubies while walking in his sleep? Although the thumb-prints on the safe tend to bear out this theory, Jean, the Girl Detective, suspects crooked work. She is informed that Breslow, well known to the police, had been found paralyzed near the Merriman mansion and taken to the hospital. Jean discovers that Breslow is suffering from a temporary shock and that his recovery is but a matter of days. She learns that Denton, Merriman's trusted servant, is a photographic expert. To the gem collector's surprise, she boldly confronts Denton and charges him with the crime.

The Girl Detective then reveals what she has ascertained as the result of her work on the case. His cupidity aroused by the wonderful

The Devil

The Outcast

Book NOW

I've just seen the "Devil" for the third time—

Twice—as a play—some years ago. I remember very well what a furor it made in Europe, and how it was actually drawing crowded houses at two leading New York theatres at the same time.

Today—it was as a Moving Picture: the third Mutual Master-Picture—and it was infinitely more real, infinitely stronger, more beautiful, more compelling than either version of the acted play which held two continents in its grip at once.

The smooth, suave, immaculately dressed stranger who appears mysteriously out of nowhere in the studio of the portrait painter, at the beginning, is no less the Devil than when, hoofed and horned and crimson-winged, he leers at you out of the flames in the last tremendous scene.

And if the play has the advantage of words—you miss no whit of the story in the pictures.

And the pictures are so real.

What painted scene could ever hope to carry against the actuality of cliffs and canons hundreds of feet in depth literally ablaze with leaping fires of brimstone and saltpetre?

You see, this picture was made at the famous Ranch of the New York Motion Picture Corporation in Southern California where Nature made the scenery—and her stage was measured in miles.

But there—

See it all for yourself. See

THE DEVIL. You can—at any Motion Picture theatre which shows Mutual Master-Pictures.

Thomas Nelson Page's Moving Picture—"The Outcast."

I shouldn't have believed it possible to catch—in a moving picture—all the subtleties of humor and pathos that made our Ambassador to Italy famous. Yet in the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation's production of "The Outcast," you have not only the excitement and thrill of big situations (the hour it takes to see the picture is crowded with them), but all of Mr. Page's charm and quiet as well.

Robert Harron and Mae Marsh play the principal parts—which tells much to many people.

Think what a wonderful thing it is to bring tears and laughter to millions—all over the world at once—instead of just to a single theatreful; and to feel, too, that your acting is to be preserved on the films for all time, instead of being gone on the instant. Is it surprising that motion pictures have attracted great artists of acting—who would never have been drawn to the stage?

Mr. Harron is a great actor. Miss Marsh is a beautiful genius.

THE OUTCAST is a big theme, treated in a big way by a big man.

I wouldn't have missed seeing it for anything. You will see it announced in the newspapers and on the bill-boards soon after the first of April.

Whatever you do, don't miss it.

The theatre you usually go to will be glad to get these wonderful pictures, if you and half a dozen of your friends will

"The Outcast"

by

Thomas Nelson Page

A girl of the slums, of unknown antecedents, is accused of murder and is brought before a judge known for his relentlessness. At the trial, evidence is brought forward tending to show the irresponsibility of the girl. A locket containing the picture of the girl's mother is introduced by her attorney. The picture is shown to the judge who recognizes it and faints during the trial.

The judge proves to be the father of the girl and resigns from the bench to devote the remainder of his life to the care of his daughter.

Robert Harron and Mae Marsh play the leads in this powerful and realistic story by our Ambassador to Italy.

Merriman gems. Denton had stolen them. By a clever photographic process, the servant duplicated his master's thumb-prints on rubber and transferred them to the safe. Denton had arranged to dispose of the stolen gems through Breslow. The latter was waiting ouside the house. A moment after he had given the rubies to his accomplice. Denton's avarice overcame him and he decided to play the game alone. To this end, he attacked Breslow. In falling, the latter injured his spine. Breslow, in revenge, had confessed to Jean. Thus cornered, Denton admits his guilt and is led away under arrest.

HE WAS A TRAVELING MAN (April 9).—The inquisitiveness of the employees and guests of the little country hotel causes Jim Flip, hosiery salesman, to make up his mind to teach them a lesson. When Marietta, an old maid, displays her hosiery in going upstairs, she innocently gives Jim an idea. Charlie Jones, one of the bell boys, peers into Jim's room via the keyhole. He sees a pair of legs sticking out of the hosiery salesman's sample trunk. A slight jar causes the legs to move.

The hose on the legs is similar to that worn by Marietta. Charlie promptly speeds down to the hotel clerk and declares that Jim had slain the old maid and was hiding her body in his sample trunk. The clerk takes a peek to satisfy himself and then summons the entire village police force. His alarm also brings out the fire department. With considerable trepidation, the men approach Jim's room. They finally muster up sufficient courage to smash the door. They come just in time to see the salesman reach into his trunk and pull out a pair of leg dummies such as are used for the purpose of displaying stockings in show windows. With one accord, the intruders turn upon the clerk and the bellboy and kick them from the room.

THE GIRL ON THE TRESTLE (Episode No. 23 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—April 10).—While on his way to the mining camp with a wagon load of powder, Bill Roody finds that a landslide has blocked the road. The man is compelled to make a wide detour. On the way, his horses become frightened and bolt. Bill is jolted from the vehicle. Just as the wagon passes under the Jero trestle, the powder explodes and destroys the structure. All that remains standing is a single rail to which a few ties cling. The rest of the wooden trestle is set afire by the explosion.

Bill hastens back to Lone Point and reports the accident to Helen. Knowing that the passenger train is due shortly, the operator wires to the next station. Her message comes too late, the train has already pulled out. Realizing that a sharp curve would hide the damaged trestle from the engineer's view, Helen climbs aboard a freight car standing on the siding, loosens the brake and allows the car to run down the steep grade. Approaching the ruined structure, Helen applies the brake and leaps to the ground.

Without an instant's pause, the brave girl makes her way, foot by foot, through the smoke, across the shaking band of steel. Arriving on the opposite side of the chasm, Helen dashes down the track until she can see the approaching train. She flags it in time.

BIOGRAPH.

THE SISTER'S SOLACE (March 29).—The day set for the wedding arrived, and upstairs, in the dead girl's silent room, her twin sister sat brooding, as women will, over the bridal robes which Rose would never wear. The hour approached; the crisis was at hand; they felt that her disconsolate lover could never live through it, and out of their despair a wild hope was born. Quickly the girl, so remarkably like Rose in face and figure, put on the wedding dress; and to the wild-eyed mourner there appeared a vision of his lost love. With a cry, he fainted; when he regained consciousness, Rose was sitting by his bedside, tenderest of nurses. In time he recovered health and found happiness awaiting him.

THE AMERICANO (Special Two Parts—March 30).—Isabella De Ortega rides over to the mission for her music lesson. While she is there pirates attack the mission and loot its treasures. The monks hide her in the tower, but she is discovered by the ruffian crew and in grave peril until the Americano, leader of the pirate band, rescues her at his own risk. For this service his life is spared when the soldiers, under command of Isabella's father, arrive and, capturing some and killing others, drive off the pirates. The Americano has a genius for organization; he restores the mission. After saving Isabella's life a second time, he asks her hand in marriage, but is haughtily refused by her father. The pirates return to avenge their defeat by looting the hacienda de Ortega on the day of the fiesta. Again it is the Americano who routs them, after rescuing Isabella from their clutches; and this time Ortega consents to the marriage of his daughter and the once despised Yankee, who commands the hidalgo's admiration by his rare proficiency in the arts of peace and war. "The Americano" has become a title of honor.

JUST A LARK (April 1).—Society bores Lucille, and she seeks diversion. Seeing a prairie schooner advertised for sale, she buys it and, with her maid, attempts "the simple life" in the country. Her first thought of the risks involved comes when she sees a placard announcing the escape of a convict. Don Herrick, an artist, is hunting in the vicinity, and she mistakes him for Baldy Jack. He quickly disarms her of father's pistol and establishes himself as a reputable citizen. Soon afterward, he is held up by the convict and forced to change clothes with him. Lucille hides him from the posse. He is discovered, however, and captured after a chase. Baldy Jack seizes his chance to make off with the wagon, but is caught. The lark ends with Lucille declaring Don her prisoner for life.

THE SHERIFF'S DILEMMA (April 2).—Dismissed from the church because of his seemingly undue intimacy with the school teacher, the young minister becomes an evangelist and, after an incident in which he thrashes the drunken sheriff, is appointed sheriff by the mayor. In the girl's home he sees a picture of her father, whom he recognizes as identical with that on a circular calling for the arrest of Idaho Mac, a notorious desperado. He promises the girl that he will never use his gun against her father, but sends his deputy, the ex-sheriff, to apprehend Idaho Mac at the border. The bandit, badly wounded by the deputy's bullets, reaches his daughter's house, and she thinks the sheriff false to his word. But all is cleared up, and the parson-sheriff is reinstated by his congregation.

DESTINY DECIDES (April 3).—The boy meets the girl unconventionally and in time wishes to marry her. Before consenting, she tells him of her terrible experience with one who, winning her love, soon tired of her and cast her off with the brutal words: "You are not my wife—our marriage was a sham." The boy will not permit her past to mar his future, and they are married. Her first husband reads of the marriage and, seeking her out, asserts that she is really his wife. Terrified, the girl confesses the situation to the man she loves, and he vows vengeance on the blackmailer. But fate is before him. The scoundrel is caught cheating at cards and killed by a halfbreed. When the boy, bent on vengeance, enters the room, he sees his prospective victim dead. Instinctively he stoops to examine the body and the pistol. So discovered, he is arrested as the slayer; but the ultimate capture of the halfbreed establishes his innocence.

ROAD O' STRIFE (Episode No. 1—"The House of Secrets"—April 5).—In the little village of Elmhurst is a lonely house with shuttered windows, the home of a suspicious recluse known as Professor Gershom, who is considered more than half mad. No one has ever guessed the secret of the old house—that within its walls a beautiful girl has grown from childhood to womanhood without ever speaking to a human being except her strange guardian. Alene is in heart a child, but she is deeply learned in all things that a really great scientist has been able to teach her. Gershom, however, is vaguely conscious that about her there is something incomplete and imperfect. Alene herself is unaware that the restlessness which prevents her finding interest in the life she has heretofore led is due to the stirring of the primal instinct to seek a mate. Something seems calling her out into the world, and, unquestioning, she answers the call, stealing from the old house while Gershom sleeps.

Fate wills that Robert Dane shall be the first man Alene shall meet. Though neither is aware, a flame of love is instantly kindled. Alene, with the simplicity of perfect purity, demands that Dane take her to live in his house, and is heartbroken when he conducts her instead to her own home. Dane is himself miserable, for he thinks this wonderful little person must be demented, and that it is for this reason that she has been hidden from the world. Sadly Alene enters the old house, to find a scene of horror. Stretched upon the floor, with the blood matting his hair, is Professor Gershom and upon the edge of a curtain is a human hand, the figure itself being concealed by the drapery. In the fascination of terror Alene draws near enough to the mysterious hand to observe that it wears a peculiar ring, and then flees from the place. Alene finds Dane and induces him to return with her to the house, they being accompanied by Dr. Duncan, a kindly old village practitioner and friend of Dane. They find the old house empty—the body of Gershom has disappeared, and there is no one behind the curtain.

Dr. Duncan takes Alene to his home, though she declares that she would prefer to go with Dane, and she is tenderly cared for by the doctor's old wife. Dr. Duncan and his wife also think the poor child demented, but hope time and kindness may cure the ill. As to her identity they have no clue and can only surmise her relationship to Gershom. Alone in his study Dane is dreaming of Alene.

CAPTURING THE COOK (April 6).—George Carter on his way to visit his sister, Mrs. Smith, rescues Mabel Dinsmore from the attentions of a fat "gink." Mabel, finding they alight at the same station, insists that they part as strangers. Mabel takes a hack to her sister's, Mrs. Brown, next door to Mrs. Smith, and George, afoot, gets there later and finds that Mrs. Smith's girl has left and that she has a dinner party that evening. George volunteers to cook for her and finds the task beyond his powers. The Browns and other guests are wondering at the delayed dinner and Mrs. Smith is hysterical. Mabel, left alone by the Browns, hangs a few handkerchiefs on the line in the backyard, and is taken for the maid by George, who frantically requests her to come and cook. Mabel takes him for a chef and a crazy one. Frightened she humors him by coming to help. Explanations satisfy all but Mabel, who will not speak to George.

The guests help serve the dinner and George accepts Mrs. Brown's invitation to call again, but Mabel will not see him. Mrs. Brown detects signs of interest, however, and next morning leaves Mabel in the kitchen making a cake. She leaves the front door open and calls on Mrs. Smith, and conveys a hint to dense George, who hastens to the Brown kitchen, but is coolly received by Mabel until he falls over the coal scuttle. This provokes first mirth. Then George pretends to have seriously injured his right foot. Mabel goes for bandages and upon her return finds him in a different position and claiming his left foot as the injured one. She attempts to bandage it and is captured. Finally she yields and they go to a clinch. They break away as Browns and Mrs. Smith enter. Mabel is indignant when Brown discovers flour on George, but again consents to clinch as the women lead the protesting Brown away.

THE CIPHER KEY (Special—Three Parts—April 7).—As the representative of an American ship building corporation, John Burton is sent to South America with a bid. The officials of a South American ship building concern try to prevent the Americans from securing the contract. The officials of the South American concern believe that if they can secure a copy of the American's bid they can underbid. Mendez and his ally, Talmac, follow Burton on board ship and secure the stateroom next to the one he occupies. A hole bored through the partition enables him to see Burton place the papers in his traveling bag. Later, however, Burton places them in his pocket. When Talmac searches Burton's stateroom the papers are not found. Together, that night, they tackle Burton on the deck and after knocking him down secure the papers but not the key to the cipher in which they are written. The key is on a slip of paper inserted in the barrel of his revolver. Fearing they have killed Burton they throw his body overboard. The shock of the water revives Burton and he swims until rescued by another vessel.

Mendez is furious at finding the papers in cipher, and a further search of Burton's effects fails to bring forth the key. He and Talmac report their failure to the South American ship building officials, who also fail in deciphering the plans. Burton, meanwhile, reaches South America and later is seen and followed by Mendez. He is attacked in his room and searched but nothing is found but an invitation to the Embassy Ball which the American Ambassador has given him. This was at his request so that he could meet Angelica Sorenko. Talmac left Burton his revolver and in that way passed by his one chance of getting what he wanted. Mendez prevails upon Angelica, whom he loves, to help him secure the key. At the ball Angelica and Burton meet. She plays her game and gets him to escort her home. Mendez and Talmac with the aeroplane, station themselves near the house to get away at once if she secures a translation of the plans which have been intrusted to her. Burton makes love to Angelica and she makes her love the price of the cipher key. He seizes her and passionately kisses her. She scathingly rebukes him. Ashamed and seeing nothing but failure facing him, he hands her his revolver and tells her to shoot him.

She tests his nerve and finds it unfailing. Her interest in Burton turns to love and giving him the papers begs him to escape. Mendez, jealous and impatient, has come to the house and is watching through the window. Burton compels Angelica to consent to escape with him. He gives her both papers and key to send to the Navy Department if he is killed. Mendez tries but fails to prevent their leaving. They escape in his auto and are followed by Mendez and Talmac in an aeroplane. A running fight through the country and down the coast follows Angelica does the shooting while Burton drives the car. Mendez, shot from his seat in the aeroplane, falls to the ground, dying. Talmac takes his seat at great peril and continues the chase. The auto breaks down and Burton seizes a fast motorboat. Talmac wheels about to follow but a bullet strikes the engine and an explosion follows in which the machine dashes to the ground. Out of the wreckage crawls Talmac and in another motorboat continues the chase. His ammunition gives out and a well directed bullet from Burton's revolver sends him to his death. Burton and Angelica reach the Navy Department in time to get the secret bid in, and later with a congratulation cablegram from his firm secures a double reward.

MR. CARLSON OF ARIZONA (Special—Two Parts—April 8).—Mr. Carlson of Arizona came to New York with some money and much to learn about Wall Street, and its "bulls" and "bears." He entered into the narrow street of gold without fear and made many of the "wise" ones snort with rage. But one day this engineer from the West peeved a "great" man with many millions more than he could control. The result was inevitable; the "big fellows" relieved the young engineer of his money, and of all the many friends he had there remained none. One, who had never spoken, came forward with sincere and earnest words, begging him to return to his home in Arizona. A western friend, learning of his calamity, offered him a position as engineer in his construction camp out where the boy belonged. The boy subconsciously following the dictates of his former stenographer returns to his home. After many lonesome periods, the face of his former helper appears before him and in her eyes he reads her secret.

He returns East in search of this little helper, not knowing the West was also her home. He goes back dejectedly to his toils and tasks after his search in the East has been in vain, only to run upon by accident that which he had been searching for, she to whom he had been most cruel by his indifference. While out riding Agnes hears the click of the keys of a typewriter in an isolated desert adobe shack. Inquisitive as to who the operator might be, she learns that it is her old employer and the man whom she loves and in his absent hours she stealthily does his work for him. Finally he recognizes the many artful tricks and touches of "her," whom he has learned to appreciate. Later(two detectives, who had been sent upon his trail by men of the East (who feared him), secured their just deserts, and Mr. Carlson of Arizona is relieved from a very unpleasant situation through the love and bravery of his little helper, and he asks her to return as his stenographer, to which she shakes her head. Then he speaks two words, with a smile—"MY WIFE"—she nods—and he, who is handcuffed, asks her to unlock them. She does so and he in turn embraces her, putting one handcuff upon her wrist.

STROKE OF FATE (April 9).—Professor Fain, a wealthy scientist, has a secretary, Richard Dare, who falls in love with Dorothy Blake, the professor's ward. It is the professor's desire, however, that she marry his nephew, Morris Fain. Dorothy is not indifferent to Richard, but cares nothing for Morris. Richard is about to propose when he learns that the professor has planned to make Dorothy and Morris his heirs if they marry. Richard decides that he cannot ask Dorothy to forego the luxury of wealth, and refrains from speaking.

Morris, who has been leading a wild life, visits his uncle at night and asks for funds. The amount which he receives is not a drop in the bucket of his debts, and, leaving, he stops outside the door. The professor leaves the room, and Morris returns and takes more money. The old man detects him in the act, and in a struggle, the professor is knocked unconscious. Morris flees and conceals himself to avoid Richard, who is coming. Richard enters the study and finds the professor on the floor. Dorothy appears and, finding Richard and the scientist, she screams. Morris rushes in and accuses Richard. The professor recovers but is paralyzed, unable to speak or move. Richard is sentenced to prison, and when Dorothy learns from a paper which Morris finds that it was the desire of her uncle that they marry, she agrees to the marriage with Morris.

The doctor finds that the professor has made some improvement, but does not tell Morris for fear of raising false hope of the professor's recovery. He tells Morris, however, that the old man must be kept quiet, and that a shock might kill him. The wedding day approaches, and Morris, believing that the shock of seeing the ceremony might cause the death of his uncle and thus remove all danger of detection, has the old man placed where he can see the wedding. During the ceremony, the old man struggles to regain the power of speech, and succeeds just in time to prevent the completion of the marriage. The professor's denunciation of Morris results in the latter's conviction and Richard's release, and the old scientist bestows his blessing upon his secretary and his ward.

Hallberg Talk No. 41

You know, and so does every other well-informed moving picture operator and exhibitor, that I was the first producer of electric economizers for the control of picture arcs. The Hallberg A. C. Economizer is used by thousands of exhibitors, it was a life saver for the exhibitor eight years ago. Today the Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer is a life saver to those who are using it and it would be to you other men who are wasting your time trying all kinds of motor generators, rotary converters, etc., which are not comparable in current saving and light giving quality with the Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer. I have letters from some of the largest theaters begging me to help them out of their trouble after they have invested several hundred or a thousand dollars in an inferior motor generator or rotary converter because a local electrician or the electric light company's man said that the device he bought was the best. You will find that if you do not buy the Hallberg you will not get the best and you will regret it in the long run.

CLOTHES COUNT (April 10).—Jack Belding is engaged to Amy Manners. His father, who lives in a distant city, has never seen her. He visits his son who is about to take him to see Amy, but business intervenes and he tells Jack to go and attend to the shop, and that he will find his way to Amy's alone. He catches her washing her hair in anticipation of his visit and when he hustles back to the office, he and Jack quarrel about her looks. Jack hustles off to see what was the matter and the old man starts for home. Jack arranges to bring his father to lunch at Amy's, and father decides to have one more try. The cook quits at the sudden notice of lunch and Amy puts on the apron. Father's second look at his daughter-in-law is worse than the first. Amy, desperate, collars him, drags him into the house and ties him to a chair. Then she telephones Jack and hustles up lunch. Father is just about to leave when she comes in, in her proper person and father decides that Jack was right after all.

HE COULDN'T EXPLAIN (April 10).—Mary Jinks starts to visit her mother in the country, and her better half, Jonathan, drops a line to his friend Jones explaining the circumstances and inviting him to come over and have a good time that evening. It is a very informal note and while signed it is not addressed to Jones. The note miscarries and is found by Cora Lusk, a resourceful lady burglar. Her husband assists her in tracing Jinks address and straightway Cora conceives the idea of eloping with the family plate. Jinks, not getting any response from Jones, falls asleep and Mary having missed the train that would take her to mama comes back and quietly enters the house. She thinks she hears strange noises downstairs, and sends her sleepy husband down to find out the cause; then she listens, hears sounds of kissing and goes to investigate. She finds Jinks in Cora's embrace and Cora presents a note that might have been written to her, and declares she is there by Jinks invitation. Naturally she gets fired out of the house and Jinks gets a pair of black eyes. A message from the police station, however, sets matters straight and Mary is so sorry for Jinks' appearance she forgets to be sore because he was glad she went away.

THE AMATEUR NURSE (April 15).—Polly, the nurse, is very absent minded and at times even forgets to take the baby out walking. On this particular morning Polly is in a great hurry to get downtown to attend a bargain sale, and the cook is forced to impress upon her mind the necessity of giving the baby fresh air several times before she takes the hint.

Harry, the town sport, is also out taking the air and on his way downtown, meets a very pretty young lady, who is bound for the sale. Harry accompanies her to the store and promises to wait until she comes out. Polly arrives with the baby and upon discovering Harry, asks him to look after the young one until she returns. The baby starts to cry and Harry picks it up to comfort it; suddenly out comes the young lady, but, when she sees him with the baby in his arms, she will have nothing more to do with him. Off she goes in a fury while Harry, carrying the baby, follows vainly trying to explain.

As the baby will not stop its crying Harry, thinking it is hungry, goes to a lunch room and orders steak, but, strange to say, the desired result are not forthcoming. Harry in despair, borrows a nursing bottle and immediately all is serene; greatly relieved he finds a quiet spot and falls asleep. Polly in the meantime reaches home and the cook misses the baby—much running—much excitement—and many policemen follow. Harry is at last discovered dreaming that he is taking care of five small babies. His dreams are brought to a sudden close; but everyone is satisfied, even the young lady, and she and Harry are again united.

THE WOMAN WHO DARED (Five Parts).—Count Bertrand is an army officer who enjoys the utmost confidence of the military leaders of his country but who nevertheless finds time to devote himself also to the interests of several charitable institutions. He and his wife are always among the first to offer their services when some charity fete is planned, and both being splendid riders, are chosen to take charge of a pretentious society circus designed to raise money for an orphanage. In order to stage the production in professional style, they hire Ivanoff, a circus manager, to assist them. Ivanoff gladly accepts their offer of the commission, not only because of the liberal payment promised, but also because of the fact that he is in reality a spy in the pay of a neighboring power and thinks that through association with the count, he will be able to gain possession of some valuable government secrets. He bides his time and finally, by drugging the count, succeeds in getting into his own hands some maneuvre plans which had been entrusted to Bertrand. These he delivers to the prime minister of the hostile power, and Bertrand is arrested on a charge of having sold the information to the enemy. He is convicted on circumstantial evidence and sentenced to twelve years in prison.

Countess Bertrand is prostrated by her husbands's disgrace, but confident of his innocence, sets herself to find evidence which will set him free. Certain clews lead her to suspect that Ivanoff is the real thief of the plans. To find him is in itself a difficult task, for he has disappeared and left no inkling of his whereabouts behind him. Finally the countess hits upon a plan. She will disguise herself, join a circus and seek for Ivanoff among the haunts of circus people. This she does, and it is not long before the famous "Lady of the Mask," a suburb equestrienne who never allows her features to be seen, even by her colleagues, is one of the best known performers in the circus world. The masked rider, of course, is none other than the countess herself. The time the circus with which she is connected plays a long engagement in the hippodrome at the capitol of Rugaria, the country which Ivanoff serves. Alexis, the countess' servant, locates Ivanoff's divorced wife, Nadia, and from her they learn that the spy is in the city, living luxuriously on a large sum of money paid him for the stolen plans, and several days later they see him occupying a box at the hippodrome.

Ivanoff is struck with the grace of the masked rider and asks for an introduction, which is granted. The countess, never taking off her mask, leads him on until he invites her to take dinner in his rooms. She accepts, and as they are dining suddenly removes her mask and covers him with a revolver. She forces him to give her the plans and his correspondence with the Rugarian officials and is delighted to find that the papers prove conclusively her husband's innocence. Still covering Ivanoff with the pistol, she makes her escape from the house. In her haste she drops one of the documents, but Alexis, the servant, whom she has left on guard at the door, picks it up and jams it into his pocket.

Now that she has the precious proofs, the countess loses no time in leaving the Rugarian capital. Ivanhoff, however, has not lost his presence of mind and succeeds in getting a warrant for her arrest. He charters a high-powered motor car and starts for the border at top speed. There is an exciting race between his machine and the train which bears the countess. The auto wins, and when the daring woman reaches the frontier, Ivanoff and a squad of military police are waiting for her at the border station. The papers are taken from her and she is hustled across the border into her own country. She returns heartbroken to her home. Several days later, Alexis, who has follower on another train, arrives and gives her the paper which she dropped in fleeing from Ivanoff's house. It proves to be a letter from the prime minister of Rugaria to the spy and conclusively proves the innocence of the count. This letter, turned over to the military authorities, wins a pardon for Bertrand and brings back happiness to the woman who dared.

THE GUARDIAN OF THE FLOCK (Two Parts—April 5).—Tony Tafoya is a pastor de cabras—a goat-herd in the emyloy of Senor Padrone del Pastores. One day—it being a Saint's festival—he journeys to Santa Fe on his pack burro and at the church service there kneels by chance by Rosaria. After the service, led on by her flirting, he follows her to her casa; and that night, by appointment, sings to her upon his guitar beneath her window. One evening, as he is jogging on his little pack burro into Santa Fe, he comes upon Rosaria, and another, McKnight. He sees Rosaria permit the American to kiss her lips, while she fastens her rosary and crucifix, with little star pendant, about his throat as a charm, but does not hear McKnight vow to never again take human life at her request, nor see him, in ratification of the pledge, throw his gun into the nearby stream.

Tony enters Pasquale's taberna, the Fonda, where he proceeds to drink so madly that even Pasquale feels called upon to interfere. In the midst of this McKnight enters, inviting those in the barroom to drink with him, as he is that night betrothed. About his open shirted throat is a rosary, with crucifix attached, and tiny filigree star pendant. At sight of this Tony hurls his bottle of aguardiente against the bar counter, and confronts McKnight. McKnight invites him to drink in honor of the occasion; but for answer Tony reaches up and tears off the rosary about the other's throat. The little star pendant, only, comes away in his fingers. McKnight starts to reach back for his gun to avenge the insult, when he suddenly recollects that he has thrown it away at Rosaria's bidding.

A year elapses, and Tony is again sitting among his goats; this time brooding over a little filigree star pendant which he keeps ever with him. He has made a vow to some day load this into the barrel of his .45 and shoot it into McKnight's heart. Suddenly there is a commotion among his flock and Tony observes that a wolf has broken among them. He shoots the wolf, and picks up a wounded yearling. Bandages and water are a requisite, and Tony glances about him for sign of human habitation. For the first time in long months he looks again into the star of the evening; and there, again, grows for him the picture of Rosaria, imaged as a madonna. Unconsciously he follows the star with his flock and the wounded yearling, until he notes that is shines directly over a 'dobe hut. He enters; the hut is empty within. On the stove is a simmering coffee pot, and beneath the window is a wooden packing box.

Tony tends his wounded yearling, then pours himself a cup of black coffee. As he takes stock of his surroundings his eyes is caught by an empty gun holster that hangs against the wall. He examines this closer, and perceives its owner's initials burn into the leather flat—"B. McK." Tony replaces the scabbard, and draws his gun, stuffing down the barrel thereof the little star pendant wrapped in a cigarette paper.

As dusk falls a prowling wolf passes the window, attracting Tony's attention. He crosses to the window to peer without, and perceives something flutter in the wooden packing-box. Peering within, he sees a small babe. About the babe's throat is a woman's rosary and crucifix. Tony notes that at the end of the crucifix is an empty hook for a pendant. He remains, gun in hand, guarding the babe and the crucifix.

Once more the 'dobe hut is empty. Night has fallen as Rosaria followed by McKnight, enters. She lays her fingers on her lips and tiptoes over to the packing-box, McKnight following. Together they kneel there. Suddenly Rosaria exclaims:

"See, beloved! an angel hath guarded our child."

McKnight starts to laugh incredulously—then stares as Rosaria holds the crucifix up to his inspection. Pendant from its empty hook is a little star of Bethlehem.

Through the window, afar on the moonlit desert, a lone goat-herd is standing among his flock.

THE RUSTLE OF A SKIRT (April 9).—Hal Farrel, a clean-minded young man, is keeping bachelor apartments with Dick Carew, who "loves the ladies." Farrel is a misogyunstic. Carey has a sister, Marietta, a lovable hoyden of a girl who is an unconscious flirt just because she is so full of life. One day Marietta calls at the office of Peabody & Company, where the two young men are employed. Upon being shown to her brother she asks him who the fine young man is in the outer office. Carew tells her that it is his woman-hating pal. Marietta determines to interest him. Since Carew believes his pal is a hardened old cynic he doesn't hesitate to make a wager with his sister of a fur coat that she will interest him. When Carew with set face appears he answers Farrel's query of "Who is she?" by saying, "'Naughty Mable,' the burlesque queen."

That night, when Carew dresses up for another wild night, he asks Farrel to accompany him, so he may see "Naughty Mable." Farrell replies that no woman can fascinate him. After Carew has gone, Farrel examines some photographs of himself that he has recently had taken, five in all, and then pens a letter.

At a secluded corner of a street a cab stands waiting. Suddenly Dick Carew appears and is instantly joined by a woman muffled in sable furs and a black mask. The two, after a hasty conversation and the exchange of something bulky, get into the cab. Farrel meanwhile finishes his letter and departs to the corner mail box to post it. When he returns home, to his surprise he finds a horse and cab tied to his hitching post. He is even more greatly surprised when he sees a light burning in his room above the street. Farrel lets himself into the house and goes up the stairs, only to find his room dark. Farrel enters his room, turns on the lights and finds one of his photographs missing and all the drawers of the dresser standing open. He decides that his pal has returned and is playing some joke, so he starts across the hall to Jack's bedroom. He listens at the door, then recoils in surprise upon finding a dainty rhinestone barretta upon the floor of the hall.

Determined to solve the mystery, Farrel pushes open the door and rushes into the dark room and turns on the lights to find himself looking into the barrel of a revolver in the hands of a woman, attired in a tight fitting evening gown of black velvet and a sable mask to match, while on one of the chairs hangs an elegant sable fur piece. The midnight visitor speaks not a word but forces him back into his room where she cooly demands the keys to his employer's office and makes him hand them over. He is struck by her loveliness and begs her to remove her mask, but she refuses. The time quickly passes in jolly repartee. Then she leaves. For just an instant she leans near him and in the madness of the moment he clasps her to him and kisses her lips through the little slit in the black domino. Farrel hurries to the window to see the woman climb into the waiting cab and vanish.

Following that midnight visit, Farrel has no peace of mind left and actually begins to look thin and wan, especially when he receives a taunting letter from the masked woman daring him to find her and offering him the right to kiss her without ceremony should he find her. Strange to say, the Peabody Company failed to receive a visit from burglars and Farrel makes the discovery that the girl left the keys she took from him on the staircase. Here Carew decides to play his inning. Meeting his sister at a secluded spot he is forced to listen to her taunts regarding her ability. When he offers to bring Farrel to her, she defuses to listen to such a thing. It is then that Carew has a bold scheme. That night he invites Farrel to accompany him to his home in another city to spend the week end. Farrel accepts.

Farrel and Carew arrive at the latter's home unknown to Marietta, who has been away all day. That evening, Marietta is reading in the library with her back to the door when Carew slyly leads Farrel before the door and, feigning some excuse, withdraws. Farrel quickly sizes up the library and with it the girl whose back is facing him and recoils in wonder for in the girl's wonderful hair reposes the rhinestone barretta, easily recognizable because of its oddity. He starts toward her and forces her to turn round. He kisses her, and she resists only for the moment then lies quite willingly in his arms.

THE STORY THE CLOCK TOLD (April 5).—John Vernon, sitting before the fire, glances at the old clock and realizes that at the hour of twelve, sixty minutes, hence, her sixtieth birthday will have ended. On the clock's dial with its twelve numerals in her musings she sees in epitome the three score years of her unsuccessful life, each of the hour periods representing a span of five years.

Through the vista of time her muse wanders, showing the disappointment of her parents because she was not a boy, adopted to become a playmate for her; their happy hours at play; their school days and the later years of their teens when came the first sweet dawn of love.

Her lined face forms rivulets for her tears as she reviews how sternly her father had forbidden their love; how her sweetheart had been sent away; how another man had been forced upon her and how, to avoid this loveless marriage, she had run away into the world of a thousand sorrows.

She reviews the incidents of her life on the stage; of traps laid to lure her to the path forbidden.

She reviews the after years of her work as nurse in hospitals, to which service she had gone, disgusted with the sham and false glitter of the footlights; how her hands had soothed the sick and had eased the fleeting moments of the dying; how on a cot of pain she had found her own father—alone with his pain.

Back from the journey of years, Janet glances at the old clock. It had stopped at one minute before the midnight moment. Her old limbs tremble, as she hobbles to the clock and tries to wind it. Her strength fails. Feebly she pushes the pendulum, and the clock's hand moves to the hour of twelve and stops. She sinks to the floor and dies as the clock strikes twelve.

THE BROKEN TOY (Two Parts—April 9).—Adele breaks her doll and brings it to Merle, her mother, to mend. While Merle is doing this, little Adele dances in the street with the rest of the children. Merle, recalling old memories, goes to a trunk and picks out a ballet dress. Old picture falls out. As she looks at this, she cannot restrain the sobs. She bows on the edge of the trunk and the scene fades.

At the feast of a rich couple, Merle, the ballet girl, is to dance. After the dance, the little ballet girl is tired and sits down on a divan in an adjoining room. The fiancee, Ralph Hilton, talks to her. Confidentially, she tells him the story of her life. Her parents were circus people and both died when she was young. A middle-aged clown took the child and taught her to become a ballet dancer; they were happy till he died. She was forced to dance for a living.

The fiancee goes to look for Ralph, and seeing him with the ballet girl, quarrels with him. Next day she returns his ring. Ralph becomes interested in Merle and becomes a steady caller. Later they are married and he takes her to his beautiful home and she soon realizes with sadness that she is a Millionaire's Toy, dancing for him when it is his whim. One day Merle falls and breaks her ankle. She will never be able to dance again and thinking that is all the attraction she has for Ralph, she leaves him without clue as to her whereabouts. Then came baby Adele, and the hard fight to keep starvation away.

With a start Merle awakes. Adele is beside her, delighted with the dress which she wants to try on. Merle lets her do so. The dress just fits, it being the one the clown had made for her when he taught her to dance. That evening Merle is sick. While her mother is sleeping Adele puts on the little dress, her ragged coat and goes along the streets to the hotel where she has seen all the pretty ladies and men go. She slips in and takes off the ragged coat and airily flits across the floor, attracting a good deal of attention; it is too much for the poor hungry child. Her dance finished, she falls.

Among the group is a handsome man who rushes to the child and gives orders to those standing around. When the child revives he questions her. She tells him she has come to earn money for her sick mother. He takes her home and there sees Merle, his wife. Merle and her husband go back once more to the beautiful home Ralph has occupied alone for years.

LAEMMLE.

HIS CAPTIVE (Two Parts—April 7).—The daughter of Charles Lander, a retired cattle king, had married against her father's wishes and far below her station in life. Her husband is a crook and mistreats her. He is arrested and sent to prison. A child is born to her and she dies, sending the babe to her parents for protection and care. The child, Anita, grows up to be her grandfather's idol and the pet of society. Paul Reeves, a famous Western writer, who detests social gatherings, meets her and there is a mutual attraction. Reeves tells her that life in the great West is beyond the understanding of such social butterflies as she. Next day Paul leaves for his beloved West.

Charles Landers receives a letter from the foreman of his cattle ranch in the West, telling him of the continued depredations of a band of petty cattle rustlers, advising him to come to the ranch. Anita pleads to go with him and he finally consents. They arrive at the ranch in the West and are made comfortable. Anita, who is fond of horse-back riding, makes many trips around the country. One day she happens upon Reeves as he sits before his camp fire, thinking. There is mutual joy at meeting again.

After leaving Reeves, Anita happens to see a desperate looking character and a man apparently his pal, driving away some of the ranch cattle. Anita sets out for the ranch to inform her grandfather of the theft, but is seen by the two rustlers and captured by them. They imprison her in their hut. Anita's horse comes home riderless and Reeves immediately suspects her danger. Catching the horse, he attaches a note to the saddle, stating he fears she has been hurt and for the people at the ranch to send assistance. He turns the horse in the direction of the ranch and starts him off.

He then takes up the trail, which leads him to the hut. Peering in at the window he sees the two rustlers and Anita, who is bound. The rustler, who had captured Anita, comes upon Reeves outside the hut and a fight ensues. Anita's grandfather and his men arrive. The leader of the cattle rustlers is shot and in the dead man, Charles Lander recognizes his daughter's husband and the father of Anita. Later Paul and Anita are married.

LIFE'S FURROW (April 11).—Jack's mother idolizes him. When she receives a letter that he must have five hundred dollars more in order to buy law books, she is worried. Her only resource is to mortgage the farm. She goes to Lawyer Robbins, who promises to raise the money for her. After she has gone, the lawyer's daughter enters and becomes interested in Jack's mother.

Lawyer Robbins become worried when he learns that his daughter loves Jack. He has a friend in the city, who investigates the young man, thus learning that the boy is leading a wild and extravagant life. Jack's "law books," this friend finds, are mainly playing cards. So Lawyer Robbins and his daughter leave to investigate for themselves. They arrive at Jack's apartments while a wild stage racket is in progress. The old man takes him to task and tells him that instead of studying law and dissipating he should be home working on his mother's farm.

Jack tells the old lawyer and his daughter to mind their own affairs and leave, which they do. Then he dismisses his friends whose gibes at the rural appearance of the visitors, have infuriated him. The lawyer's contemptuous words burn in his brain and he thinks of his poor little mother whose toil-stained hands have worked so long for him, and he packs up. The next day the lawyer and daughter visit the mother to advise her not to mortgage the farm as the money will be wasted, when the girl's sharp eyes see the son plowing in the nearby field. They go to him and Jack expresses repentance and is restored to the good opinon of those who have always loved him.

EDDIE'S LITTLE NIGHTMARE (April 6).—Eddie calls upon his fiancee, Victoria, to present her with the engagement ring. She keeps him so long, while dressing, that Eddie falls asleep and has a horrible nightmare. He dreams that he is married to Victoria and that they have a large family of children, whom he has left to care for while she goes to a mother's meeting. All the neighbors drop in and leave their children and pandemonium results. The children float their toy boats in the bath tub which overflows; get mixed up in the jam; wreck furniture and create all the havoc possible.

The parents return for the children and a wild chase ensues when some of the children get lost. Eddie is wakened from his dream by Victoria who asks him if he has the ring. He tells her that he has not, but has come over to say good-bye to her as he is sailing for the Fiji Islands in the morning, having taken a position as missionary to the natives. He leaves Victoria and congratulates himself on his single blessedness.

THE BABY'S FAULT (April 9).—Lee Grey likes to play poker but his wife absolutely forbids it. But when she goes away for the afternoon and leaves Grey at home to take care of the baby, he proceeds to take the baby and sneaks off to Brown's apartment for a friendly game, intending to get back home before his wife. Time passes fast and Grey suddenly looks at his watch to find it is nearly time for his wife to be home.

He barely manages to beat her home, but forgets the baby. He has no time to go back, so has to run a bluff, and Mrs. Grey gets home to find him industriously rocking the cradle; but when she wants to kiss the baby, Grey refuses to permit it, saying he has just got the baby to sleep. To get away from the house, Grey wraps a pillow up to represent the baby and announces that the baby needs some fresh air. Mrs. Grey objects but Grey leaves it with the "baby." A policeman sees Grey hugging the pillow and talking baby to it, and promptly takes him to the police station.

In the meantime, Brown discovers the baby in his room and sends it to Grey's house by a messenger boy. Mrs. Grey receives the baby and gets the idea that her husband has forsaken her because she would not let him play cards. Grey telephones Brown who manages to get him out of jail; but when Brown tells him about the baby, he is afraid to go home and so goes with Brown. Mrs. Grey goes to Brown's apartment and pleads with him to help her find her "poor, mistreated husband." Grey, hiding behind a curtain, grasps the situation at once and assumes a haughty air; but after considerable pleading on the part of his wife, he forgives her.

goes to his wife and she is persuaded to allow him to go West planning to follow him as soon as Clark has made enough money to pay her passage. Clark rides the rails and finally arrives at the Bar Z Ranch. He secures work at the Bar Z Ranch and is led to gamble with Flores, one of the cattle men.

Dick Granger, the foreman, sees this disposition on the part of the new arrival, and endeavors to give him warning. Clark sends money to his wife and she sets out for the West. Meanwhile, Clark has been unable to free himself from the ever present temptation and continues his connection with Flores. Picturing the dejected misery of his family in the city shack, their home, Clark is unable to resist any opportunity to better their condition. Flores finally inveigles him into joining a gang of cattle rustlers. The cowboys of the Bar Z Ranch determine to end cattle rustling in their district and set out to capture the desperadoes, finding them in the act of branding the stolen cattle. Flores makes his escape, but Clark is taken prisoner.

According to the law of the open, a cattle thief must hang, and Clark is forced to meet his fate. Granger finds a letter in the coat of the dead man, which he has received from his wife, telling him what happiness the money brought her and that she is departing to meet him in the West. Granger realizes the little widow must even then be at the station. Hastily the men destroy all evidence of the tragedy except the newly made grave. Granger meets the little widow and breaks the truth to her, without telling her the cause of her husband's death. They lead her to the side of the grave, and silently she kneels. Granger realizes her dire straits and to help her, he and the boys make up a collection for her relief.

WEDDING BELLS SHALL RING (April 5).—The maid and the cop are sweethearts. They would marry, but seven dollars is all they can rake up between them. This amount is altogether too small to marry on, especially in these days with the high cost of living. Now, Mrs. Richsnob, the maid's employer, catches the pair together. She promptly sends the cop about his business and abuses the heart-broken maid. The latter becomes mighty sore and indignant. In a moment of vindictiveness the angry little maid mails Mrs. Richsnob's photograph to a matrimonial agency with an inscription inviting the attentions of all men with marriageable intentions.

The maid's scheme for revenge works to perfection. Gallant men folk crowd the fashionable home of the Richsnobs, laying their hearts at the feet of the gasping and shocked mistress. The maid views the coming of the men and the subsequent distress of her haughty employer with profound glee. Mr. Richsnob returns home. He furiously attacks the crowd of matrimonial applicants.

But he, himself, is taken for one of their number and is forcibly ousted. The distress of Mrs. Richsnob becomes extreme. Then her hubby returns with the maid's sweetheart, the cop. The maid manages to get the cop aside. She whispers her scheme. The cop is quick to recognize opportunity when it comes. "It will cost you just $500.00 to clean 'em out." Richsnob balks. But just then he gets a glimpse of his wife's awful position. He wilts and hands the cop the money. Then the latter gets busy. Later the maid and her gallant cop are left free to continue their courtship without interruption.

FARES, PLEASE! (April 10).—Ernie is in love with pretty Tillie. But Tillie, who is of a romantic disposition, spurns his love for that of Eddie, the street car conductor. She refuses a pretty engagement ring from Ernie, to accept a book of rides from Eddie, who wears brass buttons. Ernie, not without hope, plans revenge. Finding a bargain in an automobile, he purchases it, also some swell chauffeur clothes and, going around to see Tillie, makes quite a hit with her. He has another brilliant idea and that is to run his automobile as a passenger-carrying vehicle in competition with Eddie's street car.

Tillie now spurns Eddie for Ernie and Eddie finds that his street car business is sadly falling off, for Eornie with his "jitney" 'bus precedes him along the line and "snipes" all the would-be street car passengers. Eddie disheartened, is about ready to give up, but decides on some kind of revenge. He sprinkles tacks along the road on which his car runs with the idea of letting the air out of the auto tires of his rival. In a lonely place and quite disheartened, Eddie is held up by a bandit but Eddie only laughs and points to the cash register, which is empty. The bandit is offering his sympathies when Ernie's car pulls in sight. The tacks work effectively and Ernie, finding every tire punctured, sees all his passengers desert him for the street car, Tillie with the rest of them.

Then the bandit gets in his work to Eddie's dismay, and runs off with the street car, the passenger's money and the fair Tillie. Eddie and Ernie decide to be friends and after fixing up the tires set off in pursuit of the street car, but they are too late. The bandit, Mr. Swag, leaves a note to Eddie and Ernie telling them that Tillie has promised to reform him and that they will soon be married. The bandit, to avoid further pursuit, has thrown away the controller and so it is up to Ernie to pull his friend's car home with him.

SIX MONTHS TO LIVE (March 25).—A synopsis of this picture was published on page 427 of January 16th issue. It was originally scheduled for release on January 21, but was postponed until the date given above.

IN THE CLUTCH OF THE EMPEROR (April 8).—Hal Gordon, owner of the Rovania-American steamship line, is presented with a chest of gold dinner service by the Emperor of Rovania on board the Rovania steamer, "Emperor" bound for America. Hiding in the steerage is Vera, a revolutionist escaping from Rovania. Hal, while walking in the steerage finds a book in which he discovers a curious looking piece of paper which bears but a number and several little holes. The paper falls on the page of the book which corresponds to the number on the paper. He sees the following words appear through the holes of the paper, "the—man—you—fear—is—on—board."

Presently Vera comes looking for the book. The two become interested in each other. As Hal is speaking to her, Count Vorn, ambassador of Rovania, gets a wireless message that Vera is hiding in the steerage and demands she be arrested. Vorn sees and recognizes Vera as a dangerous revolutionist. Before he can arrest her she dodges into the steerage again. Vorn tells Hal he is going to arrest Vera. Hal secretly determines he shall not. He slips to Vera and gives her the key to his cabin. That night, when Vorn tries to arrest her, a cloaked figure jumps out at him and strikes him down, while a girl slips past and hides in Hal's cabin.

Vorn suspects the girl is in Hal's cabin and watches it closely. Hal sends a wireless for his yacht. It arrives and he plans to get the girl out unnoticed. He remembers the cipher the girl used. He gets a copy of the book she used as a key to the cipher and cuts little holes in it. He writes the number of the page she is to look up and slips the paper in the book. When the yacht arrives he asks Vorn to put the book on the window sill of his cabin. Vorn does so. Vera, inside the cabin, steals the paper and, guessing it to be a cipher, reads the following "when—six bells—strike—hide—in—the — gold—dinner—service—chest."

At six bells Hal, Vorn and several sailors enter the cabin. Vorn looks about for the girl but does not see her. Hal has his bags and the chest taken out by the sailors. As it passes out Vorn salutes, as is proper at the exit of a gift of his emperor. Half an hour later, the chest, supposed to contain an imperial gift, opens and a fair sweet revolutionist against that very emperor steps out and is cordially received by the handsome ship owner.

THE GRIND (Three Parts—April 11).—Jean Chesney, from childhood, acted as a little mother to her sisters and brothers while their mother earned a scanty living at the wash-tubs. Death claimed all but Jean and two younger sisters. Rita secures a position as stenographer while Lilly, the youngest, clerks at the ribbon counter in a department store. Jean is an extra girl at one of theaters; her work leaves the two younger girls alone in the evenings, and it is during these hours that Rita confides to Lilly that her employer, Henry Leslie, has made advances to her. Both girls are thrilled at the romantic turn of affairs, never dreaming of serious consequences. Jean attracts the attention of Henry Leslie's son, Bob, on one of his visits behind the scenes of the theater. Under the influence of liquor he forces his attention upon Jean and she slaps his face. This does not daunt him, for he believes all girls can be won with a few flowers. Jean's perversity has only added fuel to the flame. Jean scorns his gifts and flowers.

About this time the hardships of the department store grind tells on Lilly. One day she faints in the store, is taken home and does not return to work again. Rita continues her flirtation with her employer, Leslie, and finally an automobile trip to his country home is planned. Rita is innocently delighted over the trip, for Leslie, in a fatherly way, has made many promises of all he will do for the sisters, especially Lilly, whom Rita idolizes. Rita tells Lilly of the proposed trip. Learning of Lilly's poor health and Jean's struggle to keep her sisters strong, both physically and morally, the kindly actors make up a purse and present it to Jean.

At last the eventful day of Rita's trip to the country arrives. She goes to work as usual. Jean has a matinee, but makes Lilly comfortable for the few hours she must be absent. Bob Leslie's usual gift of flowers awaits her. Angered by his persistency, she tosses the violets out of the box. The girls sharing her room decorate themselves with Bob's offering of love. Seeing them thus adorned, Bob realizes that at last he has met the exceptional girl. His admiration deepens into something better and stronger. He is hastily summoned home. His mother has had a serious heart attack. His father must be reached at once but various 'phone calls fail to locate him. Bob goes out to find him.

Jean is surprised when she fails to find Rita at home. She questions Lilly, who at first evades her queries, but finally enlightens Jean as to Rita's plans for the afternoon. Jean, realizing Leslie's true object, hastily dons hat and coat and determines to find Rita and save her, if possible. Meanwhile, failing to find his father at his business or the clubs, Bob decides he must have gone down to the country. He starts for their country home.

Leslie's manner remained paternal until after supper was served and Rita began to ask if they had not better start homeward. Then Leslie's true motive becomes apparent, for, inflamed with wine, he does not mince matters. Poor Rita is disillusioned. She struggles pitifully to protect herself. Her strength at last fails her and as she shrinks from his approach, the door swings open and Jean comes down between them.

He laughs at her tirade and declares she is even more charming than her sister. Bob enters at this moment and is dumbfounded to find his father in the company of the two girls. He glances from Jean to the supper table with its overturned wine glasses and his ideal is suddenly smashed. Bob tells his father his serious news, which sobers Leslie, and they hurriedly leave. On their arrival at home they hear that Mrs. Leslie has passed away. Rita finds it difficult to obtain another position, so now Jean's earnings supply their needs.

Bob Leslie, heartbroken at his mother's sudden death, drinks heavily to drown his sorrow. One night when in a drunken stupor he hails a taxi. The chauffeur and his confederate, a crook, taking advantage of Bob's condition, beat and rob him. Driving down a narrow dark street, they drag him while he is in an unconscious condition to a doorway and then hurry away. Jean, returning from the theater, stumbles over the body on entering her home. With Rita's assistance they help him up-stairs. When the blood and dirt is washed from his face, Jean recognizes Bob. For a moment, recalling his father's conduct towards Rita, she decides to turn him out, but her better nature conquers and she lets him remain.

The next day he is sufficiently recovered to return home but he lingers in hopes of seeing Jean who since his return to consciousness has remained aloof. He questions Rita and the girl, attracted to him, tells him bitterly of the hard struggle a girl has in a big city—her experience as an example. He is overjoyed on learning the part Jean played on that terrible night and that she is the good girl he at first thought her. He pours out his heart to Rita, telling her of his love for Jean.

Jean's sudden entrance puts an end to their exchange of confidence. Rita beats a hasty retreat. Bob beseeches Jean to forgive his rudeness to her and to overlook his father's treatment of Rita. At last he gains a smile from her and her hand is held out in token of forgiveness.

THE MYSTERIOUS CONTRAGRAV (Two Parts—April 6).—Coxheim, an inventor of renown, and master of negative electricity, after many years of hard labor and deep study, succeeds in inventing an electrical device that resists gravitation. His son, Willard, and daughter, Laline, both expert aviators, have rendered their father valuable assistance in perfecting his invention, through their knowledge of air currents. Laline suggests to her father that it be called the contragrav—that is, contrary to gravitation. Among the invited guests at the demonstration for government officials is a person named Laloud, who, unknown to the officials and the inventor, increases his income by selling government secrets to the highest bidder. Laloud visits the agent of a foreign government and, for a consideration, informs him of the existence of the contragrav.

Realizing the possibilities and value of such a device, the foreign agent loses no time in laying plans to obtain possession of the contragrav. Conferring with his confederate, it is decided to have Olga Belgram obtain the device. She contrives to get into the inventor's home by sending her machine over an embankment into the water below and by deftly leaping from the machine just as it is about to plunge over the precipice. Fortunately, she lands right at the feet of Laline, who, thinking her seriously injured, takes her into her mother's house. Olga's clever ruse enables her to ascertain the hiding place of the coveted invention more quickly and easily than she had hoped. She assures Laline that she feels no ill effects from her fall, and not long thereafter reaches the foreign agent's office with the desired information. Equipped with this information, the agent's confederates manage to steal the contragrav. With the prized invention in their possession, they hurry to a suburban villa to study its construction and duplicate it if possible.

Upon discovering the theft, not wishing to make known to the public the loss of so valuable an invention, Coxheim engages private detectives. Upon questioning the inventor and his household, the detectives learn of Olga's visit. Laline, feeling that she is partly responsible for the disappearance of the invention, determines to do all she can to restore it to her father. By adroit maneuvering, she learns of Olga's visit to the suburban villa, and with her brother makes a flight in their aeroplane. They land almost at the door of the villa, offering as an excuse that they have run out of gas. A servant admits them to the house, where they meet Olga. Believing Olga and the servant are alone in the house, Laline straightway accuses her of the theft of the contragrav and demands to know its whereabouts. Olga presses a button, which summons the aid of the servant and a confederate. A fight ensues in which Willard and his sister overpower Olga and her confederates, secure the contragrav and succeed in reaching their aeroplane.

Just as they begin to make their flight, Olga's confederate, also an aviator, hastens to his machine, places some bombs in it and starts after Willard and Laline. A lively chase through the air ensues. Realizing that he is being overtaken, Willard advises his sister to buckle on the contragrav and jump from the aeroplane, which she does and by manipulating the different currents of negative electricity, she floats through the air, landing safely on a hilltop. The foreigner pursues Willard, and just as he sails immediately over him, he drops a bomb which explodes near Willard's machine, completely destroying it, and killing Willard.

Laline succeeds in reaching her home with the contragrav, and hurriedly explains her experiences to the detectives, who return with her to the villa. The villa is almost completely destroyed before Olga and her confederate are overpowered and made to suffer for their crime.

STERLING.

THE BUTLER'S BUSTED ROMANCE (April 8).—Jiggs is informed that he will win a large fortune if he marries a certain girl, the choice of a dead relative, whom he has never seen. He is called away on business, however, and carelessly leaves the letter lying on a table. Even while he is on the way to the station to answer a business call, a wire arrives, stating the young lady is on her way. The butler, finding the "fortune" letter, also gets the telegram, and decides to impersonate his master, and cop the heiress.

The young lady arrives and the butler gets busy at once. He has figured without reckoning, however, for the cook, a lady of proportions, is deeply in love with him, and she promises to interfere with his love making. He dumps her into the coal bin with little ceremony. The chauffeur, finding the note, also gets "wise," and attempts to get the heiress for himself.

A terrible mixup follows when the cook frees herself from the coal bin and proceeds to vent her wrath on the chauffeur, the butler and the wealthy young lady, as well. After various desperate combats, Jiggs arrives in time to save his affianced bride from a very embarrassing situation, and to kick his three faithless servants out into the cold world, where they land in a still colder water fountain, their ardor sadly dampened, and their longing for an heiress completely drowned.

BISON.

AND THEY CALLED HIM HERO (Two Parts—April 10).—Jim, Joe and Pat are all in love with Betty. Joe and Pat enlist in the Union army and leave for the front. Betty promises to give her answer to the three lovers at the end of the war. At the front Pat is given a message to carry through the Confederate lines. In doing so he meets Joe and falls before him in an exhausted condition. Joe, thinking Pat is dead, delivers the message and takes credit for the deed. Pat, upon recovering, is captured by the Confederates and put in Libby prison.

After the war he returns north and finds the girl is married to Jim. Joe is hailed as a hero, while Pat comes home in disgrace. Disgusted with life, he becomes a hermit. Years later across the road from the old shack where Pat lives, a large mansion is built. Jim and his wife move into this home. One evening a tramp appears along the roadway and meets Pat, who recognizes him as his old friend Joe, who had betrayed him in the war. Pat forgives and forgets and takes him into his home. Meanwhile Betty is taken very ill and while her husband is away, a servant comes over to the shack and asks help. Pat and Joe go to the mansion, where Betty recognizes them, just before she dies.

The story ends with Jim, lonely in the big mansion, going across the shack where Pat and Joe are playing checkers. The three friends are reunited as the scene fades.

BIG "U."

PUTTING ONE OVER (April 6).—The story opens with "Bad Louis," the gunman, standing over the dead body of Dave Herton, a theatrical manager, whom he has just shot. Hanson from police headquarters and several policemen hear the shot and hurry to the scene. Louis stands motionless and two gunmen, Pete and Red, rush past and take his gun. When Hanson comes up he finds Louis but no gun. They find no trace of the gun and are forced to let Louis go. Hanson sends a man to trail him. Discovering Herton's identity, trails him also. Pete and Red return to the room, leave Louis' gun and exit. They look furtively at the baby. Louis, realizing he is shadowed, doubles his tracks and loses his trailer, but Hanson picks him up and follows him to the tenement room which he enters by the fire escape.

Louis returning finds his gun, hidden by Red and Pete. As he stands looking at it, Hanson enters and jumps him. The two struggle and Hanson puts the handcuffs on him. He turns and sees the baby lying on the bed and asks Louis whose it is. Louis smiles and says, "that's Mamie's kid, she was my wife." Hanson asks about it and Louis starts to tell. The scene changes—once more he and Mamie are young sweethearts. Louis takes her to an East Side racket. The manager of the dance hall cabaret sees her and offers her a position. With Louis' consent, she takes it. While she is singing and dancing, Dave Herton sees her and realizes her possibilities. A year later she is the hit of New York, but in spite of that she does not forget Louis.

For one year he loses sight of her. One day he meets her on the street, wan and fatigued. He questions her and takes her home. She tells him she is about to become a mother and the father is Dave Herton, who discharged her. Louis' first thought is to kill Herton, but Mamie stops him. Louis marries her and gives the child a father. When the baby was born, Mamie died and left the child in Louis' care. The man's story ends and Hanson, overcome says he will let him go. He undoes the handcuffs and starts to leave. The police enter with Red and Pete. Louis sees them and makes a break for the window, but they stop him. The police say Red and Pete have confessed that Louis killed Herton and robbed him. Hanson turns on Louis, who laughs, because he fooled the Inspector. Red's wife enters at that moment and snatches up her child. Hanson rushes Louis angrily off to jail.

THE HEART BREAKER (Two Parts—April 8).—At the opening of the Bleeding Heart Seminary, Phylis, a natural hoyden, is brought before the Amazonian matron, Mrs. Saxe, by her spinster aunt, who tells the matron that Phylis is almost incorrigible and needs correction. Phylis confides in the other school girls and learns that they are all inclined to be frolicsome if given the chance. She is chosen at once as their leader. The head professor of the Bleeding Heart Seminary, Silas Sniffles, and Mrs. Saxe are smitten on each other.

Now Phylis meets Sniffles for the first time and strange to say, her vivaciousness and smile makes the old codger's heart flutter strangely.

He compliments her quite highly upon her class work. That night Phylis, who has stolen the master key from Mrs. Saxe's desk, at a late hour unlocks all the doors to the girls' room and the crowd silently steal to the dormitory pantry and thence to Phylis' room, where they proceed to have a jolly feed. Finally they hear the matron coming. Quick as a flash, the evidence is swept together and the girls hide under the bed. Phyllis feigns sleep. The irate matron, having heard suspicious sounds, enters Phylis' room, but is surprised to find everything quiet and Phylis fast asleep.

Next morning, Tilly Francis, a book worm and teacher's pet, hears whispers of the night's frolic and tattles to Mrs. Saxe who locks all of the offenders in their rooms. Sniffles misses Phylis from the class and inquires of Mrs. Saxe who recites to him the terrible actions of the young hoyden, but this only increases the old codger's heart palpitation and he suggests a milder punishment, which causes an argument and quarrel. Sniffles thinks it a good chance to break off his attentions to Mrs. Saxe. Mrs. Saxe relents at this turn of affairs and releases the culprits.

That day in class Sniffles discovers that Phylis is reading Robert W. Chamber's "The Common Law," behind her regular manual of instruction and takes it away from her, ordering her to remain after class. After the pupils are dismissed, Sniffles alone with Phylis, urges her to be good. Phylis pats him on the head and entices him with girlish fervor which drives the old codger nearly wild. Just as he tries to kiss her the door opens and in steps Mrs. Saxe. Noting the expression of innocence that Phylis adopts, she suspects Sniffles of improper conduct. Ordering Sniffles to go, Mrs. Saxe turns upon Sniffles and gives him a terrible tongue lashing. Once out of Mrs. Saxe's sight, Phylis calls the girls together and they plan revenge upon Tilly Francis. That night they stealthily break into her room and proceed to paint her face and sprinkle her with cold water. Then before the matron appears all scurry to their rooms and the matron, descending upon poor Tilly, hears her story but cannot believe it since all the doors to the girls' rooms are locked She thinks the girl is mentally unbalanced and urges her to give up school for a while.

The following day Phylis, who is in Sniffles' class, pulls up her dress, exposing her knee. This gets the old teacher so excited that the session ends in a furore. On the pretext of giving Phylis another "talking to" Sniffles keeps her in after the school hour. Phylis, however, has apprised the other girls of the teacher's action and tells them to have the matron appear at the psychological moment—when she is showing Sniffles a hole in her stocking a little above the ankle. The teacher expresses sorrow and offers to buy a pair of silk hose, if she will keep quiet. The girls having been instructed by Phylis, tell Mrs. Saxe of the scandalous proceeding. Being in love with Sniffles she is enraged to think that a young snip can distract his attentions from her. The only thing to do is to have her taken from the seminary, so a letter is penned to the spinster aunt telling her that nothing can be done with Phylis. That afternoon Sniffles makes his way cautiously to the village store where he purchases a pair of silk hose for Phylis.

Phylis' aunt arrives and storms into the seminary to learn of her niece's conduct. Mrs. Saxe determines to show the aunt for herself, so a close watch is kept upon Phyllis and Sniffles who appears to be elated over something. After class Phylis is told to remain and excited Mrs. Saxe and the aunt watch from without to see Sniffles present Phylis with a present. They are shocked still more when Phylis throws a kiss at him and darts out of the room.

Phylis is quickly apprehended by Mrs. Saxe and led into the office where before her aunt, the matron unwraps the package, revealing the silk hosiery. The unoffending Sniffles faces the awful accusation and then wilts weakly. However, Sniffles has support for when auntie accuses the worthy scholar for trying to ruin the morals of her niece, Mrs. Saxe defends him hotly and declares that it was quite the reverse; that Phylis was undermining the great man's principles. A hat argument takes place and a general free-for-all in which auntie and Phylis escape. Auntie solemnly promises Phylis with tears in her eyes that she will never again try to send her to school to discipline her and Phylis winks slyly. Back in the seminary, poor Sniffles, his budding romance ruined, is forced to accept the amorous embraces of Mrs. Saxe, for upon her depends his position.

THE CYCLE OF HATRED (Two Parts—April 6).—Olive Tracy, a rich young, and beautiful widow, has a little daughter, Helen, who is very fond of their neighbor, Persis King, a lovable and charming young girl, who is a writer. Mrs. Tracy does not care for the young writer, and dislikes very much her little daughter's love for the young girl. Dr. Morrison, a young physician, is very much in love with Persis King, and this is another reason why Mrs. Tracy does not like the young girl.

Olive Tracy declares she is deeply in love with the young physician, and employs every little trick and coquetry to try and win him. He, in turn, has centered all his time and attention upon the lovely Persis; and when they announce their engagement, Mrs. Tracy vows vengeance. She pretends to be sick one day, and phones for Dr. Morrison, who gives her a prescription and tells her "to be careful how she uses it, as it is a deadly poison." This gives the widow an idea. She buys a bouquet of flowers and saturates them with the poison liquid, and has flowers sent to Persis's apartment. Little Helen, the widow's daughter, has gone over to Persis's apartment and when the flowers arrive she is the first one to smell them. While Persis is writing a note of thanks to Dr. Morrison, whom she believes has sent the beautiful roses (Mrs. Tracy having attached one of the physician's cards to the bouquet) little Helen becomes unconscious from the poison and falls back in the arm chair with the roses in her little arms.

Persis becomes alarmed and summons the maid and Helen's mother. Realizing what she has done, the widow cries out in anguish, and confesses. Persis phones for Dr. Morrison, who comes and restores Helen to health. Mrs. Tracy is very glad and penitent. She thanks the young people gladly and congratulates them upon their engagement.

A DOUBLE EXPOSURE (April 11).—Mrs. King receives an invitation from Mrs. Carter, an old schoolmate whom she hasn't seen for many years, to visit her and help take care of a house party she is giving in honor of her son, Jack, who is just home from college. She is unable to go, and her daughter, Hazel, who has never seen either Mrs. Carter or Jack, in a spirit of fun, decides to make up as her mother and go.

Finding that a gray wig is no inducement for a young man, she discards it at various times and gets herself into several ludicrous situations. She falls in love with Jack and Cupid finally wins.

RELIANCE.

THE JEWELLED DAGGER OF FATE (March 29).—Larry Fiske loves Marion Giles, daughter of old Martin Giles, who keeps the curiosity shop where Larry is employed. She is betrothed by her father, however, to Travers, a rich curio-hunter, who, in frequenting the shop, has become enamoured of her beauty. A poor Italian girl, sorely in need of money to clothe herself and feed her child, sells Martin Giles an antique dagger with a jewelled hilt. The bargain made, she is taken suddenly ill in the shop and Marion helps her back to the rooms behind the store where she and her father live. Larry has seen Marion greatly admiring the dagger and he buys it for her for a wedding present. He puts it on the table in the little parlor. Travers comes in, looking for his fiancee, and enters the parlor. Larry hears him utter a loud cry, and hurrying within, he finds the man gazing, horror-struck, upon the jewelled dagger. Remorse and fear cause him to confess to Larry the story of how he had wronged a girl in Italy who, on his attempting to leave her, had threatened his life, with this very dagger. Behind the curtains Marion has heard the confession. She and old Martin bring the repentant and terrified Travers to the bedside of the sick Italian girl and there exact from him a promise that he will marry her. The jewelled dagger of fate completes its mission by bringing together the hearts of Larry and Marion.

THE PRIMITIVE SPIRIT (March 31).—Although physically strong, Tom Fuller reflects the meekness of his mother, who has carefully sheltered him from contact with the world. He is taught that physical prowess is brutal. His father, a fighting Westerner, who has made a million in the mines, suffers an injury while defending his property, from which he later dies. Mrs. Fuller, never in accord with the rough life of the western mining camp, moves to the city with her son. The death of his father is constantly cited to the boy as a result of "roughness."

Later, Tom marries Mildred Duncan, who consents to the marriage for financial reasons, urged on by her parents. She has little respect and no love for her husband, because of his meekness and domination by his mother. She later becomes interested in Hugh Gates, whom she believes exemplifies her ideal. Gates improves his opportunities. Tom, learning of the affair, is about to interfere in a physical manner, when prevented by his mother, who urges that the better way would be to remove Mildred from the environment which permits contact with Gates. She suggests the seashore. Mildred, under protest, agrees, Tom, unknown to his mother, decides in favor of the forests as compared with the artificiality of society resorts. Gates, learning of their whereabouts, follows.

At their mountain camp, Mildred is petulant and desires to return to the city, but his father's spirit is strong within him and Tom heeds the call of the wild. The out-door life and lack of his mother domination, makes a man of him. During his absence Gates prevails upon Mildred to return to the city. Returning as they are about to leave, Tom orders Mildred to remain. She refuses. Gates sneeringly pushes Tom aside. Tom answers with a blow. They fight and Gates is severely whipped. Mildred, to whose wish Tom had heretofore always bowed, feels the iron grip without its velvet glove. She is ordered roughly into the canoe and Tom paddles away with her. That night, as he sits by their campfire, a completely subdued Mildred slips from her blankets and puts her hand in his in token of submission.

SYMPATHY SAL (Two Parts—April 3).—Charley Latimer from the East wins the affections of Sympathy Sal, who keeps the eating house at the station, and is besieged by admirers. They plan to be married secretly by the circuit minister. Seth Shelby, who also loves Sal, determines to stop the wedding. He sends word to Latimer's father that his son is about to marry an eating house girl, and the proud old gentleman starts West by the next train. Nearing his destination he is taken ill, arriving at the station in an almost unconscious condition. He is put into a wagon and the driver told to take him to the nearest doctor. On the way the driver meets an acquaintance, who tells him that his passenger has smallpox. The two men unhitch the horse and escape, leaving Latimer, Sr., in the cart by the roadside. Just then Sal comes along on horseback on her way to be married. Though the fleeing men warn her, she cannot leave the helpless stranger. She gets him into a deserted shack nearby, where she is found by Latimer, Jr., who, seeing her with a strange man—for she and his father have their backs turned—shoots at his rival. He hits Sal. Charley Latimer nurses them both back to health. And Latimer, Sr., is entirely converted to his son's choice of a wife.

MAJESTIC.

THE OLD CHEMIST (Two Parts—March 28).—George Barker, a crabbed old chemist, has for his assistant Frank Barker, his nephew, who is in love with Leilla Wilson, the daughter of fairly well-to-do parents. Frank has ideas which he thinks, if carried out, would cause some startling discoveries. His uncle will not listen to Frank.

Frank writes to a friend in the West, telling him his troubles, but the letter is never mailed, owing to the boy's failure to find a stamp. One morning, after a bitter quarrel between uncle and nephew, the old man discharges Frank, telling him to look elsewhere for a home. Frank, intending to go West, calls on Leilla to bid her goodbye.

The old chemist goes to work on an experiment in his laboratory. Having occasion to use a few grains of a very dangerous drug, and, having no means at hand to open the can which contains it, he goes to the pantry and uses the cook's can opener. He unknowingly spills some of the drug on the table. A short time later he is called to lunch by the servant, but, not being satisfied with what she has prepared, he goes to the pantry and makes himself a sandwich and carries away some of the poison on the bread.

Frank returns to the house and starts to pack up. Among his belongings are some chemist's tools. The old man eats a bite or two of the poisoned sandwich. The poison acts almost immediately, and, rising to his feet, he throws the sandwich from him, and, staggering into the library, falls to the floor. In his fall the old man strikes his head against a piece of furniture, causing an oval shaped bruise on the forehead. Frank is in the act of packing a mortar and pestle, when he hears the sound of the falling body. Still grasping the pestle, he hurries to the library, where he finds his uncle dead. The old servant enters and is horrified to find Frank bending over the body of his uncle.

The doctor who is called in grows suspicious and causes a detective to be put on the case. The headquarters man finds the incriminating letter written by Frank, and with close questioning he gets the old negro servant's story of the quarrel and also the situation when she entered the library. Coupling this evidence with the fact that the pestle fits the shape of the bruise on the dead man's forehead, Frank is speedily indicted for the murder of his uncle. Leilla, be-

SOMETHING IS WRONG!

Mere say so and promises do not guarantee results but if you bind the reliable manufacturer to a written guarantee —and the reliable manufacturer will gladly give you a written guarantee for the reason he knows his goods, he knows they will produce satisfactory results, he knows they are the best—this guarantee becomes a contract which is a protection, not only to the producer, but to you, the consumer, as well.

Would you build a theatre without a contract with the builders, a contract that would guarantee your contractor to produce results desired? Most emphatically No!

A guarantee given by a reliable manufacturer is a protection to you, it safeguards your interests. Insist on a guarantee. The reliable manufacturer will gladly give you one.

The United States Government is thoroughly reliable. If Mr. Rasor had been protected by a guarantee backed by a reliable Company, and had the screen produced results desired, we would not have read the above sad letter, which tells the "truth in a nutshell."

lieving that Frank is innocent, hires a scientific detective named Kemp to unravel the mystery. A few days before the day set for the trial, Kemp calls at the jail, where he finds Frank and his lawyer in consultation. Putting an officer in charge of Frank, he bids him accompany him to the district attorney's office.

Kemp tells the district attorney of the investigation he has made, how he discovered the partly eaten sandwich containing the poison, the can which was opened with a can opener on the pantry table, where several particles of the drug still remained among the bread crumbs. His last card is the result of an analysis of the contents of the victim's stomach, which disclosed the fact that the chemist was not murdered, but died from the effect of the poison left by his own carelessness on the table. Frank's innocence is proven, even to the satisfaction of the district attorney, and, to save the expense of a needless trial, he agrees to have the indictment returned. Leilla's parents realize that they have misjudged Frank and after his release they agree to their marriage.

AN IMAGE OF THE PAST (March 30).—Jessie Curtis elopes with Jack Dexter. Her wealthy father, in a fury, disinherits her. He repulses all his daughter's attempts at reconciliation, and ten years pass. Jack has been very ill, the family is penniless, and the three children, dressing themselves as a gypsy, an Indian and a sailor, with masks on their faces, go out to sing in the street. In this fashion they wander under the windows of their grandfather's house. The old man is having one of his almost unendurably lonely hours, filled with regretful dreams of Jessie. When he hears the children singing, he calls them in, listens to their story and promises that he will give them money for their sick father. Suddenly one of the youngsters rushed across the room to a portrait of Jessie painted by Dexter at her father's order from a photograph of her when she was seven years old.. "Why is my sister's picture in your house" the small boy asks the old man, and snatches off the mask which covers little Jessie's face. The grandfather learns the truth. He returns with the children to the rescue of his daughter and her husband.

THE ARTIST'S WIFE (April 2).—Adare, an artist, has a lovely model, Jean, with whom he is in love. One day he is called in to paint the portrait of a society girl with whom he becomes infatuated and to whom he finally becomes engaged. The model grieves and Adare's friend, George, tries to dissuade him from marrying the rich girl and deserting his model sweetheart, but Adare will not listen.

A suitor for the hand of the society girl is infuriated at being put aside for another and goes to the artist's studio, and, wildly jealous, fires at the artist. But the little model, in hiding, gets between him and the shot and is wounded in the hip. The accident leaves her lame for life and the artist marries her instead of the society girl and remains a devoted attendant on his wife, who is forced to spend most of her time in a wheel chair.

DOCTOR JIM (Two Parts April 4). Dr. Jim Hilton gets involved with Dave Farley, the reckless son of Sheriff Farley, in a gun fight with Steve Boyle. Steve is shot, and Dr. Jim helps Dave get away with him to the hills. There is much conjecture in the town as to which man shot Boyle. Mary, the sheriff's daughter, helps Dr. Jim, with whom she is in love, to leave the vicinity. Later, her father, following the supposed murderer into the wilderness, uses Mary as a bait to catch Dr. Jim, by spreading the report that she is very ill at his camp. The girl worries so for the young doctor's safety that she actually develops a high fever, and her father, frightened for her safety goes out in earnest to hunt a physician. When he returns he finds Dr. Jim caring for Mary. Under the circumstances the sheriff shields the doctor from the vigilance committee. The next day he goes with him to his camp where they find Dave caring for Boyle, who is far from being a dead man.

THE LITTLE MOTHER (April 6).—Mr. and Mrs. Delmar, with their little daughter Mamie, live very happy, although in humble circumstances. The new baby arrives, but Mrs. Delmar dies in giving it birth. Mamie becomes a little mother to the baby. She does the housework and cooks her father's meals. Her father meets with an accident and is killed. Mamie and her baby brother are placed in the charge of the Orphans' Home.

A year passes and Mamie and her baby brother are still at the Orphans' Home. Mr. and Mrs. Calvert, well-to-do people, have lost their little baby by death. They adopt a child from the home, and unfortunately (as Mamie thinks) their choice falls on Mamie's brother. He is taken away in a fine automobile, and poor little Mamie's heart is broken.

Going to the matron's room, Mamie discovers the address of the Calvert's and follows on foot, steals the baby in its baby carriage during the absence of the servant. The police are asked to search for the child. Mamie and the child are found asleep under a tree and taken to the station house where Mr. and Mrs. Calvert are waiting. They are overjoyed at the recovery, and, hearing poor little Mamie's story, conclude their hearts are big enough for two children.

BEAUTY.

THE ONCE OVER (April 6).—Tom Brown's favorite expresion is "the once over." He suggests to his room mate, Bob, that they go down town and give the girls "the once over." Bob is head over heels in love with a girl that Tom has never seen and refuses to go, saying that she would not flirt and that he is going to be true to her and besides he has a date with her for two o'clock. Tom goes down town alone and meets a girl named Nellie. She tells him she has a date with an old "stick in the mud," and asks him to go along and help her get rid of him. The "stick in the mud" turns out to be Bob. Tom is amused and tells Bob to give them the "once over" and beat it. Bob is broken up, tells Nellie he is going to commit suicide and starts away.

Nellie and Tom follow Bob through a park. Bob sees them and pretends to be about to jump into the lake. Tom and Nellie realize that Bob is bluffing and decide upon a plan. They push him into the lake and tell a policeman he is trying to commit suicide. The policeman locks Bob up. Tom and Nellie pass by the jail, see Bob looking through a grated window and inform him they have come down to give him "the once over." Tom and Nellie then decide on a hasty marriage. Tom leaves a note for Bob stating that he and Nellie are going to be married and inviting Bob to call and give them the "once over." After the wedding, Nellie takes Tom to her home, where Tom finds four small babies. Nellie explains that she forgot to tell him that she had been married before and had four children by her first husband. Tom nearly faints.

Meanwhile Bob is released from jail, finds Tom's note and decides on revenge. He gets a revolver and goes to find Tom. Arriving at the house he looks through a window and sees Tom with the four babies on his lap. Bob realizes that he has had a lucky escape. He puts the revolver back into his pocket, enters the house and announces that he has come to give Tom and the babies the "once over."

AMERICAN.

THE TOUCH OF LOVE (April 7).—Martha has constituted herself the camp mother, comforting and helping all the men and women in the camp impartially. She has a deeper feeling for Jim. Jim returns from a lucky strike the same day on which Fannie reaches camp. He sees Fannie at the dance hall and "falls" for her unconditionally and she is drawn to Jim. Martha hears of Fannie's conquest and seeks to save Jim from an entanglement with her, believing that she is unworthy of him. Jim tells her that Fannie would be better if someone really loved her.

Jim and Fannie go for a ride together. Fannie's horse runs away and she is thrown and injured. Jim takes her to Martha, who at first is tempted to let her die and so save Jim, but her loving kindness conquers and she nurses Fannie back to health. When Fannie regains consciousness, she cries out in fear that her mother and child, whom she has been supporting will have no one to care for them. Martha hears the story of Fannie's unselfish effort to take care of her loved ones and learns the girl's true, loving nature, which changes Martha's attitude. She asks Jim if he is sure Fannie can make him happy; he assures Martha of his confidence in Fannie. Martha renounces her love for Jim and helps him and Fannie get away where they can be happy.

THE PROBLEM (April 9).—Fred Rees, an estimable young man of moderate wealth, proposes to and is accepted by Edith Shanlon, providing he can secure her mother's consent. Her mother informs Rees that she has sacrificed much to give her daughter an education and social position and that she should at least make a wealthy marriage in payment. After Rees' departure, Mrs. Shanlon, with her daughter's happiness foremost in her thoughts, falls into a dose and in a dream sees her daughter married to a wealthy man, Howard Grey. In the dream it is not long before Grey tires of his wife and spends most of his time with an affinity Leona.

Edith overhears him making an appointment to dine with Leona and persuades her mother to accompany her to the cafe. There they overhear Grey boasting that his wife was bought and paid for like the wine they are drinking, but the wine was the better purchase. Mrs. Shanlon realizes that the marriage has not been a success. Grey returns to his home drunk and attempts to embrace his wife, who shoots him. Awakening with a start, Mrs. Shanlon, is grateful that she has only been dreaming and when, at the sugestion of Edith's grandfather, she and her lover return to ask her mother to reconsider her former decision, the enlightened mother is only too willing to give her consent.

ROYAL.

A CORNER IN BABIES (April 3).—Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Brown each have twins. They meet one evening to prepare a paper for their Mothers' Club, and their husbands also convene to play cards in the opposite apartment. Two burglars enter the house. The women are warned by the cries of the twins. Rushing to the rescue, they are held up by the thieves, who then escape across the way over an ironing board, carrying the babies with them. They stuff the infants into the kitchen cupboard, but their cries penetrate to their fathers, who, in their turn, are held up by the crooks. The women follow their children over the ironing board. Policemen are called to the rescue by the yells of the twins. The burglars are arrested, and twins, fathers and mothers are reunited.

SHORTY AMONG THE CANNIBALS (Two parts—March 31.)—Shorty, after reading "Robinson Crusoe" falls asleep and dreams of hair-raising adventures on a cannibal isle. He is about to meet his fate in the boiling pot and he served up for the cannibal king's supper, when he wakes—to find the underbrush around him on fire from a lighted cigarette he has dropped, and the cowboys rushing to his rescue with buckets of water.

MOLLY OF THE MOUNTAINS (Two Parts—April 7).—John Harlow, a railroad superintendent, is making a new cut in the Kentucky mountains. He comes in contact with Molly, the daughter of Jed Simms, a moonshiner. Molly falls in love with Harlow. He is already married, but is desirous of amusing himself with the innocent mountain girl. One day while making a survey, he comes to the secret still of Jed Simms, and only saves his life by convincing Simms that he is the engineer in charge of the railroad work and not a revenue officer. Simms allows him to depart.

Shortly afterward the girl, Molly, discovers that her intimacy with Harlow has been followed by results which make an immediate marriage necessary if she is to save her good name. Harlow, of course, cannot marry her and in order to avoid the rage of Jed Simms reveals his hiding place to the revenue officers. After an exciting scene, Simms escapes and takes refuge in the cabin of Harlow by accident. Harlow returns and is met by the revenue officers who make a search of his cabin but fail to discover Simms, who is in the chimney.

At this juncture Molly enters to present a final plea for marriage. Harlow treats her with brutal cynicism. Her father in the chimney overhears this, comes out and is only prevented from taking Harlow's life by the importunities of his daughter. Harlow makes a hurried exit from the cabin, only to be killed by the revenue officers who have seen Molly enter, they mistaking Harlow for Simms. Simms and his daughter escape and the old moonshiner makes for cover as the officers remove the lifeless form of John Harlow.

DOMINO.

THE FAKIR (Two Parts—April 1).—Dr. Romaldo is a typical American fakir. He has a small troupe and is touring the country giving a musical entertainment and featuring his hypnotic marvel Mlle. Florine. The girl has been forced by circumstances to accept a position with the doctor. He exerts his evil influence over her and has her mentality completely in his power. Florine runs away from him. She loses her way in the woods and falls asleep by a pool. At daybreak a young society man, Thos. Waldron, returning home from a party, finds her asleep. He is touched by the girl's story, and takes her home to his mother who adopts her. Later he marries her and we see her mingling in the best society.

Dr. Romaldo deprived of his chief attraction, Florine, dons the garb of an East Indian Yogi and becomes a fad in society by reason of his bogus mysticism. He has disguised himself with whiskers and darkened his skin. He meets Florine at a society event and recognized her. She does not recognize him, however, but his eyes have a strange fascination for her although she cannot recall where she has seen them. Romaldo learns of her address and that she married a wealthy man. He desires to test his former power over her, and one night goes under her bedroom window. Sititng on a bench he mentally calls her to his presence and forces her to rob the family safe of its money and valuables. The butler sees his shadow in the garden, telephones his master who is at his club, and also the police. The police arrive first and see Florine passing the loot out to Romaldo. Romaldo is shot by the chief of police and Waldron is informed that Romaldo has a confederate in the house and that the chief of police can identify her. He identifies Florine as the accomplice of Romaldo. Tom Waldron realizes that Florine has committed this act under the hypnotic spell of Romaldo. He explains to the police and consoles the girl with the information that Romaldo is dead and henceforth he can never exert his evil influence over her again.

HIS OWN ACCUSER (Ideal—Two Parts—March 29).—Heavily in debt and harassed by usurers, the only avenue open to Jean De Marsac, an adventurer, to recoup his finances is to marry Lucienne De Lembel, the daughter of a rich banker, who is in love with Claude Laurent, an ambitious young chemist. The banker gives a reception in his luxurious home at which Claude timidly asks for Lucienne's hand, basing his request on his new but promising successes. Not wishing to disappoint his daughter, the banker gives the young chemist one year to overcome his poverty. Of lowly extraction and having known days of comparative poverty, the banker would be happy to see his daughter climb the social ladder and gain entrance to aristocratic circles through a union with de Marsac, whose elegance and distinguished manner flatters his parvenu sense.

Claude Laurent and de Marsac meet at the office of Romeuf, the usurer. They have both come for the same purpose; to obtain a loan to keep them afloat for a while longer. The one wishes to continue his scientific researches to find in his mortar the marvelous formula which will bring him a fortune and happiness; the other wishes to escape the creditors who are swooping down on him on all sides until he shall be rescued by the wealthy marriage to which he aspires. Marsac learns that the next day his rival is to come to the usurer for his answer. Pushed to the wall the nobleman will not hesitate to become a criminal in order to accomplish his purpose. The next day the adventurer awaits his victim. Taking advantage of a moment when Claude is occupied with a moving picture on the screen of the cafe where they are sitting, Marsac adroitly gets his revolver from him. They both take up their way together. They get to the usurer's where a strange and mysterious drama takes place, an occurrence which finds its way into the newspapers and creates quite a sensation. Under the influence of a narcotic, Claude becomes insensible in the office of Romeuf. While the usurer is trying to revive the young man, Marsac, hidden behind a drapery, treacherously fires on the old man who falls. Everything accuses the young man—the bank notes were stolen on the old man's refusal to finance him, the weapon belongs to Claude, there is no possible doubt, and, notwithstanding his stout denials, the innocent young man is dragged off by the officers amid the menacing cries of the crowd. Lucienne Lembell, with despairing heart, tries to clear the mystery which surrounds him. Accompanied by De Marsac, she witnesses a picture show in which is seen the episode in the pawnshop. De Marsac, finding his treachery thus disclosed, tries to escape but lands in jail. Claude returns to Lucienne, whose admirable devotion and unshakable faith are at last rewarded, for the banker has abandoned forever his ambitions and decides that his daughter shall marry the brave man she loves.

THE RAIN OF DEATH (Two Parts—Empress—March 31).—Zembert, an international spy, is known as "101." She is commissioned to obtain secret information regarding a certain arsenal. Her hostess, Mrs. Trevor, gives a ball in her honor, and Zembert falls desperately in love with Captain Dent and her feelings are not unrequited. This is not the situation desired by her Government and number "82" is sent to watch her. The commanding officer of the arsenal is called to Washington. Captain Dent, officer next in rank, takes command of the Government property. Number "82" forces Zembert, under pain of heavy penalty to fulfill her mission. In fear of the Government she drugs Captain Dent and number "82" steals the key of the arsenal and rushes there to give the signal to a dirigible balloon, waiting for this moment.

Zembert, in a frenzy of remorse, finally succeeds in arousing her lover and confesses her deception. Captain Dent rushes to the arsenal in time to see "82" go up the stairs leading to the tower and locks him in; but he is too late to prevent the destruction of the Government property. There is a fight in mid-air between two dirigibles. Captain Dent, unable to stop the damage, watches the destruction of the property entrusted to his care. Zembert also watches the result of her scheming. Tearing up her government papers, she relinquishes her place in the spy system.

A WOMAN'S WAY (Luna April 1).—On a sunny Saturday afternoon one autumn two clerks, Brown and Jones, decide to take advantage of the weather and the half-holiday by fishing. Mrs. Jones is cleaning house and catches cold. She considers it time to close up the Jones' store, but experiences no little difficulty in her efforts, so awaits her husband's home coming. Jones, seeing the disorder of the house, expects to be given a warm welcome and proceeds to avoid such a catastrophe by slipping up the back stairs to his room. He encounters his wife and is compelled to lend a hand. Jones makes a mess of things and is chased from the house and meets Brown. They are enjoying themselves immensely until the boat springs a leak. While bailing out the water they are thrown into the river. They are a distressed looking pair as they go shivering home. At his door Jones learns that he has lost his key; but the door is usually unlocked. Nevertheless, he does not gain entrance. He looks in the window and sees Mrs. Jones contentedly reading before a comfortably looking fire; but she will not heed his summons, so he decides to spend the night with Brown. On the way out he collides with a delapidated looking tramp and does not chase him, as he thinks a little scare will be good for his wife. The tramp climbs through the bedroom window and Mrs. Jones, hearing him, is prepared to meet her husband, but receives a severe shock. After going but a short distance, Jones feels sorry for his wife and climbs in the window. He tussles with the tramp while Mrs. Jones calls an officer. Jones is rewarded by having his rumpled feelings smoothed by his wife's loving hands before a glowing fire.

CROSSED WIRES (Empress—April 2).—A beautiful young telephone operator, in a spirit of mischief, crosses the wires and causes interesting complications. A cabman's horse refuses to move, so he telephones to a veterinary. An old man's wife has an attack of "Lazitus," so he telephones to medical doctor. A chauffeur has trouble with his car, so he phones to the garage. A business man needs a stenographer, so he telephones the employment office. A chef needs some poultry, so he phones the poultry dealer. Then the pretty little operator cuts in and crosses the wires. The cabman goes into a rage when he is told to "give her some chicken broth." The old man is told to "look at her feet and see how her shoes are." The chauffeur is told to "feel her pulse and give her a headache powder." The business man is told he will "get a nice young spring chicken," while the chef hears too many conversations. Before too much damage is done, the manager of the telephone office appears in the operator's room and all wires are speedily adjusted.

VICTIMS OF SATAN (Regent—Two Parts—April 3).—The scion of a wealthy family, John Brestle, who is an inveterate gambler, finds himself in a disagreeable position, due to lack of funds. His father, Rev. H. Brestle, a charitable old gentleman, deposits an envelope containing money for a destitute family in his desk. This act is witnessed by the son, who, in a moment of weakness, steals the money and starts for the gambling den.

On the way he meets his sweetheart, Edna Chester, driving in her car and accompanies her for a short distance. Alighting from the machine, he drops a letter which contains the money and a tip on the races, which the girl finds. With the aid of a friend, she places a bet on the horse mentioned in the letter and fortunately this horse comes in first. Edna gives back the money to John, entreating him to return it and mend his ways. He proceeds to do so, thinking to get the money back to its place before it is missed; but arrives home just as father accuses the colored butler of the theft. He battles with his conscience and finally confesses all to his father.

Although firm in his effort to travel the narrow path, John cannot resist visiting the gambling den just once more. Unfortunately this once happened on a day when the place is raided. The young man is recognized by Edna's father, who is heading the raid, and is given a chance to escape. Later, a released convict seeks vengeance upon the girl's father, who had sent him to prison and a hideous crime is averted only by the quick action of the young man who arrives at the conclusion that the Road of Iniquity is rough. His many good qualities cause Edna to forget his past weakness and happiness prevails.

A MAN OF THE HILLS (Premier—April 4).—Frederick Church is a clerk in the employ of an express company and is secretly married to the manager's daughter. While the young folks are trying to make up their minds to tell their secret, a shortage is discovered in the manager's cash. The amount is $2,000, and the visiting inspector takes the manager's protestations of innocence with the proverbial grain of salt. Exposure and prosecution is hanging over the old man's head, when Fred determines to sacrifice himself to save the father of the woman he loves. He establishes his guilt by a precipitate flight and finally gains the comparative safety of a Nevada gold field.

After months of weary toil, Fred strikes a rich lead and finds himself a wealthy man, not only in gold, for he receives word that his wife had given birth to a boy. This message makes him oblivious of his own peril and soon he is speeding back to the old home. His arrival is coincident with a return visit from the inspector; the latter sees a small boy emerging from beneath the foundation of the building grasping a baseball which he has recovered, and also a package of bills which the youngster has discovered beneath the building. The eye of the inspector is quick to recognize the missing money, and he enters the office to find Fred and Lillian in each others arms with grandpa fondling the baby. The missing money is restored and its theft placed to the charge of the real thief, the dog of a customer, who, seeing the package of bills on the floor where they had fallen from the safe, carried them to a hiding place beneath the office.

THE DANCING BEETLE (World Comedy Stars Corp.).—Professor Woodby Bugg collects rare moths, beetles and other insects. A friend in Egypt captures a specimen called "The Dancing Beetle" and presents it to the professor. The insect's bite is painful, and the person bitten is compelled to dance against his will. The professor cherishes the beetle, but a careless housemaid allows it to escape.

Mrs. Montgomery, a wealthy woman, has received from abroad a pair of silk stockings upon which are embroidered gold beetles. The professor sees the lady's limb, but not her face, and catching a glimpse of the embroidered beetle on the lady's stocking while she has other ladies around her, causes some embarrassment to them and himself.

All the time the beetle is on his own back, and at last the insect bites him. He recovers the precious beetle but cannot stop dancing and when pursued by indignant husbands, and taken before a magistrate he still cannot stop, and finally has to be taken to the hospital.

THE ARRIVAL OF PERPETUA (Shubert—Five Parts).—Perpetua is a rich little girl, an orphan, with a guardian very much older than herself. This man is an absent-minded dreamer, unaware of his responsibility to Perpetua. The girl wants to live in her guardian's house, but instead goes to her father's half sister, Miss Majerdie, an angular spinster of 60, with a predilection for monkeys, parrots, cats and dogs.

Perpetua is not happy in this antique environment, so she runs away and forces herself upon her guardian, Thaddeus. He endures her for a time and finally ships her back to his sister's. The pretty girl is pursued by several suitors whose ardor cools when she is said to be not worth a cent. And here the moody guardian steps in. He has loved the girl but her wealth has prevented him from declaring his affection for her. But now that she is poor, he doesn't hesitate to offer himself.

HOUSEKEEPING UNDER COVER (World Comedy Stars Corp.).—The story relates how Mr. and Mrs. Gramercy and their young niece, Mabel, live in the fashionable Gorham Hotel. Their friends, Mrs. Richmand and her son, Frank, aged 25, also live in the hotel. They are wealthy, and the Gramercys are anxious to stand well with them, as Frank is in love with Mabel. The Gramercys, finding life in the hotel expensive, resolve to prepare breakfast in their apartment, so as to save two or three dollars a morning. They try to keep the idea secret, because it is against the rules of the hotel, and they do not wish the Richmans to know, fearing to appear cheap in their eyes.

They have trouble in concealing the cooking utensils from the curious maid, and explaining away the smell of food in their apartment Mr. Gramercy goes shopping and drops cereal on the floor of the hotel office. Mrs. Gramercy buys a tin of condensed cream and has holes punched in the top. As she carries it home, the cream leaks over her dress. She tells the Richmans it is face wash, but the cat eats it. They spoil the varnish on the table. They keep food on the window ledge. The birds steal the bread. The provisions fall from the ledge and smother pedestrians. Mrs. Gramercy's electric stove short circuits. The hotel takes fire and the fire department has to be called in. In the confusion, the Gramercys enter the Richman apartment and find them eating their own home-made breakfast. From Mrs. Richman they

HEALTH BY THE YEAR (World Comedy Stars Corp.).—Mackenzie Finch thinks he is sick of many complaints but he is only an invalid in imagination. He quarrels with the doctors who tell him this, so he drives them from his home, until there is only one physician left in the town to attend him. This is David Harrison, who is in love with Finch's daughter, Maud.

Harrison is poor, so Finch will not allow his daughter to become engaged to him. But being in fear of death he summons Harrison to attend him. The young doctor tells Finch he will die, but that he can save him on condition that he (Finch) will agree to his (Harrison's) engagement to Maud.

A contract is made: if at the end of the year Finch is alive, he agrees to pay Harrison $500 and let Maud marry him. If either breaks the agreement he forfeits $1,000. Near the end of the year Finch, being well, tries to break his contract. Harrison discovers this and forces Finch to adopt disagreeable remedies under the terms of the contract. Finch is made so wretched that he unconditionally surrenders and the lovers are united.

THE FIGHT (Lederer—Five Parts).—Jane sets out to suppress drink, gambling and dance-hall viciousness by way of urging her candidacy as mayor. Like all zealots and would-be social reformers, she finds commercialized vice a hard proposition to defeat. Her enemies try to blacken her charatcer; ruin her bank and take her life; but virtue triumphs and vice is vanquished. At the end of the photoplay Jane is elected mayor and united to the man of her choice.

THE DEVIL (New York Motion Picture Corp. —Five Parts).—Harry Lang, a celebrated young portrait painter, has as his model, Milli, his mistress. Society once connected his name with Isabella, but because of his poverty she married wealthy Alfred Zanden. To allay gossip, Zandan commissions Lang to paint his wife's bust portrait, and he takes Isabella to Lang's studio himself. The artist gets Milli out of the room and Zanden leaves. While Isabella is draping a shawl around her bosom, the devil appears. He explains he is Dr. Miller, who has saved Lang's life and fortune. Later at Isabella's reception, given to announce Lang's engagement to Elsa, her friend, the devil appears again. By a ruse he convinces Lang, Isabella will appear naked shortly save for her cloak. In a dramatic scene, Lang dares her to fling off the garment. She refuses, indignantly. When husband and guests enter she reveals herself, fully clad.

After their departure, Isabella starts to write Harry. The devil joins her, and she is persuaded by him to write Lang she will leave her husband and come to him the following day. The devil takes the letter, saying he will deliver it. Instigated by the devil, Milli tells Elsa of Harry's unfaithful nature, and they leave consoling each other. When Isabella appears she asks for her letter. The devil explains he forgot to deliver it and Lang and Isabella retire to the studio. The devil watches them love-making and bewails the paradise he can never regain till mortals who resist temptation place him there. We see him next in hell receiving Lang and Isabella, who beseech his mercy. "You had your chance," he tells them. "God alone can save you now."

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode 19—Reels 37 and 38—"The Prisoner in the House"). —After Zudora's thrilling rescue from the Island of Mystery we left Hunt and Baird pursuing the conspirators with the diamonds.

Down the bay sped the two motor boats, the one containing Tom Hunt and Jim Baird puffing noisily after the craft which held Gyp, Bill and Ike, the hirelings of the conspirators, who were rapidly outdistancing the pursuers. The Navesink highlands drew nearer, and there were times when the boat of the thieves would be completely lost in the maze of small craft. The sun had gone down, and with the deepening of the shadows upon the shore, it soon became impossible to distinguish the motorboat. Hunt was convinced that somewhere, on the small islands, near the Jersey shore, the conspirators were plotting to bury the treasure.

"You go back," said Jim Baird. "Storm may need you. I'll land here and lie low. There's sure to be something doing."

He was not mistaken. Lurking in the bushes near the shore, he soon saw lights moving a few yards inland. Then, to his astonishment, he distinctly recognized the voice of Bruce. The masculine head of the conspiracy had joined Mme. Du Val's mercenaries. A coup-d'etat was was about to be executed. Baird waited until he saw the men retreating to the other side of the island, doubtless to put off in their motor boat. He could not hear them take their departure, but getting impatient, he crept cautiously toward the shapeless mass around which a full half-hour previously, he had seen the lanterns and the dark shapes moving. He found himself on the threshold of a lonely hut. The moon lit the room. Baird dropped on his knees and peered through the broken flooring. Then he thrust in an arm.

The next moment he was flung backwards, a hand clamped over his mouth. Strong arms held him fast. And then they began to bind him. Dragged from the hut, he recognized in the moonlight Mme. Du Val's three desperadoes. Bruce was directing them.

They thrust Baird into the pilot house of an old boat on the shore, tied him in securely, and busied themselves about something under the wreck. The prisoner smelled kerosene and heard the scratching of a match. Then they scrambled down to the boat and pushed off, out into the bay.

Hunt had had his misgivings about leaving Baird on the island. As the conspirators were making their escape at the north end, he was noiselessly effecting a landing in the thicket, where he had left his companion. The first tongue of flame shooting up over the boat hulk led him to Baird's rescue. When they returned to the hut, however, they found that the conspirators had taken the bag of diamonds with them.

Mme. Du Val, meanwhile, has been eavesdropping. She heard John Storm read to Zudora a letter from Villier, to whom she, Mme. Du Val, had passed herself off as the defrauded heiress. Bold in her desperation, she invaded Storm's office in his absence, and not finding the letter there, took Captain Radcliffe to Mrs. Ramsay's. There they succeeded in getting Villier's document safely out of the house without their being discovered. Mme. Du Val was satisfied that Zudora again was in her power. Two days later Captain Radcliffe received from the hands of Bruce the rubber bag containing the diamonds.

PRETTY MRS. SMITH (Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co. in association with Bosworth, Inc.—March 29).—To escape the dreary formality of her home life, Drucilla marries a missionary, Ferdinand Smith, and goes with him to Africa. Here her life proves anything but happy. Denied the pleasures enjoyed by most girls of her age, she endures her husband's cold severity as long as possible and then leaves him, returning to America, where she visits her old school friend, Letitia Proudfoot.

It is while attending a reception with Letitia that she meets the poet, Forrest Smith, whose attentions are welcome after the austerity of the frigid Ferdinand. A friendship springs up between them which soon ripens into love. On the news that Ferdinand has been lost at sea, she and the poet marry.

Love in a cottage is hardly more satisfactory to pretty Drucilla than life among the heathen. Forrest is not a good provider, and when she threatens a suit for non-support, he disappears, leaving a note of farewell pinned to his coat, which is found at the edge of the sea. Free again, Drucilla for the first time really falls in love, this time with Frank Smith, a wealthy club man, athletically inclined. Frank turns out to possess a very jealous nature. Drucilla puts up with his doubts and suspicions patiently, but before long a climax arrives which precipitates a suit for divorce. Drucilla welcomes this conclusion to her unhappy domestic affairs with relief and sets off with Letitia in search of repose.

Now it happens that Ferdinand was not lost at sea; and Forrest did not commit suicide, and each develops a desire to be reunited with his wife. Forthwith they set out in search of her, and eventually meet at the same hotel. Here also comes Frank, who, too, has undergone a change of heart.

Thus instead of finding repose, as she hoped, Drucilla is plunged deeper than ever into marital tribulations. Her tender heart prompts her to make up with Frank. But no sooner is this done than Forrest puts in an appearance and makes his claim. Drucilla cries "I am a bigamist!" but belated Ferdinand, entering the scene, answers, "No, you are a trigamist." Which one of the husbands will Drucilla take, and how will she evade the law? This is the question. The clever authors have so arranged that this will be a guess until the very last—and then it ends just right for everybody.

THE MAN WHO VANISHED (Four Parts).—Happiness reigns in the home of James Dell until Lieutenant Scott, one of Mrs. Dell's old admirers, comes to visit them. Mr. Dell watches, with growing jealousy, a close and deep friendship forming between Lieutenant Scott and his wife. On studying a photograph of himself taken several years back, he notices the remarkable resemblance to his butler, Robert Jones, and decides on a ruse to watch his wife. The next morning Mr. Dell's empty purse is found on a stack of hay, and signs of a desperate struggle are visible. The premises, upon being searched, show no trace of Mr. Dell's whereabouts. The butler is found hiding in the wardrobe adjoining the boudoir of Mrs. Dell, and upon being searched, a watch and fob belonging to Mr. Dell are brought to light. He is immediately placed under arrest on suspicion of having murdered Mr. Dell, but he tries to convince them that he is Mr. Dell, disguised. However, he is not given an opportunity to prove his true identity, and is removed to a sanitarium, pending examination as to his sanity.

In a little town some distance from the home of Mr. Dell, the real butler, Robert Jones, who has been sent away by Mr. Dell, in order that his plans might be carried out the more safely, reads an article in a newspaper pertaining to this strange case, and he immediately sets out for the mansion. Meanwhile, in the sanitarium, Mr. Dell, weary after long weeks of imprison-

In the meantime Robert Jones, on his way from the railroad station, is recognized and arrested as the murderer. Under escort, he is on his way to the mansion, when, at a turn in the road, he comes upon Mr. Dell, who has just been captured by his pursuers, and the mystery is revealed. Mr. Dell explains that owing to his own jealous nature, he decided to impersonate the butler in order to observe his wife's actions with Lieutenant Scott, and sent his butler away in order to carry out his plans more safely. Mrs. Dell, in return, shows her husband a letter from Lieutenant Scott, which shows that she loves her husband only.

JOHN REDMOND, THE EVANGELIST (Four Parts).—After losing his parents, who died from grief over their son's unjust sentence to jail, John Redmond obtains his release and devotes his life to the uplift and betterment of mankind. After preaching to a crowd one day he is accused of having served a term in jail himself. The leader of a gang and his followers are planning an act of burglary in a saloon. John Redmond happens into the same place, but he is mocked and leaves.

One of the gangsters decides to lead an honest life and appeals to John for moral aid. The lay-preacher tells him his story: How in a quarrel one evening his sweetheart was killed by the bullet of a rival suitor, which was meant for him, and for which he was sentenced to jail. Through the intervention of this prison-chaplain, however, the case was retried, his innocence was proven and he was set free. His first way was to his ill mother who, shortly after his return, died in his arms.

Nellie, the reformed gangster's sweetheart, rejoices over his reformation, and the lay-preacher continues his life's vocation.

"0-18," OR A MESSAGE FROM THE SKY.—Otto Bergmann and William Bergmann are (apparently) peaceful foreign merchants conducting a business as importing chemists in a strange land. Nevertheless they are important secret agents of their Government and very clever ones too. The story opens just as a great war is about to begin between their own country and that in which they are doing business. The two Bergmanns with their porter and chauffeur as their assistants are holding themselves ready to do whatever the heads of their spy system demand of them. They are, however, closely watched by their stenographer, who is really "Operative No. 0-18," an agent of the Secret Service. She is in constant communication with another Secret Service Agent, a man.

The Bergmanns receive a "Message from the Sky" to the effect that a certain time on a certain day a troop train will pass over a particular railroad bridge. They are instructed to blow up this bridge just as the train crosses over it. The "stenographer" and the Secret Service man, by a clever ruse, have placed a Dictograph in the Bergmann's private office. She overhears them planning but is herself caught with the receiver of the Dictograph at her ear. They render her unconscious and after devising a way to get rid of the Secret Service man, who they discover waiting outside, they carry her out as though she had fainted and take her away in their motor car. They are followed by a motor cyclist, who is also a Secret Service man, who learns their plans and sets out in pursuit. Space makes it impossible to give in detail all the intensely exciting events that follow. The girl is saved in the nick of time and from the information she gives the Secret Service man arrives at the railroad bridge in time to save the troop train, the bomb actually exploding as it is thrown into the boat containing the spies.

A Comfortable Seat

MAKES THE Show Complete

AS owner or manager of a moving picture theatre, you know the importance of comfortable seating arrangements.

There is no seat so cozy, attractive and restful as the upholstered chair covered with

DU PONT FABRIKOID
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

CRAFTSMAN QUALITY

Such seats are inviting to patrons, a credit to good taste and a positive indication of the desire to have every detail of the theatre harmonize with the high character of the attractions featured.

This superior quality of artificial leather is extensively used in many of the leading theatres. It is far more durable than coated splits. It is made in a plain or embossed finish, in various colors and thus making surface cleansing easy, quick and cheap—an item of cost to be kept at the lowest.

IF you are to renovate your seating accommodations, or increase the capacity of your theatre, or contemplate installing a reserve section requiring a better seat, we will be glad to send samples and quote prices.

Easy Money for Theatres

Extra Profits You Are Not Now Getting

$360.45 the First Month from Butter-Kist Corn Popper

You have the ideal crowd to buy—you should be getting the profits. Scores of motion picture theatres are now reaping a year-'round harvest of spot-cash sales from BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn in addition to regular paid admissions.

Profits $25 to $60 weekly. One theatre took in $360.45 the first month. Smallest theatres selling $4 to $5 worth of BUTTER-KIST in the evenings alone. Remember that every dollar you take in is seventy cents profit.

BUTTER-KIST

Corn Popper

This famous money-maker requires only 26 in. x 32 in. of space. You have plenty of room for it in lobby, foyer or down near stage.

Runs itself and turns out 1 bag in 48 seconds—$3.75 per hour!

Pops and butters automatically—each morsel evenly. No watching, no work, no stock to carry, no muss. Just take in the money!

Superbly built of plate glass, with mahogany, oak or white enamel cabinet, metal parts of polished aluminum and nickel.

BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn with Butter-Kist Prizes

"Everybody's" asking for famous BUTTER-KIST—the big, fluffy, white flakes—crisp, crackling and clean—evenly buttered and piping hot—untouched by hands. The finest, flavory, savory treat that ever tantalized a mortal's palate—with a coaxing fragrance that makes people hungry for BUTTER-KIST.

Every bag bears the valuable BUTTER-KIST trademark and Kiddies that thousands are saving and sending to us for handsome prizes. Brings people back to your theatre. Records show big increase in attendance.

Pay From Your Sales

A small payment down brings you the BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper with all privileges included. Then it pays for itself in short order. Let us show you.

"The Little Gold Mine" FREE

Handsome new book, "The Little Gold Mine," gives facts, figures, proof of profits and photographs. Sent FREE. Write for it at once—you lose $4 to $16 in sales every day you delay.

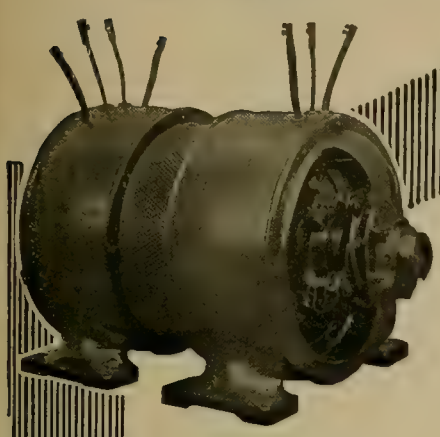
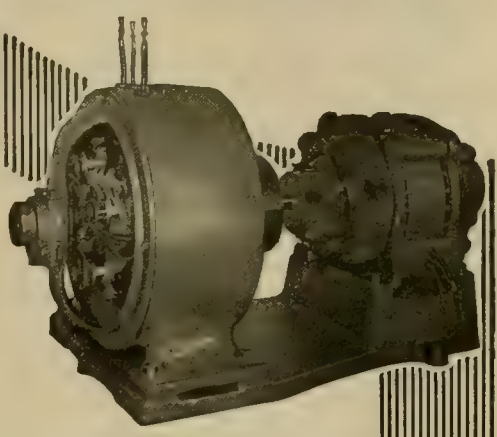
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

MINA FILMS

Of the dozens of new comic brands rushed out in the last few months, only a few remain. The market is still crowded, but day by day some weakling falls by the wayside and is forgotten. In the meantime MINA Films have been steadily growing in tone and popularity until today they are firmly established as the quality films of the trade. Exhibitors can book these comedies with confidence, in the perfect certainty that they will have one crackerjack a week no matter what may happen to their other bookings.

Read what the World said of the MINA release of March 4th:

"The story, acting, staging and photography leave nothing to be desired. More artistic work by everyone concerned in the making of a picture, has seldom been shown on any screen. The comic adventures of two brothers who look alike and are mistaken for each other, leads up to a hilarious climax."

And MINA Films are all as good as that. Can you afford to do without such films?

What One Operator Thinks of Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, 36 East 23rd St., New York. New York, March 6, 1915. 858 East 165th St.

Dear Sir: I cannot help reading your book "Motion Picture Electricity" over again. This is the fourth and not the last time. It is so interesting from beginning to end that I cannot put it down before finishing. It is written plain and the figures are easy to understand. I believe that this book gives more knowledge to an operator than many years of actual experience. I see now, after reading your book, that even though I am considered a good operator, there is a whole lot I did not know. It gives a clear understanding about Electricity, Motors, Generators, Rectifiers and many other things which every operator should know.

Excuse me for writing about matters which you know, but I cannot find any other way to express my appreciation for the knowledge I received through your Book. Am sure that I will recommend it as often as possible.

Yours respectfully,

(Signed) MICHAEL FRANKEL,
Operator at The Ashers Wonderland,
Member of the M. P. M. O. Union, Local 306.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

No. 2 Security Ticket Chopper

A CHOPPER THAT CHOPS

The new No. 2 Security Ticket Chopper.
The Official Chopper of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.
The De Luxe Edition in choppers.
The 42 Centimetre in choppers.

We are now ready to deliver this new chopper that certainly does mutilate the tickets. No chance to press or iron them out after they pass through the knives of the new Security.

There is simply nothing left of the tickets.

The mechanism is so durable that coins or metal checks can pass between knives without any injury whatsoever.

We also equip the No. 2 Security Ticket Chopper with an attachment called an agitator to force through strip tickets.

Made with or without foot power attachment.

All the improvements you have ever thought should be on a ticket chopper, ARE on our No. 2 Security.

It will save its price in a few months by mutilating ALL the tickets.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service
To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:
Script Criticism
For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.
Plot Estimates
If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.
Please Note
My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

The DIE IS CAST

By Edwin Thanhouser

IT is done! My heart is glad—my judgment is confirmed!

I have told you of the material that the new Thanhouser releases will be made of, of the new inspiration, the high tone, the lofty ideal that will be put into them.

Well—all this time we have been hard at work, and two minutes before I sat down to write this I was in my projection room, looking at the first few of the new Thanhouser releases.

What I saw there made me rush back to my desk and get this off to you at once!

I can't be conservative now—I can't be modest! I feel like SHOUTING to you! They're great!—just positively and absolutely all that I want them to be! They're dozens of per cent. better than the best work I ever did before—and I don't need to repeat here what the name Thanhouser has meant to you in the past.

You are all men of business, men of enterprise, and many of you know what it is to have carried the spark of an ideal in your heart and mind for a long time—then to see it fanned into a flame from which, like Phoenix, the creature of your fancy arises!

That's where I stand now! I am satisfied, and you know that will mean satisfaction for you!

The new Thanhouser releases are ready, so be quick when I announce the release dates.

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 11

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

Ray Bagley of the Missoula Amusement Company is the manager of the Empress Theatre in Missoula.

Missoula sounds like one of the small 2 x 4 towns where nothing happens, but the fact that live exhibitors are not always found in New York City is proven by some of Mr. Bagley's stunts with World Film.

The Empress Theatre runs programs of two other feature companies, giving a day to each one. He runs World Film two days.

When Mr. Bagley saw Lew Fields in "Old Dutch," he decided that the picture was good enough for something unusual, and the result was that he introduced what he calls Midnight Matinee. He ran the film on Sunday morning between 12 and 1.20 in addition to the regular night performance.

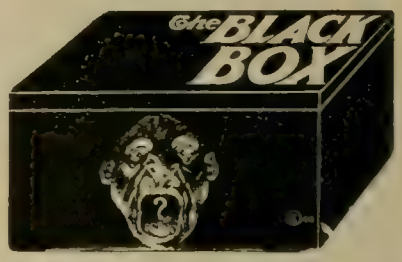
His newspaper advertising based on suggestions of our pictures and ads. and and our complete publicity service, were the best possible examples of what can be done by a man who keeps his eyes open and is willing to accept expert help. The Midnight Matinee was a great hit, both financially and as a publicity stunt.

In addition to the newspaper advertising used, Mr. Bagley also uses 3-24 sheets for every World Film feature, in addition to his regular paper, and boosts his photo showing with a beautiful hand-colored gravure three days in advance of the performance.

In concluding his letter Mr. Bagley says the World Film is to be complimented upon the men in their employ. He says he has never corresponded with a more congenial and obliging group of managers. "You've got a great organization," says Mr. Bagley.

No other feature company has gone into the cost we have in producing adver-advertising aids for the exhibitor's use. For the men who will use them, no more effective method of publicity will be found. Ask our managers to outline to you the complete selling help and the advertising matter which is at your disposal.

A Tremendous 3rd WEEK



—The success of the 3rd Episode of the Black Box was so huge that if we were to tell you the actual facts you would hardly believe it possible.

In point of attendance practically all serial records were smashed from one end of the country to the other. In point of interest and fascinating action, the 3rd Episode of the Black Box was a knock-out.

We might call the insertion of this page ad in Moving Picture World money partially wasted, for it is now unnecessary to persuade exhibitors to book the Black Box; it's getting to be so that much care is necessary in arranging booking dates, so huge has been the number of requests for bookings all over America.

Which all goes to prove that Universal Serials are not dead, in fact, they are very much alive,—so much alive that where other serials have fallen sadly by the wayside, Universal Serials have won, are winning, and will continue to win.

The public want Universal Serials,—and the sooner All Exhibitors from one end of the country to the other realize that there's big money in Universal Serials, just so soon will Exhibitors begin to insure themselves 15 week attendance records continuously.

If you failed to book the Black Box, get busy and book it for your House immediately. Wire your nearest Exchange and in the meantime look out for a lot of hot air and bombastic claims of Feature Serial makers????. Hundreds of Exhibitors who have read and digested the immense quantities of "bull" in serial ads and who have fallen for that "bull," are now sadder and wiser men. Play safe. Hook up with the BIGGEST IN THE WORLD. The Universal. This practically guarantees your success if on your side you will only use the brains God gave you. When the Universal does it—it's huge. When the Universal says it—it's true. The big money is in sight for you. A copy of the huge Advertising Campaign book is free for the asking. Send for it today; then Book the Black Box for your House within the hour.

PROGRAM

A Phenomenal Record Repeated!

In the last issue of the Moving Picture World, we called attention, with pardonable pride, to the fact that for the first time in the history of motion pictures, the two principal Broadway picture theatres, the Strand and the Broadway, during all of last week simultaneously presented our two current releases—John Barrymore, in "Are You a Mason?" and Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green."

This unprecedented occasion immediately became the trade topic of the day, and the interest of the unusual situation is now further heightened by the fact that this phenomenal record has been repeated at the same theatres during the past week, the Strand Theatre presenting William Elliott in "When We Were Twenty-One," and the Broadway offering, "The Commanding Officer," with Alice Dovey. Further repeating last week's achievement, both these subjects have also scored distinct and individual hits.

Thus, New York City's two foremost photoplay theatres have for two solid weeks depended upon the Famous Players Film Company for their attractions.....

So Can Every Exhibitor in the Country!

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

AN IMAGE OF THE PAST (1 Reel Majestic) Release date Tuesday, March 30. An interesting story of a daughter's reconciliation with her father through the medium of her child. A picture of fair quality.

THE ARTIST'S WIFE (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Friday, April 2. The model's sacrifice reclaims the wavering love of her artist sweetheart. A picture with a thrill.

DOCTOR JIM (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, April 4. The kind-hearted Doctor Jim is misunderstood in the western community, but in the end wins the hand of the sheriff's daughter.

ETHEL'S DEADLY ALARM CLOCK (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, April 4. One of the best of the "Bill" series in which a dynamite bomb and an alarm clock cause confusion and terror.

THE LITTLE MOTHER (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, April 6. A very interesting child story telling how a little orphan girl at last finds a home with her baby sister.

THE FENCING MASTER (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, April 11. A well produced story of an old fencing master who regains the vigor of his youth, featuring delightful "Teddy" Sampson and lovable Thomas Jefferson.

BY FAIR MEANS OR FOWL (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, April 11. A rural farce with Fay Tincher and Elmer Booth. Not quite up to Komic standard in story or production.

A Startling Offer Open To Your Patrons!

TEN thousand dollars will be given to the man, woman or child sending in the most acceptable suggestion for a sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky." $10,000.00 was recently paid to Miss Ida Damon, a St. Louis stenographer, for the solution of "The Million Dollar Mystery." We follow this with the remarkable offer of Ten Thousand Dollars for a suggestion for a sequel to the newest—the most stupendous—photoplay ever presented—"The Diamond from the Sky."

"The Diamond from the Sky" is the $20,000.00 prize photoplay. It was selected as the best of the 19,846 scenarios submitted in the Chicago Tribune's $10,000.00 photoplay contest. The story will appear in 500 newspapers throughout the country. $10,000.00 was paid for the scenario—and now $10,000.00 is offered for a sequel.

For a Suggestion!

A Picturized Romantic Novel in Chapters!

"THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY" will be a picturized romantic novel. It will be presented in feature chapters. It will be enacted by an all-star cast of "Flying A" players. It is now being produced in the "Flying A" studios at Santa Barbara, California. Bookings are now being arranged by representatives of the North American Film Corporation at Mutual Exchanges throughout America.

First Release May 3rd—Book NOW!

The first chapter of this mammoth production will be released May 3rd. It will be in three reels. Thereafter, a two reel chapter will be released each week. It will be an independent release, and may be obtained regardless of the regular program being used.

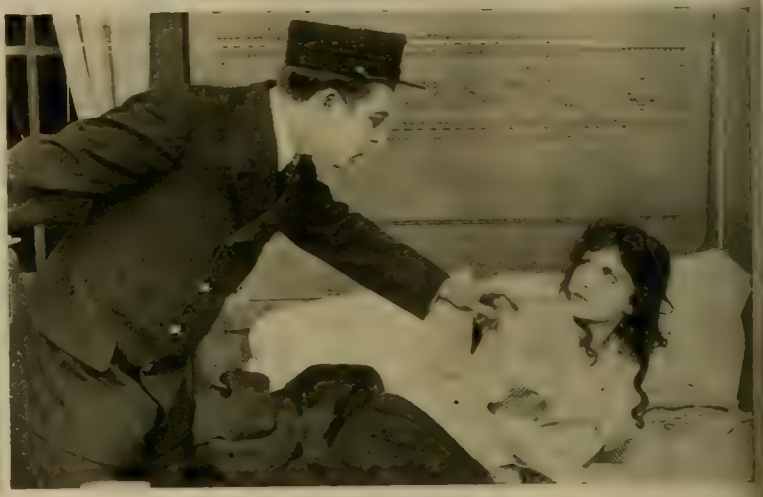
SCENE FROM "A DEADLY HATE"



SCENE FROM "THE STONING"

Marc MacDermott in a Double Role in a remarkable portrayal of an honorable and a disreputable twin in

The Feature, "A DEADLY HATE"

Released Monday, April 12th—3000 feet.

No one but a player as finished an artist as Marc MacDermott is could play this sterling English melodrama with such convincing power—making real the illusion of a disreputable, murderous paralytic and an honorable twin brother. From a play which has never been seen on the American stage but is famous all through England and her world possessions. Marc MacDermott imparts to the two characters those lightning-like touches of characterizations that give us a play that holds. Supported by the new, beautiful leading woman, Margaret Prussing.

Viola Dana's Triumph in "The Stoning" Draws Unheard-of Words from Two Authorities

"The Stoning," the 3-act Feature released Friday, April 9th, moved Mrs. Jeanie Noble Whaley, a leading spirit of the National Board of Censorship, to write: "No human being could see 'The Stoning' without being deeply and lastingly impressed. The simplicity in telling the tragedy makes its tremendous power. I don't remember ever having seen a story visualized which touched me so deeply. The story is perfect. Murder can be done without hand or weapon, as is plainly shown."

Louis Reeves Harrison, the fearless critic, writes: " 'The Stoning' is the best three reel feature of the year. 'The Stoning' is imbued with the spirit of sincerity and truth—it strikes root where the ordinary production is inane and impotent. Next to its noble theme, it is this actuality which counts most heavily. Director Brabin has joined the band of those who know the secret of convincing realism."

Margaret Prussing, Duncan McRae and Richard Tucker in "The Landing of the Pilgrims."

An attractive little love story, made famous by the great poet, Longfellow, is woven into this famous and romantically adventurous episode in American History. Taken on the very spot where the Pilgrims landed so many years ago. Released Saturday, April 17th—1000 feet.

All Edison Films are passed upon by the National Board of Censorship and released through the General Film Co.'s Program

SCENE FROM "A WOMAN'S REVENGE"

SCENE FROM "HIS SAD AWAKENING"

Clever, Versatile Miriam Nesbitt

As the Girl Criminal in

The 2-act Drama "A WOMAN'S REVENGE"

By Mary Rider. Released Friday, April 16th—2000 feet.

Miriam Nesbitt is displaying new powers in her skilfully charactered girl criminal who battles with the craftiest yet who still has a woman's finest instincts welling up to do the unexpected and the good. Miss Nesbitt, with all her acts against the law, still preserves that something of her winsome personality which would win us no matter what role she essayed. This is a play of strong dramatic contrasts.

And here's Waddy and Arty In Such a Laughingness!—"His Sad Awakening."

"His Sad Awakening" will wake up more laughs than you'd ever think a theatre could contain when Waddy and Arty (Wadsworth and Housman) get to stirring 'em up with their slap stick. Arty in a new character—as a comedy old man—gives a new twist to his humorous pranks, with Waddy a simpering, love-sick lad. Waddy and Arty hand the laughs around so naturally—so heartily—that life is a joke during their screen visit. Hitch this team of pullers to your program—and laugh yourself—at the difference in receipts. Released Tuesday, April 13th—1000 feet.

William Fables as the Lady Cook, in "The Cook's Mistake."

Fables is no fable when it comes to pumping out the laughs as he pumps lead out of his guns in a laughable hunt for a faithless swain. If you're looking for zip in slapstick, take a look at this picture. Released Wednesday, April 14th—1000 feet.

Facts and Comments

WE ARE still in the sign of the program. Exchanges still consider it the height of wisdom to "tie up" their exhibitors. At a distance the exhibitor often looks hopelessly "tied up," but at closer range we frequently discover that he is tied up just about as carelessly as the hero in the filmed melodrama. The hero, as a rule, works himself free about three minutes after the last villain has left the scene. The fetters of the program are just about as illusive. The "ironclad" contract on severe inspection turns out to be full of holes. The fact of the matter is that the exhibitor in the present condition of affairs is growing stronger all the time, and if he is willing to fight for it he can get what he wants and when he wants and how he wants it. No one need to worry about this growing independence of the exhibitor; we think it is about the most encouraging sign of the times and, indeed, we believe that it augurs well for the sound development of the industry as a whole.

A FRIEND and reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD writes to us from a city in the Middle West enclosing samples of two small dodgers printed upon paper of fiery red. The dodgers are curiously reminiscent of by-gone days and interesting enough to be printed just as they have come to us. Here is the text verbatim:

TO THE PUBLIC:

If you wish to see a Real Western occurrance, taken from the lives of three of the most noted guerrillas in the U. S., showing how these noted men of the plains of Wyoming, Kansas, Texas and Missouri, after committing some unlawful acts were persued throughout the U. S. by all officials and by Robert Pinkerton that followed them into the mountains of Kentucky, where these men, Bill Anderson, Andy Ryan and Jack Kenedy had gone for safety. The picture shows that the Pinkertons found them there and surrounded the house, and all three fighting their way out.

We are also assured that Dr. Blank Blank "lectures on these pictures" and that he warns all "to stay away from the life of bad men and crime." Our friend says that the theater where these pictures are shown is doing very poor business, although generally speaking the business in that section of the country is good. Comment seems superfluous.

IN ADDITION to the ordinary "hazards" of censorship the European war has brought new prohibition in England to this effect: Films showing the movement or disposition of troops and other incidents calculated to afford information to the enemy are barred, likewise all films "having a tendency to disparage our Allies." No doubt Germany and Austria have passed similar rules, all of which it would seem to us ought to make American-made films especially acceptable to the European market at this time. The American-made picture is ideally neutral.

A VERY prominent exhibitor speaking to the writer remarked a few days ago that "comedy" was the bane of his existence. He meant to say that the selection of the right sort of comedy was his hardest and most delicate task. The trouble is in the lack of a happy medium between vulgar "comedies" on the one hand and "tiresome" comedy on the other. It is significant of the present state of the market that the exhibitor had to spend hours of his most valuable time to find what he could use; a clean and very laughable farce which, curiously enough, was of British make.

SPEAKING of comedies it is interesting to note what an English exhibitor has to say of American films with a comic theme. He praises the American "comic" saying "that some of them started wonderfully well with some new and original, if extravagant, ideas." Now, however, the exhibitor goes on to say, "imitators have come along and the competitors seem to be trying to outdo each other in vulgarity and coarseness of method." He asks this pointed question: "I wonder what type of audience some of these producers had in their minds' eye at the time. The type of film that passes muster in a 'slum' district is expected to appeal to a more fastidious audience elsewhere." We think our friend is just a trifle pessimistic. Real humor is universal and will make its appeal to any audience, while the spurious variety will be rejected by the poor and lowly just as surely as by the rich and mighty.

Delusions About Censorship

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE vast majority of motion picture producers are most anxious to avoid even the appearance of evil or of offence in their films. Most of them, it may be truthfully claimed, aim much higher than at a mere avoidance of what is or may be considered objectionable. They try not only to entertain but to stir the hearts and minds of their audiences in wholesome ways. Other things being equal, they give the preference to what is clean and uplifting. Taking a look at the history of motion pictures from the early days to this present moment we can easily trace a growing improvement both in art and in ethics.

Let us try to put ourselves in the position of an honest, conscientious producer, filled with a desire to make good, clean pictures and to contribute the best there is in him to the literature of the screen. He may perhaps be excused for saying to himself: "Why should I fear censorship? Censors may be necessary for the get-rich-quick man who has no legitimate stake in the industry. Indeed, we would like to see the censor wipe these fellows out. Censorship will never touch us."

We heartily wish we could agree with this view. Alas, such ideal censorship may be possible in Heaven amid the rustling of snow-white wings and the sound of golden harps; when we come down to earth, we find the censors lashing out in every direction and sparing nothing. We would like our optimistic friends who think they have "nothing to fear" from censorship to gaze upon the official reports of the censor boards of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Scanning the list of the wounded and the dead, we find every great name on the roster of producers well represented. We also find on examination that most of the films which were suppressed either in toto or in part would stand a very fine chance of passing a jury of twelve American citizens taken from different walks of life.

Ohio or, to be a little more definite, Mrs. Maude Murray Miller suppressed a splendid feature made by one of the most reputable producers in the business because she thought it had a tendency to "foster class hatred." Mind this well. The feature was not objected to on the ground of immorality or indecency. Even the mind of a Tartuffe could have detected nothing of the sort in this particular feature. The producer satirized a certain type of employer which is not unknown in our social life. We were introduced to a rich merchant who was most ungenerous and even penurious in the treatment of his help, trying to get their very best work for a mere pittance, which he himself felt was contemptible. This same man figured as a generous giver to all charities with a good publicity annex. The type is unlovely, but it exists, and it surely is a legitimate target for public criticism. Mrs. Miller thought otherwise, and the film was suppressed. Possibly Ohio is free from this undesirable kind of employer and the censor wanted to keep the people of the state in blissful ignorance. However that may be, the fact remains that the edict of one person banned that film from Ohio. In examining these reports of the various boards of censors, we find, too, that the pictures of certain producers or importers who had taken an active interest in the campaign against censorship find little favor in the eyes of the censors.

I seriously doubt whether there is a human being alive today capable of producing motion pictures which will please all the official and the unofficial and the self-appointed censors. Persistent attempts to please all the censors all the time would in a short time dash Reason from its throne. No producer, no matter how high his ambition and how clean his work may be, can escape the knife of the censor. The censor, too, may be perfectly honest in his work. He may really believe that he is doing the community a good service by suppressing or mutilating a certain picture. The fault lies not with individuals but with the system.

Censorship is not a new experiment in the history of mankind. It is, on the contrary, a very old experiment, and we are safe in saying that no experiment has been tried more thoroughly and has been more thoroughly discredited than this same censorship. I cannot now recollect any other experiment in the regulation of human affairs which looms up as a more monumental failure than censorship. It works harm, and it has never accomplished anything for the benefit of mankind. It is distinctly medieval, and we find it was the most effective weapon in the hands of the bigots and tyrants who were responsible for the religious persecutions that raged in Europe centuries ago. One has but to consult history to find that some of the most illustrious men and women in the annals of mankind were the victims of censorship, which is but another name for inquisition. The idea that the honest producer will escape the blighting influence of censorship is one of the saddest and most dangerous delusions.

The censorship of motion pictures strikes at all. You need not be guilty to feel its lash; it is enough if the censor thinks you are guilty. It is strange indeed that men of intelligence can seriously entertain the hope of escaping the vagaries of censorship. Is there a motion picture producer naive enough to believe that censors duly appointed by the state and regularly drawing their salaries will ever admit that the pictures are uniformly good and no longer need censorship? Even if the pictures were approved by the heavenly hosts, the state censor would want his salary just the same, and he would at least want to go through the motions of earning it. The censor is like the wolf in the fable: he will get his lamb no matter how sweet and well-behaved the dear little animal may be.

The duty of resisting the vicious principle and the oppressive practice of official censorship devolves upon all the branches of the industry, and no producer can shirk it though his scenario department were conducted by cherubim and seraphim and his directors warranted by Anthony Comstock or Saint Anthony himself. The attitude of indifference assumed by the decent, reputable producer toward censorship must be hostile, because he is just as much subject to its vagaries as the less reputable man in the producing business.

The great majority of people in this industry, both manufacturers and exhibitors, have too much respect for the business and for its permanency to disgrace it with unworthy or immoral films. This overwhelming majority in the industry itself should formulate plans for eliminating the low and vicious minority who, for a paltry few dollars, would bring disgrace on the art. The exhibitor against whom a conviction is obtained may lose his license and his theater and a fairly long term of imprisonment for some of our producers of filth would quickly rid the industry of many who should never have entered it. The present Laws are more than sufficient.

La Pleiade

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN EXPRESSION first applied to groups of poets, and later to clusters of genius, derived from the stars known as "Pleiades," themselves named from the mythological daughters of Atlas, what has "La Pleiade" to do with the production of moving pictures? That cynical smile of amusement in one corner of your mouth is as eloquent as anything you might have to say about the incongruity of associating clustering genius with moving pictures, but it is my inalienable privilege as a historian to accurately describe what has never occurred. To be an advance agent in this business requires more ability than to furnish such useful information as that which may be had for nothing in the hallways of all the theatrical office buildings grouped around Times Square. We critics have to hear the rich, reverberant arias of unsung operas, the sonorous splendor of oratorios not yet composed. There is a world to be created by this new art, so why prattle about it?

Pamphlets, handbills, artistic posters, flambuoyant posters, trade organs, daily papers, weekly periodicals, monthly magazines in countless thousands, running into the millions tell you how great are the plays now being shown on the screen. Agents, exchange men, publicity men and salesmen are shouting themselves hoarse on the subject. In this sirocco, this sandstorm of indiscriminate praise, a clear, cool glass of water from the well of artistry is sometimes refreshing. It is rare enough to be, almost as rare as truth. Let us attempt to get at genuine values in the photodrama and begin by discriminating between its composition and that of the printed novel, not forgetting their points of resemblance.

The novelist who sits down to write a story has a series of events, or a development of character, or a theme in mind which he must present in language to others. His native power, his imagination, counts, his observation counts, his training counts, his selective ability, all that makes up his equipment as an author. The plan is his and every stone in the structure. The artistic treatment is his and every interpreting word, phrase and sentence. He alone is responsible for logic, treatment, exposition, style. When he has rounded out his composition by revision, when the book is ready for printing, it is wholly the result of his genius and craftmanship. The completed production is his from start to finish, that of one mind.

"I see," smiles the gentle cynic. "You are now about to tell us that, in visualizing a story for screen presentation, we have a small group of bright stars, author, actor, camera man and director, uniting to make the completed product." Not exactly. I have known a fine scenario to be chopped to pieces before it emerged from the first hands laid upon it, and thereafter, during the course of its progress, nearly every man, woman and child in the studio had a hack at it. There was not cluster of genius at work in that case, but a Milky Way of mental incompetency and meddlesome mediocrity. No longer a scenario,—it was more like a sausage.

The natural triology in small screen plays is author, director and actor. In really great visualizations of the future there will probably be a harmony of effort on the part of many minds. The author of the screen version, even in an adaptation, plans the whole structure. General supervision then falls to the art director. A stage manager becomes active in control of the movement. The interpreter is concerned with revelation. To those four may well be added the camera man, and why leave out the scenic artist? Add to these the costumer and we have the wondrous seven, La Pleiade.

A candid survey of achievement in almost every great field of effort shows that our forward march has been as a body—social achievement makes possible that of the individual. In less complicated forms of effort, the individual may accomplish much alone, but the necessity of combination is gradually imposed upon him. Once rid of stupid egotism, a man takes his place in the ranks to contribute that portion of common effort for which he is best qualified—he pulls his pound. He finds that he can accomplish more to benefit himself by joining a crew that pulls together.

Harmony of interest does not, however, always mean a grouping of effort. The author, for instance, works best in silence and isolation. Whether he is using his own theme or that of some past performer, the author of a screen version is its architect. His imagination is the first creative factor. His complete plans must be materialized in a form of expression, but his scenario is only a soul. It must be given that treatment which makes it visible, a body in which its spirit becomes known.

It is quite probable that the handling of a company of actors will become specialized in big screen visualizations, that there will be a stage director and an art director to divide duties, one or the other, presumably the art director, to assume responsibility for the complete product. The actor may no longer be deeply concerned about movement, nor even about revelation, but rather that expression of personality, of thought, of feeling which is in a way suppression. The girl who sniffles in her sleeve or ducks her head in her arms on the table produces no such effect on the audience as is aroused by undemonstrative sorrow.

The camera man and the scenic artist, when they are students as well as craftsmen, may accomplish wonders in transporting the new art from waste places, those of false realism and mechanical imitation, to those perfect delineations of form in background which shall make an attractive appeal to the eye. The rhythm of movement is an aria which needs a chordal background and the costumer may aid greatly in a composition intended to ravish the sense of vision. While the story is going forward, with its power of arousing feeling and inspiring thought, the whole picture of each scene may well be a thing of beauty or of special significance. We shall at least get rid of the irrelevant.

This is not a dream, gentle cynic. I hope you will not be converted, like the newspapers, from thinly-veiled contempt for the "movies" to fulsome praise that is much more offensive. Better realize that all things are possible in the evolution of man's creative mind. Even now, some of the best examples of the period through which we are passing point to still finer artistic achievement and corresponding enthusiasm of public support. There is a marvelous growth going on before our eyes, and the capacity of our people to enjoy what is prepared for their entertainment and their inspiration is not limited. The public capacity to enjoy photodrama will long be greater than ours to create and develop, because the complex nature of production makes screen dramas of high merit exceedingly rare. Those ranking highest will not be the creations of any one mind, but of La Pleiade.

Theatrical Managers Defended.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York.

Dear Sir:—Under the heading: "No Surrender," W. Stephen Bush writes a very interesting article on the Censorship question in your issue of April 3. On the main points at issue everyone agrees; that we do not need censorship in any form and The World has consistently fought along these lines in an admirable manner. In justice, however, to those men who have taken up the fight at a time when other organizations seemed to be losing ground and state censorship laws were being enacted right and left, I believe Mr. Bush should fully inform himself before bitterly attacking "the Theatrical interests" and the United Managers' Protective Association.

The meeting of managers at the recent Hotel Astor conference was held for the purpose of receiving the report of a special committee on censorship. This committee was appointed at a previous meeting and consisted of Messrs. Kennedy, Aitken, Powers, Zukor and Brulatour, all of whom are directly identified with the production of motion pictures. These gentlemen had spent no little time in investigating censorship conditions and preparing their report. Mr. Marc Klaw and Lignon Johnson served as temporary chairman and secretary of the Hotel Astor meeting at the request of the members of the Association. Mr. Kennedy submitted the report of his committee and the same was unanimously approved. "The theatrical interests" had absolutely no voice in the matter. The "surrender of our principles," if any, was made by motion picture interests.

At a previous meeting, when the matter of appointing a special committee was taken up, Mr. Klaw addressed those present and urged them to stand up and fight for their rights. He pointed out the fact that the motion picture represented a greater power and exerted a stronger influence than any other form of amusement, the legitimate theater not excepted; that film manufacturers need not be mealy-mouthed about opposing censorship, as they were in a strictly legitimate business, and need make no excuses; that every industry, when it grew to successful proportions, became a target for legislation, therefore it was no wonder the motion picture was now being attacked by lawmakers. A prominent manufacturer expressed himself in favor of some sort of regulation to protect reputable film makers from the circulation of objectionable films by irresponsible producers in the event censorship were abolished.

Mr. Klaw strongly opposed any form of subterfuge or substitute and declared against censorship of any kind. He said that the legitimate theater had successfully fought censorship for thirty years, but it was no easy task. The picture interests must therefore organize properly and face the situation bravely without beating about the bush.

Mr. Johnson, counsel for the Association, has done a great deal of good work for the motion picture. He succeeded in marshalling together the labor interests identified with the theater and had the Smith-Hughes bill crippled twenty-four hours before even your Mr. Bush landed in Albany. He has attended every copyright hearing from those prior to the passage of the law of 1909 to date. He aided in the final draft of the original law and all its amendments. At the invitation of the Supreme Court he participated in the preparation of the rules of practice under the copyright act of the United States.

He is on the job every minute with an army of votes behind him in the men who are employed in the theater and kindred lines.

The United Managers' Protective Association recognizes the fact that united effort is needed to protect Amusement Interests. In the Association motion picture men are in the majority. They are fully competent to protect themselves from the "theatrical interests" which Mr. Bush fears will gobble up the film man.

Practically every theatrical man in the Managers' Association has capital invested in motion pictures and seeks to protect it.

The motion picture interests are wise to form such an alliance with men who can give them at this time the benefit of years of experience in fighting detrimental legislation.

In making its report at the Hotel Astor meeting, the censorship committee no doubt felt that state and municipal censorship was increasing so rapidly it would be very difficult to prevent forther enactments in other cities and states, and, in order to stem the wave now sweeping over the country, co-operation with the Federal Government, with a view to forming an intelligent, dignified and capable board of censors, in which the manufacturers would have a voice, was thought advisable.

Whether or not this course is a wise one remains to be seen. That the support of the trade press is needed to strengthen the work of the motion picture interests who have taken this decided stand for federal censorship is now apparent. As for the theatrical interests, we of the motion picture have copied and imitated their methods and ideas in operating our theaters and conducting our business since its inception and some of our most dignified and successful film makers are also theatrical men. Why condemn the big men of the theater, according to Mr. Bush, because Wm. A. Brady's press agent wrote a story aside from the facts, as many press agents do occasionally?

Publication of visionary statements has been going on for years.

Yours very truly,

HARRY R. RAVER,
Member Board of Governors.

While we gladly extend the courtesy of our columns to an old and valued friend like Mr. Harry Raver we must point out that his statement is entirely inconclusive and fails to make out a case against either the form or the substance of the article complained of. We cannot look upon the article as "a bitter attack" upon any individual or any interests. The article was based upon a report sent to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD by the authorized publicity men of the theatrical managers' association. How were we to know that the whole report was but a "canard?" We received it in good faith and commented upon it in good faith. Surely we have no desire to belittle the efforts of men who work against censorship. We welcome them as allies at all times. We do not hesitate to say that Mr. Johnson has done good work in the battle against censorship, though there is no doubt that he looks with disfavor upon a separate and distinct organization within the ranks of the motion picture industry.

We are glad to have Mr. Raver's assurance that the story upon which our article was based was the yarn of a press agent. We rejoice to know that Mr. Klaw "declared against censorship of any kind." We hope that the managers' protective association will hereafter exercise more care in the selection of their publicity men and that "the publication of visionary statements which has been going on for years" will no longer be permitted. As to Mr. Raver's statement that "Mr. Johnson had crippled the Smith-Hughes bill in Albany before Mr. Bush landed in Albany may we be allowed to point out that the Smith-Hughes bill has nothing whatever to do with Albany and that we feel tempted to ask for a bill of particulars on the rapid crippling process. Let us pull together in the holy war against censorship.

FRANK DANIELS WITH VITAGRAPH.

The inimitable Frank Daniels, of comic opera fame, was initiated into the mysteries of motion picture production and acting for the camera at the Vitagraph studios last week when he began work in the four-part comedy "My Uncle Bob," written expressly for the popular comedian by Paul West. The theme of "My Uncle Bob" is that of mistaken identity in which Mr. Daniels is seen as an escaped jailbird and in which he is given opportunity to "put over" in his own peculiar style the subtle mannerisms that have caused countless audiences to laugh. "My Uncle Bob" is being produced under the direction of Jay Williams.

BALL OF THE ALLIED ARTS.

On Thursday evening, April 8th at the Hotel Astor, the Ball of the Allied Arts of Theater is to take place in behalf of the Actors' Fund of America. It is projected by the Players Club in their share in the series of events for this great professional charity.

The committee of The Players in charge consists of John Drew, Otis Skinner, Francis Wilson, Daniel Frohman, Albert Sterner, J. Carrington Yates and Joe H. Hunt. The tickets are placed at $5.00 each and no extras. There will be two large bands of music, and the entire lower floor of the Hotel Astor has been secured.

El Paso the Ideal.

Great Picture Town, Says Blaisdell, Who Gets Royal Reception from Local Exhibitors.

By the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

Los Angeles, California.

THERE were a couple of bad quarters of an hour getting out of San Antonio on a certain Tuesday morning. The train for El Paso left at 4:50 o'clock a. m.—an hour possessing more charms perhaps for a lark or for those who have been in close touch with one than for ordinary go-to-bed human beings. Arrangements had been carefully made for a cab to call at 4:10, that there might be no slip-up. The evening before I had been out with William J. Lytle. It was 9:30 when I said au revoir to escort back to the hotel the side partner, who seemed under the delusion that in Texas an unsophisticated husband needed her keenest guardianship.

Marine View in Juarez, Mexico. What appears to be water is really liquid mud.

Just between you and me, Lytle and I had it fixed that we'd go around a bit and look over the stockmen or such of them as might be in playful mood. There were several thousand in town and the big convention opened on the morrow. I didn't get back—absolutely nothing doing. There was a stern refusal to be left alone. Timid, you know. The following morning, when at 4:30 the cab had failed to arrive, the same timid woman stood for seven minutes on a dark side street in that near-border town while yours truly hunted for a machine to get us to the station. By good luck one was found. "Were you nervous while you were standing here alone?" "Oh, no!" Is there such a thing as timidity of convenience? And I missed the cattlemen.

It was an interesting journey over the great Texas plateau. The elevation increased from about 700 feet at San Antonio to the neighborhood of 5,000 feet east of El Paso. On each side of the track were mountains, near and far. As you look upon the thousands of unoccupied acres you realize the truth of the statement that the hundred millions of citizens of the United States could thrive within the borders of Texas. Practically in a straight line from east to west I traveled 928 miles in the big commonwealth!

Come now to El Paso. After taking off my hat to this hustling, bustling big little town on the border of Texas, New Mexico and old Mexico, I desire to extend apologies to H. D. Cassidy of the William H. Swanson Film Company and W. M. Richardson of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company. Very likely long before this they understand why the courtesies they so hospitably tendered were not taken advantage of. If they will forgive, promise is herewith made that other atonement will be offered if we catch them in New York.

El Paso seems to be from the exhibitor's viewpoint an ideal place. It is and always has been a ten-cent picture town—that is, for a minimum. The managers are in complete accord. There are nine theaters in this city of perhaps sixty thousand persons all told. The normal population is swelled by the great number of soldiers at Fort Bliss and also by several thousand refugees from troubled Mexico.

The Wigwam employs General Film and Paramount services, the latter two times a week, when 20 cents admission is charged. The Grecian is a Mutual house. The Unique uses Universal service and the Bijou shows General Film product. The Alhambra exhibits Pathe pictures and other features. The Lyric and Majestic combine vaudeville and pictures. Then there are three houses catering to Mexicans —the Hidalgo, the Eureka and the Alcazar.

Things began to look up for one Easterner when early that Wednesday morning he called on Will R. Winch of the Wigwam. It was by appointment made late the evening before, just after the train pulled in, when the stranger in town had presented to Mr. Winch a terse note signed with the initials of William J. Lytle of San Antonio. Mr. Winch finished up the details of opening his house for the day and then walked to the telephone and called up Mr. Lewis, of Lewis & Andreas, proprietors of the Grecian.

"You know," said Mr. Winch, as he waited for the call, "we had an exhibitor here once who bought an automobile and somehow his business did not prosper. Mr. Lewis has recently taken unto himself a car, and in order that no similar hoodoo may follow him he has served notice on his brother exhibitors that the car is always at their service."

Over the wire Mr. Winch outlined the situation to Mr. Lewis and was promptly told the car and its owner would be with him at 2 o'clock, as requested. In the meantime he suggested a trip across the Rio Grande to Juarez, the Mexican town which has figured so prominently in the news dispatches of the preceding months.

Such a place! Filth and mud were everywhere. We picked our way about as best we could. We entered the market place, where were exposed for sale many things presumably to eat. We walked around the gambling halls and watched the playing of the men who by their losings contribute, it is said, forty or fifty thousand dollars a month to the war chest of Villa. We tried to enter the famous jail—that is, Winch did—and, to my great relief, the two peon guardians at the door swelled with great but brief authority, refused permission and in ugly fashion waved us away. We saw one big fellow between two soldiers going in under arrest. His face bore no traces of cheerfulness. Incommunicado for seventy-two hours, without even an attorney, was in front of him.

We had a taste of a Mexican meal in a dingy building. We were shown into a little room—the same place, by the way, where Frank Marion of the Kalem company was once entertained by the same host. I sampled the drink they call tequilla, which seemed a cross between gin and brandy. 'Twas this stuff that prompted a Mexican on a famous occasion to mount his horse and announce he was going across the river to clean out the United States. He was picked up dead before he got very far. Really, I think the man was more to be pitied than blamed. After one swig of it I went through six courses of that Mexican meal, from onion soup to beans and coffee, and never flinched. The beans were excellent—always remembering, of course, the tequilla. The price of the six courses, Mr. Winch confided, was 15 cents.

I took a snap of a prominent corner in this town of disturbance and riddled walls. What seems to be water is mud —liquid mud, deep, clinging. There are those in the United States who think Uncle Sam should go across the Rio Grande and put the country over there in his pocket. If he does he'll soil his pocket, if we may judge by what is to be seen in Juarez.

In the afternoon Mr. Lewis took us on a ride about the town. We drove to Fort Bliss, five and a half miles out.

There we were entertained by Captain Warren Dean of Troop C of the Fifteenth Cavalry, who will be remembered by picturegoers of a couple of years ago as the commander of the troop of splendid cavalrymen whose skill was shown in an Edison release, the subject being photographed at Fort Myer, Va. Captain Dean has seen much picture-making, having been associated with Edgar Lewis, Romaine Fielding and Wilbert Melville. He was military adviser and sometimes the dramatic producer in many Solax and later in Lubin subjects.

Captain Dean's home in the officers' row at the fort is a most comfortable place. On the walls of this bachelor habitation are weapons seemingly from all over the world. What a stage setting these walls of the big reception room would make! When the captain was asked for a photograph he admitted he had none. He was challenged to come out on the lawn between the houses and stand for one. Messrs. Winch and Lewis escorted him. With trepidation I prepared to take my first photograph for reproduction—if the fates would permit. To be sure, I did cut off the feet of my subjects, but allowance must be made for a greenhorn.

I rode back to town with the captain in his car. It was a remarkably interesting journey even aside from the entertaining host. The finely paved highway sloped down toward the snow-covered mountains on the Mexican side. A busy afternoon followed. When the feminine guest suggested that perhaps the men would prefer her elimination these Westerners refused to listen to the proposition and said that plans were under way to make the party an even one. That evening it was a jolly gathering that faced the eight covers at a circular table in the big restaurant of the town—and it was a corking dinner at which Mr. Winch presided as host. Present were Mrs. Winch, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis, Captain Dean, Mrs. Lewis, sister-in-law of our associate host, and yours trulies.

Later the party returned to the Wigwam, where were met Edgar E. Campbell, Mr. Winch's partner; V. B. Andreas, Mr. Lewis' partner in the Grecian; T. M. Hervey, of the Unique and the Bijou, and C. L. Le Veaux, of the City Sign Company.

There were seven passengers in Mr. Lewis' car when a start was made for the train. It was raining, but water could not dampen the spirits of that group, and the captain was right there with the film folks. As the train pulled out there was a parting honk that marked the ending of a day to be remembered. BLAISDELL.

Berst Returns From Coast.

Selig's General Manager Completes First Tour of Inspection. —New Activities Result.

J. A. BERST, vice president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, has just completed his first official inspection of the three Selig studios on the Pacific Coast. As a result, Mr. Berst states that more features are to be made than in the past, and new stars are to be engaged. "Not only will we put out even more pretentious features than in the past, but Selig strength in all releases will be made greater. We are after more quality and will attain it. The remarkable facilities at hand at our Coast studios are astonishing. I had no conception of the beauty and completeness of the mission studio at Edendale, or the locations, equipment and splendid acreage of the Selig Jungle Zoo, which adjoins beautiful Eastlake Park. The western studio at Glendale is also very complete. With such studios and a country round about which seems created for motion picture purposes, we certainly will be able to advance our products in every way." No details of the plans of Mr. Selig and Mr. Berst for the immediate future were given, but indications are that the three Selig studios of the Selig Pacific colony are going to become unusually busy places henceforward.

The Chicago studios of the Selig Company are also very active. In the past few months some elaborate picture-plays have been produced there, among them being "A Texas Steer," "The Servant in the House," "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," "The Quarry," with "The Millionaire Baby" in course of production. Other than these great multiple reel features there are ready for release "The Circular Staircase," "The Carpet from Bagdad," and "The Ne'er-Do-Well" is being carried to completion. In order to accommodate the constantly increasing business of the Selig Company, an addition to the Chicago plant is being rushed to completion. This structure will accommodate the developing and printing department, etc.

The Chicago stock company has been added to and such versatile stars as Harry Mestayer, John Charles, Miss Grace Darmond and others are assuming leading roles in Selig Spectacular Specials. Miss Irene Wallace, Harold Howard and other well known artists have been added to the Pacific Coast stock companies.

The million dollar Jungle Zoo, at Los Angeles, will be formally opened in the near future. A special train of Pullmans to be called "The Selig Movie Special," will carry motion picture exhibitors, newspapermen and other friends of the Selig Company to the Coast. William N. Selig, president of the Selig Company, expects to leave soon for Los Angeles where he will personally superintend the final artistic touches to be put on this beautiful institution, which is said to house the finest privately owned collection of wild animals in the world.

Colonel Selig put over another of his shrewd business moves when he engaged Mr. Berst and his assistant, Herbert C. Hoaghland, to help guide the destinies of the Selig Company. Mr. Selig needed rest and relaxation after years of ardous labor, which has resulted in building up the Selig Polyscope Company to one of the most important and artistic enterprises in the world, and he secured the best men in Filmland to aid him in future management.

New offices of the Selig Company will be opened in the Garland Building, Chicago, Ill., early in April. They will be commodious and convenient and much larger than the executive offices now occupied.

Billy Reeves with Lubin.

Famous Vaudeville Artist Now Under the Direction of Arthur D. Hotaling.

BILLY REEVES, widely known as "the original drunk," and one of the funniest comedy acrobats and pantomimists in the country, has joined the Lubin Company and is to be featured in a series of popular comedies under the direction of Arthur D. Hotaling at the Lubin Southern studio in Jacksonville, Fla. In the company that has gone South with Reeves are Billy Potter, Charles Griffiths, Johnnie Doyle, Mary Hartwell, Amy Forrest and Amy Webb. A number of other well-known comedians will join Hotaling's company later.

Reeves has been before the public as an acrobat and pantomimists for twenty-five years, receiving his training in England by being bound over to a master as a youngster and taught everything in the show line from dancing to acrobatic tumbling. When Reeves came to America several years ago he made the entire country laugh with his eccentric tumbling as a drunk in "A Night in an English Music Hall," and he will long be remembered for the famous boxing match he had with Harry Watson in the "Follies of 1908." Reeves also appeared in a number of other farces including "The Jail Birds," "The Smoking Club" and "Too Full for Words." He toured the country in vaudeville and then made a trip around the world playing in Honolulu, Australia, South Africa and on the continent. He was in Brussels when the war broke out and was forced to charter a special boat to get his scenery to England. Previous to his joining the Lubin players, Reeves was playing in the "Midnight Follies" in New York.

Reeves had never played before the camera previous to his coming to the Lubin studio, but his debut was a most successful one, although he had some difficulty at first in confining his eccentric and ludicrous acrobatic work within the cameras' area. It did not take him long, however, to get accustomed to working before the camera under Hotaling's direction and his first two comedies are even funnier than his sketches in vaudeville were. A number of comedies have been written especially for Reeves and these will be made at the Lubin Southern Studio.

ADELE LANE, STAR, JOINS UNIVERSAL RANKS.

Adele Lane is to play leads under the direction of "Mystery Director" Burton King.

Censor Fight at Harrisburg

Extended Hearing Given on the Bill to Repeal the Present Censorship Law—Meeting Largely Attended.

A FULL membership of the Pennsylvania house of representatives and crowded galleries attended the hearing at Harrisburg Tuesday night, March 30, on the bill to repeal the present censorship law in force in the Keystone state. The motion picture interests were represented by J. H. Buttner, of the Mutual Film Exchange, Philadelphia; George W. Bennethum, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Gilbert W. Sahner, chairman of the film men's legislative committee; H. Shwalbe, of the Electric Theater Supply Company, Philadelphia; F. J. Herrington, Pittsburgh; Benn Zerr, president of the Pennsylvania Exhibitors' League, Reading; Frank A Gould, of Reading; Peter Megaro, of Harrisburg; Charles Segall, of Philadelphia. Jacob W. Binder represented the National Board of Censorship of New York, and W. Stephen Bush was present in behalf of the Moving Picture World. There were also a number of exhibitors of Harrisburg and other cities in attendance.

W. H. Wilson, a Philadelphia representative, and chairman of the judiciary committee, opened the proceedings by granting the privilege of the floor to Gilbert W. Sahner, of Pittsburg, chairman of the film men's legislative committee. Mr. Sahner, after a few preliminary remarks, introduced as the first speaker, Samuel F. Wheeler, of Philadelphia. Mr. Wheeler dwelled on the fact that the present law was amply sufficient to deal with objectionable pictures. He pointed out that the eliminations made by the censor were, as a rule, arbitrary and without reason, mentioning a few instances to the point. He called the attention of the house to the fact that short eliminations might often destroy both the artistic and the commercial value of the pictures. The next speaker was Fred J. Harrington, of Pittsburgh, who emphasized in a most eloquent manner the dangers of censorship to free institutions. He was followed by W. Stephen Bush, who pointed out that the experiment of censorship was an old one, that it had been tried out very thoroughly and that it had proven an absolute failure. The present law made no distinction whatever between the dramatic and the educational film, it gave no right of appeal. The speaker laid a good deal of stress on the fact that there never had been any honest, sound, well founded public demand for censorship in Pennsylvania, and he challenged the censor, or any friend of either the censor or the law, to produce proof of a genuine public demand. He elaborated the comparison between the picture and the press, saying that both were mediums of expression and entitled to the same treatment at the hands of the law. The idea of an American commonwealth taxing education and subjecting the educational picture to a previous inspection seemed preposterous and at variance with the genius of the American people. The speaker claimed that there was a very genuine and persistent public demand for the repeal of the law as shown by the recent mass-meeting of the people at the Forrest Theater in Philadelphia.

Only two persons appeared on behalf of the bill. One was a Charles Everly Carpenter, in the leather and oil business. He said he represented both himself and the Kensington manufacturers. The gist of his argument was that the film men had no right to object to censorship as long as he and the Kensington manufacturers did not object to factory inspection. He was a short, stout man, who quickly worked himself into moral frenzy. A lady, who professed suffragette leanings, followed him with a few remarks endorsing state censorship.

The speakers were followed by the showing of parts of "The Silent Plea" and a comedy, which the censor claimed his conscience would not allow him to approve. In the latter, a policeman is hit on the head by a rubber mallet and this, to the censor's mind, was an outrage upon lawful authority.

J. Louis Breitinger, the Censor in Chief, said he had various bits of film which would show how well justified the censorship law was. To this proposed one-sided proceeding the film men objected vigorously. They declared their willingness to show the alleged objectionable films in their entirety. They did not want their case to be judged on manufactured evidence. A lot of excitement followed when this decision of the film men was announced. The members of the Judiciary Committee insisted on seeing the "Cut outs," only and would not consider the proposition to show all of the alleged objectionable films. Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Bush appealed to the committee's sense of fairness, but in vain.

They then declared to the house and to the audience, which by that time were in a state of considerable excitement, that they would under no circumstances submit their case on a one-sided exhibition, whereupon the chairman of the committee declared the session closed.

Vitagraph Theater Program

Two Interesting Features, on the Schedule for the Week of April 4—Three Short Subjects.

TWO decidedly interesting pictures, diametrically opposite in theme and treatment, will constitute the feature part of the Vitagraph theater program for Easter Week, commencing Sunday, April 4th. Of special interest will be the appearance of Sidney Drew in a domestic drama, "Between the Two of Them," written by Shannon Fife and produced under the direction of Mr. Drew. "Between the Two of Them" is a drama of home life and although a radical departure from the kind of screen play in which Mr. Drew is recognized as paramount, his interpretation of a jealous, conceited husband will be a revelation. Supported by Mrs. Drew, Paul Scardon and Courtlandt Van Dusen, Mr. Drew will present one of the most virile, interesting and clean-cut dramatic screen stories yet seen at the Vitagraph theater.

Scene from "The Return of Maurice Donnelly" (Vitagraph).

The second feature, "The Return of Maurice Donnelly," is a powerful preachment against capital punishment and visualizes the story of a man who through circumstantial and perjured evidence, was sentenced, electrically executed and brought back to life. Leo Delaney is seen in the chief role, and, placing himself in the hands of an electrical expert and scientist allowed two million volts of static electricity to pass through his body. As this is the method advocates of resuscitation are working on, a visualization of the experiment is of attractive interest. "The Return of Maurice Donnelly" was written by William Addison Lathrop and produced by William Humphrey with a cast including Mr. Delaney, Leah Baird, Mary Maurice and others.

Of the shorter pictures "His Phanton Sweetheart" the story of a dream girl produced by Ralph W. Ince and presented by Anita Stewart and Earle Williams will attract the most attention although "Strength," a drama by the Western Vitagraph Company, in which a gold miner's quiet exhibition of strength disillusions a city man of his infatuation for the strong man's wife and the comedy, "The Love Whip," a story in which tangled threads of jeolousy are woven into a strong bond of love by two detectives, in which Lillian Walker will be seen in a congenial role, are characteristic Vitagraph pictures.

CABANNE PRODUCING "THE ABSENTEE."

The list of mob participants at the Reliance and Majestic Hollywood studio is increasing daily. They are being utilized in scenes in a number of forthcoming four-reel features from the Griffith studio, chiefly among them W. Christy Cabanne is producing an allegorical four-reel photoplay, "The Absentee," and in it are many scenes of dissatisfied strikers and a good-sized militia to keep them orderly. Jack O'Brien is putting on a picturized version of Richard Harding Davis' "Captain Macklin," and O'Brien in this production is staging a number of thrilling battle scenes. Between O'Brien and Cabanne and their mobs, the Mutual yard is much congested.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Ho For San Francisco

Golden Gate City Selected for the Annual Convention of the National League of Exhibitors. Big time Promised.

ACCORDING to a full page announcement on another page the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held at San Francisco, Cal. This choice of convention cities was made after a careful canvass of the manufacturers and exhibitors of the country, who expressed the desire that the convention be held on the Coast in conjunction with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The date selected for the convention is July 13 to 16 inclusive.

President Marion S. Pearce, of the National League, reports that the vote was overwhelmingly in favor of San Francisco, a general expression of opinion being that if the exhibitors ever held a convention on the Coast now was the time to hold it there, especially because of the International Exposition being held in San Francisco this year.

It is now up to the exhibitors of the country to so arrange their affairs that they will be able to make the trip. Later announcement will be made of special transportation facilities and hotel accommodations for the convention week. These matters are in the hands of a committee of San Francisco exhibitors of which M. E. Cory, Second National Vice-president, is chairman.

Now, altogether: Who's going to San Francisco?

Washington Exhibitors Elect Officers

Interesting Discussion of Trade Subjects at Reorganization Meeting.

CARELESSNESS on the part of exhibitors in the handling of posters was severely condemned by a number of speakers at the meeting of the Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia at which time the complete reorganization of the local association was effected.

The principle business of the meeting was the selection of officers for the ensuing year and as a result the following were elected: Harry M. Crandall, president; Joseph P. Morgan, first vice-president; Thomas Eastwood, second vice-president; Harry P. Moorehead, secretary; Robert H. Campbell, Jr., treasurer; C. J. Bedell, sergeant-at-arms, and Dr. William P. Herbst, Maurice Davis, Mrs. Mark A. Brame, Fulton Brylawski, and A. F. Fox, Jr., members of the board of directors.

The main topic of discussion was that relating to the increasing of admission prices and the charging by several of the local exchanges for paper. In speaking on this subject, Secretary Moorehead stated that it was his understanding that a large number of exhibitors located in the residential sections were considering increasing prices to ten cents for all performances, and that Harry Crandall, operating Crandall's theater, and Thomas Moore, operating the Garden, Strand and other theaters, were contemplating increasing the admission to the houses named to fifteen cents. "I think the moving picture business is in a deplorable condition," he said, "but I also think that it could be placed on a much higher plane by raising the prices of admission. If the exhibitors in the residential sections go to ten cents, the downtown houses will surely go to fifteen. It was my aim in Baltimore, where I was one of the first men to aid in the starting of the league there and was its first chairman, to get the exhibitors together on the ten cent proposition. I have heard it said that the Baltimore exhibitors work together better than the exhibitors in Washington do, but this I do not find, although I am not so familiar with the conditions here. I do know, however, that in Washington the exhibitors are very close together for immediately upon my assuming the management of the Apollo a number of Northeast exhibitors approached me with various propositions which they want to carry out in our neighborhod, all of which are good.

"As a new officer of this branch, I would like to have the exhibitors of Washington get together good and hard that we may make some money in 1915; raise our prices and put our houses and our pictures on a much better standard.

"There is one question that is bothering me to some extent, and this is, why should we pay the film exchanges for our posters? Do we not pay them for their films? Are pictures any good without posters; you cannot run the one without the other? Therefore, it is up to the exchanges when we buy their goods such as their films, to furnish us the necessary paper without cost to us. We should get together and show them that they should do so—they did it last year, then why not this year? Then again, the man who uses thirty-day run pictures wants the same quality of paper that is given the man using first-run pictures. In many cases the man who uses the thirty-day run gets paper that is in a deplorable condition, paper which he is ashamed to place in front of his house. If we must pay for paper, and I do not agree that we should, the price should be along a sliding scale. When we buy a suit of clothes we get a vest; with films we should get paper."

Mr. Crandall announced that he would select the members of the various committees for the year during the coming week and would notify them that they may begin work immediately.

Among those present were Harry M. Crandall, Joseph P. Morgan, Samuel Greenberg, Thomas Eastwood, Harry P. Moorehead, W. S. Wickham, William A. Marceron, Max Byron, Fulton Brylawski, Robert H. Campbell, Jr., C. J. Bedell, Mrs. Mark A. Brame, Miss Sadie P. Cohen, David Byron, Dr. William P. Herbst, Harry P. Tracy, Maurice Davis, Jacob Byron, A. F. Fox, Jr., James Wickham, G. C. Schultz, Norman Luchs, J. Young, W. H. Shippam, and Clarence L. Linz, representing the Moving Picture World.

FLORIDA STATE BRANCH TO HOLD CONVENTION APRIL 4, 5 and 6.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed you will find the invitation that was sent to all Exhibitors of this State which please publish in your magazine. We are holding a Convention April 4th, 5th and 6th at Palatka, and we are confident that this Convention will be the largest yet held in Florida and it will bring this League in class with the other Leagues throughout the country.

Thanking you for past favors and hoping to see you or one of your representatives at the Convention, we are,

Yours very truly,

A. H. LA BELLE, Sec. & Treas.

OKLAHOMA CENSOR BILL DEAD.

The following telegram was received by the Moving Picture World on March 25:

"You are advised that House Bill 161 died in the hands of the Senate Judiciary Committee No. 2."
—JOE S. MORRIS.

Mr. Morris is secretary of the Oklahoma Senate and House! Bill 161 was a particularly vicious measure—the worst of its kind—calculated to impose a most rigorous censorship upon pictures and theaters.

CINEMA CAMERA CLUB ELECTION.

Two complete tickets were nominated to be voted on at the election of the Cinema Camera Club, West 46th street, New York, on April 5th. The ballot of the official nominating committee reads: For president, A. H. Moses, Jr.; 1st vice-president, Arthur Edeson; 2nd vice-president, A. Lloyd Lewis; treasurer, John Arnold; financial secretary, Philip E. Rosen; Corresponding secretary, Harry L. Keepers; recording secretary, Al Ansbacker; sergeant-at-arms, George W. Coudert; guide, Eugene Cugnet.

The opposition ticket reads: For president, Al Moses; 1st vice-president, Ed Waynard; 2nd vice-president, Lloyd Lewis; treasurer, John Arnold; financial secretary, Phil Rosen; corresponding secretary, Harry Keepers; recording secretary, Al Ansbacker; sergeant-at-arms, George Coudert; guide, Eugene Cugnet.

Bernstein Resigns

Universal's West Coast Manager Gives Up Position at Universal City—New Managerial Policy to be Tried.

FOLLOWING so closely upon the heels of the successful opening of Universal City, the big motion picture producing plant of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company near Los Angeles, Cal., the news that Isadore Bernstein had resigned his position of manager for that company on March 30, came as a distinct surprise. When the information was received at the office of the Moving Picture World, inquiry was made at once at the offices of the Universal Company, but beyond confirming the bare fact, nothing further was known at the company's headquarters.

Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Powers are at Universal City, and at their request George Magie, the general "trouble man" of the Universal, was instructed to proceed to Los Angeles at once to take charge until definite arrangements could be made in the way of securing a permanent manager of the plant.

In the meantime it has been announced that a new policy has been adopted for the management of the West Coast producing companies. Five managers have been appointed, who will look after the several companies of players as follows: Beverly Griffith is business manager for Christie, Lyons, Allen Curtis & Francis Ford; Stanley Twist for Degrasse, Giblyn and Turner; Don Meaney for Ayers, McRea and Bosworth; Marshall Stedman for Lloyd, MacQuarrie and Miss Gauntier, and Charles V. Henkel for Smalleys, Leonard, King and Lon Chaney.

"Judith of Bethulia" Increases in Popularity

Receipts from the Second Edition are Greater than Those from the First, Released a Year Ago.

BIOGRAPH'S "Judith of Bethulia" is making a remarkable record in this, the second year of its run. It was released in February, 1914, and if figures speak the truth, it is a more popular picture to-day than it was a year ago. There is no more significant example of the building power of a strong production.

When first released, the superior quality of "Judith of Bethulia" was admitted by all who saw it; but not a few exhibitors, unable to view the film, concluded from the title that it was a dry, Biblical subject and hesitated on that account. Gradually it became noised abroad that "Judith" was a genuinely popular attraction, strong in the human interest of the story as well as its scenic magnificence. Exhibitors who had been skeptical, decided to give the production a trial, and after the trial, a large percentage of them wanted to run the picture a second time; but they did not care to use a worn print.

The Biograph Company has on file more than 250 letters from exhibitors asking for a second, third, fourth and in one instance, a fifth booking of "Judith." Requests for fresh copies were so numerous that recently all of the old prints were called in and a second edition of 50 copies was substituted. The surprising result is that with the rental price cut in half, the receipts are greater now than they were a year ago. In addition to the 50 prints in America, 61 others are going the rounds of foreign countries, for the subtitles of "Judith" have been translated into the language of every country that supports a motion picture theater.

A striking illustration of the picture's ability to repeat was furnished during the past week when three exhibitors in the Bronx, two of them drawing from the same neighborhood, made it their feature attraction for the second time. At the Empire theater, on Westchester avenue, a handsome photoplay building seating 2,000, the film was preceded by appropriate music given by a boy choir, an unusual idea very well carried out. Another Bronx theater adopted the same plan on the following evening. From present indications, the second edition of "Judith of Bethulia" will be in demand for many months.

"FALSTAFF"—NEW THANHOUSER BRAND.

The Thanhouser Film Corporation, beginning Friday, April 16th, will inaugurate a new brand of single reel comedies. They will be released under the designation "Falstaff."

A single reel comedy bearing the Falstaff brand will be released every Friday in the Mutual program, and will replace the Princess dramas, formerly a Mutual Friday release. The Princess brand will be discontinued until further notice.

The name of the first Falstaff release is "The Actor and the Rube," a quaintly amusing farce with a distinctly clever and original turn to it. It will be followed on Friday, April 23d, by "The Handicap of Beauty."

UNIVERSAL TO START BEAUTY CONTEST.

Arrangements are being made with leading newspapers to conduct in conjunction with the Universal Film Mfg. Co. a nation-wide beauty contest whereby the most beautiful girl in each state will be chosen by popular vote, coupons being published in the papers for this purpose. The winners will be given a trip to Universal City, Cal., the home of the Universal Pacific coast studios, where they will be entertained for one week. They will also be offered side trips to the San Diego and Panama-Pacific Expositions at the Universal's expense. A committee of artists will select one from the number for a permanent position with a Universal company, and an opportunity to become a star.

The following newspapers already have agreed to conduct the beauty contest for the Universal: New York World, Boston Herald and Traveler, Oklahoma City (Okla.) Oklahoman, Minneapolis (Minn.) News, Phoenix (Ariz.) Gazette, Salt Lake City (Utah) Herald-Republican, Fort Smith (Ark.) Times-Record, Philadelphia (Pa.) Telegraph, Indianapolis (Ind.) Indiana Times, Cleveland (Ohio) Leader, Buffalo (N. Y). Enquirer, Wilmington (Del.) Star, Louisville (Ky.) Post, Washington (D. C.) Times, Baltimore (Md.) News, Seattle (Wash.) Times, Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press, Richmond (Va.) Journal, Vancouver (B. C.) Daily World, Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution, Providence (R. I.) Tribune and Cincinnati (Ohio) Post.

SUING ON LATHAM LOOP PATENT.

The Motion Picture Patents Company has begun suits under its Latham Loop patent against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Universal Film Exchange of New York and the Prague Amusement Company, and also against the Greater New York Film Rental Company and the William Fox Amusement Company.

The Universal Film Exchange of New York handles motion pictures produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and the Prague Amusement Company is one of its customers. The William Fox Amusement Company is a customer of the Greater New York Film Rental Company.

The complaint in the first suit was filed on March 18 and in the suit against the Greater New York Film Rental Company on March 29. The suits are in the usual form for an injunction restraining the further infringement of the patent and for an accounting of profit and damages, and allege that the defendants in each suit have been jointly infringing the patent.

MURIEL OSTRICHE JOINS VITAGRAPH PLAYERS.

The newest addition to the forces of the Vitagraph Company is Miss Muriel Ostriche, who began work Monday, March 22. Miss Ostriche will be seen in a number of roles that are distinctly different from any work she has done previously. Her first appearance for the Vitagraph Company will be in a three reel feature.

Miss Ostriche recently was stricken blind while at work on a film, and for a time it was feared that she would never recover her sight, but she is now prepared for active work. She has made quite a reputation for daring, among her feats of bravery before the camera being a climb across a twenty-five foot chasm, three hundred feet in the air on a narrow strip of board. Miss Ostriche also spent twenty minutes in a cage with a tiger for a picture and she discribes it as one of her most harrowing experiences. The young lady has been before the public for three years.

THREE LASKY RELEASES IN APRIL.

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. will release three feature productions of unusual importance during April. On the very first day of the month Rita Jolivet in "The Unafraid," with House Peters, will be shown to the public for the first time; on April 12 Blanche Sweet will make her second Lasky appearance in "The Captive"; and on April 22 Victor Moore will make his photodramatic debut under Lasky management in the picturization of "Snobs."

AMERICAN STUDIOS AGAIN EXPAND.

President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company has closed a deal for the purchase of a plot of ground adjoining the present holdings of the American studios at Santa Barbara, California. The property covers a quarter block to the north of the studio and will be improved at once to meet the growing demands for increased facilities. By the purchase of this property the American Film Manufacturing Company has become the largest individual tax payer in the city.

Motion Pictures Interest Photographers

International Exposition of Photographic Arts at Grand Central Palace Gives Considerable Space to Kinematography.

THE exposition of photographic arts and industries which held forth at the Grand Central Palace, New York, from March 27 to April 3, gave quite some attention to kinematography. There were a number of dealers in motion picture cameras and projectors represented and the discussions of the members of the trade took some cognizance of pictures in motion. The attendance during the afternoon and evening of each day was good and much interest was shown in the displays.

SELIG'S SECOND ATHLETIC PICTURE.

The second release of the Selig Athletic series will be made Monday, April 12. Willie Ritchie, the lightweight boxing champion, will be shown in training and physical culture exercises. Baadr LeVilla, the trick bicycle rider, will be presented in feats of skill. William Demetral, the Greek wrestler, will meet William Berve, the Russian giant, in a match to a finish. The second release is even more interesting and instructive, if that were possible, than the first. The training demonstrations given by William Ritchie, in which his wonderful endurance and alertness are presented, is alone of great interest. There is nothing at all offensive in these motion pictures of the world's leading athletes. They convey a lesson and encourage interest in physical culture which means clean living.

NEW YORK HIPPODROME TAKES WORLD COMEDY STARS.

Phil Gleichman, president of the Comedy-Star, and S. J. Berman, manager of the New York office of the World Film Corporation, are more elated than ever over the results produced by the Comedy Star releases. Following swiftly upon the heels of the order from the Strand Theater to run the comedies came a contract from the New York Hippodrome, also calling for the output. Inasmuch as these theaters are the finest in the United States, it is a decided compliment to the worth of the Comedy-Star pictures. The Strand, a theater seating 3,300, had been running another well-known comedy brand, and it would have required a brand of exceptional merit to break in on them.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SECURE ASTOR THEATER.

It is authoritatively announced that by arrangement with Messrs. Cohan & Harris, the Famous Players Film Company will present at the Astor Theater, Broadway and Forty-fifth street, for an indefinite engagement, beginning April 12, its much discussed superb photo-spectacle, "The Eternal City," by Hall Caine, produced with Pauline Frederick in Italy and England under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford. This arrangement was consummated through the Select Film Booking Agency, recently organized to distribute "The Eternal City" and a series of selected film attractions to follow to theaters equipped to present extraordinary motion picture offerings for long runs.

TRUSTEE FOR ALCO.

At a meeting of the creditors of the Alco Film Corporation of New York, held at the office of Stanley W. Dexter, referee in bankruptcy, 71 Broadway, New York, on March 25, Arthur Butler Graham was selected as trustee, with M. H. Goldsmith as attorney. It is believed that this arrangement will be for the best interests of the creditors.

NEW MUTUAL EXCHANGE.

On April 1, 1915, The Mutual Film Corporation opened a branch exchange at 420 Penn Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. The exchange is under the management of Sydney E. Abel. It will handle Mutual releases exclusively, beginning with the issues of April 1 and thereafter.

Viola Allen With Essanay

VIOLA ALLEN, the famous actress, after years of success on the legitimate stage, playing leading classical, Shakespearian and comedy roles, has decided to make her debut in photoplays. She has been engaged by Essanay at an enormous salary and soon will start the production of "The White Sister," the novel by F. Marion Crawford. The dramatization of the novel will be filmed by Essanay at the Chicago studios.

Viola Allen.

Viola Allen is declared by photoplay experts to be an excellent photographic subject, and with her beauty and genius in acting, there is no question but that she will make a phenomenal success in photoplay work. "The White Sister" will be one of Essanay's great multiple reel special features and bids fair to surpass any drama yet screened.

Miss Allen needs no introduction to the public, having had a long and successful stage career. She made her debut in Boston in "Esmeralda" at the age of fifteen. She played leading roles with Joseph Jefferson, Lawrence Barrett, Tommaso Salvini and William J. Florence. She starred in Hall Caine's "The Christian" and "The Eternal City." Later she took up Shakespearian plays, reviving the old English classics.

BROOKE WILL DIRECT COSTELLO.

An important announcement by the Vitagraph Company that will be of interest to moving picture patrons is the lately rejoined Maurice Costello-Van Dyke Brooke combination in which Mr. Costello will be seen in pictures directed by Mr. Brooke. Mr. Costello is giving up directing that he may devote all his time to the interpretation of characters. It is two years since these two gentlemen worked together in such Vitagraph successes as "My Old Dutch," "The Adventures of a Retired Army Colonel," "A Romance of Wall Street," "For the Honor of the Family," etc., and the experience gained during the two years in which they worked independently will add materially to the quality of their work in the forthcoming pictures.

HULSEY USES NOVEL AD.

E. H. Hulsey, that well known Texas exhibitor, who has fathered many unusual advertising schemes, was sponsor for one used recently in the exploitation of George Kleine's "The Woman Who Dared," as successful as it was original. The leading character in the story wears a black mask in most of her big scenes, so Mr. Hulsey found a splendid likeness in build and appearance, dressed her in a black evening gown with a black silk mask, rented an open carriage with a coachman and footman in full livery and announced a parade route in the newspapers. Black silk blankets on the horses were lettered in gold, "See the mysterious woman in the black mask at the Old Mill Theater." The idea was a genuine novelty in Dallas and proved a winner for Hulsey. The fact that horses and carriages are almost obsolete in the southwest made their use a sensation in itself.

WALKER WHITESIDE IN "THE MELTING POT."

Walker Whiteside, the famous Broadway star, has but recently been lured away from the footlights to play the leading role in "The Melting Pot," a new special feature, which is being produced at the Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, New Jersey, by the J. Cort Film Company. "The Melting Pot" met with great success some years ago at the Comedy Theater, New York City, where it played for one season, and with the help of Mr. Whiteside, who played the leading part, its picturization is expected to meet with the same universal popularity.

Progress of Bosworth--Morosco.

Recapitulation of the Accomplishments of This Enterprising Concern Since Its Organization.

THE activity displayed by Bosworth, Incorporated, of Los Angeles, since its formation some eighteen months ago, together with the unusual success of the individual releases of this concern since its first offering, has placed it among the prominent producers of this country today.

On August 8th, 1913, Bosworth, Inc., made its debut in the film world, selecting to produce as its maiden effort the red-blooded story of "The Sea Wolf," by Jack London, with whom a contract had been made giving the producers the sole film rights to all his books that had been published to date and all future works. The success of this picture when presented to the public is a matter of film history. It fully substantiated the policy of Bosworth, Inc., to present pictures with unusual faithfulness to detail and opened up a new era for the industry, as "The Sea Wolf" was the first feature play of seven reels to be produced up to that time in this country. After the initial release came in rapid succession "John Barleycorn," which has caused so much talk on account of the moral it depicts so truly and which has since been accepted by temperance societies all over the country and Canada as an important factor in furthering their fight against alcohol; "The Valley of the Moon," a story replete with beautiful scenes and stirring climaxes, through which runs a charming love story, and which is now being shown as part of Socialistic campaigns; "Marten Eden," a story of an inspiring writer's trials and tribulations during the period of the San Francisco earthquake.

Oliver Morosco.

The realistic manner in which Bosworth, Inc., presents its subjects is one of the chief reasons for its success and in the cases of these films, considerable traveling on the part of large companies at great expense was necessary in order to maintain this company's policy for realism.

The above features were released through the Progressive Motion Picture Co. on state rights and carried the producers up to the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, composed of Bosworth, Inc., Famous Players and the Lasky Company.

"Odyssey of the North," the gripping story of "Naas of Akatan," was the first release on the Paramount Program and broke records for attendance in most theaters where it was shown. Its success was due to the continuance of the policy of "realism" and "types." Then followed "Burning Daylight," another Jack London subject of the frozen North; "Pursuit of the Phantom," a story of a poor artist and a rich man's pursuit of happiness and "The Country Mouse," a rural society drama in which love and politics are happily blended.

On August 1st, 1914, Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, two of the most versatile and capable stars of the film world, joined the Bosworth forces. Their first production was "The Traitor" followed by the wonderful creation of "Hypocrites," which is at present creating a sensation throughout the country. Then came "False Colors" with Mr. and Mrs. Smalley, followed by "It's No Laughing Matter," a rural comedy featuring Maclyn Arbuckle, the Broadway star. "Buckshot John," by Charles Van Loan, and "Caprices of Kitty," presenting Elsie Janis in motion pictures for the first time, came next.

On November 9th, 1914, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., was organized with Oliver Morosco, president; Frank A. Garbutt, vice-president, Melodile Garbutt, secretary, and Charles Eyton, treasurer, for the purpose of producing for the screen, in association with Bosworth, Inc., the successful plays of Mr. Morosco and his associates.

The latest release of Bosworth, Inc., is "Sunshine Molly," which broke all records for attendance at its opening showing at the Broadway theater, New York City. Some of the feature photoplays soon to be released are "Pretty Mrs. Smith," produced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., with vivacious Fritzi Scheff in the title role; "Captain Courtesy," a romantic story of California during the Mexican regime, with Dustin Farnum in the leading role; "Little Sunset," a Charlie Van Loan baseball story, and "Help Wanted," Jack Lait's play with an all-star cast headed by Lois Meredith and produced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.

The studio is located at 201 North Occidental Boulevard, in the heart of the Wiltshire residential section and is modern in every respect, being built of reinforced concrete with the main stage, 90 by 150 feet, covered with a glass roof; two tiers of dressing rooms facing the stage, etc., the laboratory is complete and up-to-date, absolutely fireproof and has a capacity of twenty thousand feet a day. Deeds were just passed whereby the concern doubles its ground space and building permits have been issued for additional store room, scene docks, paint frames, etc. A new stage measuring 60 by 90 is just being completed and work in connection with various new additions is rapidly progressing.

Among other important announcements given out by the Bosworth, Inc., offices recently is one involving the acquisition of Oscar Apfel, the well-known director to the producing staff. Mr. Apfel was formerly with Pathe, Reliance, Majestic and Edison and has been directly responsible for the success of such Lasky productions as "The Squaw Man," "Cameo Kirby," "The Ghost Breaker," "Master Mind" and others.

Mr. Morosco has just returned to the studio bringing with him several new contracts covering rights on plays and stars, on which work will be taken up immediately.

"Diamond From the Sky" Company.

Lottie Pickford Heads a Competent Cast of Principals—Director Jaccard in Charge.

DIRECTOR JACQUES JACCARD now has all his "Diamond from the Sky" company in harness. Lottie Pickford, sister of "Lovely Mary," was the last of the all-star cast to reach the "Flying A" studios at Santa Barbara and get into make up. It will be a matter of working day and night from now on and all the principals are anxious to have Director Jaccard set a hard schedule. He has. This latest of big continued photoplays, the scenario of which brought the lucky author $10,000, will have a tremendously strong cast. Playing opposite Miss Pickford will be Irving Cummings, than whom no actor on the screen is better or more favorably known.

Then there will be 'Big Bill" Russell, whose more polite name is William, Charlotte Burton, George Periolat, lately leading man to J. Warren Kerrigan, Eugenie Forde, Orra Humphrey, W. J. Tedmarsh and Lillian Buckingham. Director Jaccard's watchword is "Let's go" and it is echoed throughout the company with the result that no camera ever was turned on a more enthusiastic aggregation of players than the one which S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, has put into this $20,000 prize picture novel.

In addition to the $10,000 for the scenario a similar amount will be awarded to the person who submits the best suggestion for a sequel to the present story. This picture will have its first release May 3.

FRED HOLDERMAN WITH UNITED.

General Manager J. C. Graham of the United Film Service has secured the services of W. F. Holderman, who has just taken up his duties as manager of the New York Distributing office of the United program.

Fred Holderman is a pioneer of the film business having been identified with different exchanges in Manhattan since the early days of motion picture history. For several years he was connected with the Twenty-third Street branch of the General Film Company dating back to the Actograph Company of 17th Street, which was finally absorbed by the General. Mr. Holderman was transferred to 23d Street as a necessary part of the Actograph equipment, and has been active in film circles from that address ever since. His friends in the world of filmdom are legion and are vieing with each other to wish him well in his new managerial capacity.

Jacques Spiegel, former manager of the United's New York Exchange, is perfecting plans to establish an exchange business of his own, about which he will have an interesting announcement to make in the near future.

"An Indian Diamond"

A New Frank Crane Production With an All-star Cast Including Robert Warwick, Barbara Tennant, Vivian Martin and William Roselle.

Frank Crane, the World Film producer, whose recent successes with Alice Brady in "As Ye Sow," and Lew Fields in "Old Dutch," and Robert Warwick in "The Man Who Found Himself," have placed him in the very front rank of motion picture directors with a sure grip of the dramatic possibilities of a theme that is handed him to state, is at work on "An Indian Diamond."

Frank Crane.

Frank is letting himself go for all he is worth on a congenial and inspiring script. He plans to make his production in all respects worthy of his author, and of World Film—for Crane is a loyal director as well as a capable one.

A free hand has been conceded to Crane in the vital manner of his cast for "An Indian Diamond," and he is taking full advantage of it. Robert Warwick, the handsome, virile, and gifted actor who has won fame in the World Film successes "The Man of the Hour"; "The Dollar Mark"; Alias Jimmy Valentine," and "The Man Who Found Himself," will be Crane's lead.

Vivian Martin.

Vivian Martin, the bewitching and piquant little beauty of "The Wishing Ring," "Old Dutch," and "The Arrival of Perpetua," is also cast. Miss Martin's grace, winsomeness and and ability have made her a tremendous screen favorite and she always delights the spectator's sense of sight in a picture.

Barbara Tennant, the heroine of innumerable Eclair and World Film successes, is also in the cast. Miss Tennant's style of beauty and acting forms an effective contrast to that of Miss Martin, and the two ladies will impart an unparalleled attraction to the film.

Robert Warwick.

William Roselle, an actor with a long list of stage successes to his name, is also cast in "An Indian Diamond."

The release date of "An Indian Diamond" will be announced in due course. Meantime, it is sufficient to feel assured that with such a striking combination of Wilkie Collins, Robert Warwick, Vivian Martin, Barbara Tennant and William Roselle, the popular Frank Crane will give us a picture that will please and enthral exhibitors and the public.

World Film policy in respect of its productions is a generous, nay, a lavish one. Directors are not stinted in money or time. "Go ahead and make the best pictures you can. We want the public to have the best that money and brains can produce. The best is none too good either for World Film or exhibitors."

World Film Promotes S. J. Berman

"THE fine Italian hand" of Lewis J. Selznick moves stealthily among the great organization of which he is the respected head. No sooner does a World Film worker make good and merit promotion, than Selznick's eye is on him, and at the right moment he is sent for and given increased responsibilities in a better job.

S. J. Berman.

Mr. Berman, in the few months that he managed the splendid New York Exchange on 46th street, has shown such intelligence, urbanity and administrative ability both in his office and among the exhibitors of his territory, that he has been given even a better chance to distinguish himself. He has been appointed Eastern district manager of the World Film Corporation.

World Film divides its territory into divisions: West, East, Central, South. Each district manager has jurisdiction over the branch offices of his territory. Thus Mr. Berman will control the offices at New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Washington.

Mr. Berman knows the film business intimately. Though young in years, he has held several responsible positions in filmdom. He has an agreeable personality and is animated by progressive ideas.

Mr. Berman's successor in the management of the New York exchange is Mr. Ben S. Cohen, whose film experience was chiefly gained in Kansas City and on the Pacific Coast. Berman is a hard man to follow, so Ben will have to "go some." But they know how to hustle up there on 46th street and how to make others hustle.

LIFE-PHOTO THROUGH PARAMOUNT.

As a result of the western trip made by Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary of the Life-Photo Film Corporation, the productions of Life Photo will be handled through Paramount exchanges. The number of feature pictures placed on the market will be increased from one to two a month beginning in May. According to present plans this schedule will hold until the first of next year when releases will be further multiplied to one a week.

MILDRED ADAMS WITH UNIVERSAL.

Mildred Adams, whose work on the legitimate stage has earned for her an enviable reputation as an actress, this week forsook the speaking stage to join the ranks of the screen actors at Universal City. Her first work under the Universal banner is with Frank Lloyd and his company of Laemmle players in the production of a one-reel society drama, entitled "The Turn."

GEORGE KLEINE TO PRODUCE "THE SPENDTHRIFT."

George Kleine announces that he has acquired the film rights to the drama "The Spendthrift" by Porter Emerson Browne. Work has been started with Irene Fenwick and Cyril Keightley in the principal roles.

WHARTONS BUY LLOYD DEMAREST STORIES.

Wharton, Inc., announce the purchase of the picture rights to the great Lloyd Demarest detective stories written by Fred Jackson. These stories they will probably begin to film sometime this summer.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Chicago's Progress Shown in Pictures.

MOVING PICTURES produced by the Chicago plan commission, showing Chicago as it was, as it is now, and what it should be in the future, is creating great interest not only in this city, but throughout the country. The film has been fittingly called "A Tale of One City," and it has been planned to have it shown at the opening exhibition in the Illinois Building at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Arrangements were also made by which this reel of pictures will be shown during the current week at the Majestic Theater, Chicago's leading vaudeville house. The first presentation was given at the Majestic Monday evening, March 29, before a large and distinguished audience.

"Chicago is getting ready for her destiny—the world's greatest mercantile center," were the words shown on the screen before "A Tale of One City" was run off. The large audience was enthusiastic in cheering these words and the pictures. The fine civic mood of the audience found expression in "Hail Chicago," a civic song composed by Angus S. Hibbard. Mr. Hibbard led the singing, assisted by members of the Apollo Club.

The first stanza reads as follows:

Hail Chicago! Hail to thee,
City of our destiny,
While within thy gates we dwell
May we live to serve thee well, Chicago!

The story told by the pictures begins with views of Chicago in 1834. Following these, in strong contrast, was a view of State and Madison Streets at the present time, "the most crowded corner in the world."

Pictures of "assured improvements," which are now under way, as compared with present-day conditions, revealed even more striking contrasts.

State and city officials and representatives of all the principal clubs and civic organizations filled the theater.

"A Tale of One City" will be also booked throughout the city and country.

"The Birth of a Nation" Passed in Chicago.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown in Chicago without a single foot of film being cut out. Notwithstanding the widespread discussion over these films in New York, where some of the members of the National Board of Censors refused to give their sanction to the running of the pictures without certain excisions, Griffith's big photoplay will be shown in its entirety here.

Not even the Chicago Board of Censors were permitted to use their cutting implements in this instance. Mrs. Carter H. Harrison and Charles Fitzmorris, the mayor's secretary, passed on the films, and the secretary reported to Major Funkhouser that they should be shown in their entirety. This official indorsement by the mayor's secretary assured the presentation of the films in this city without mutilation.

It is said that "The Birth of a Nation" will open soon at the Illinois theater, where "Cabiria" had its big run, at $2 prices.

Leading "Sue" Contestants Show No Fear of Camera.

There has been a lull in the excitement of the "Sue" contest ever since Miss Dorothy Warshauer carried off that $200 diamond ring and the honor of impersonating the leading character in the "Sue" photoplay that will be produced by Essanay. But interest has again been awakened by the announcement that the winner of the contest and her nine nearest competitors were out at the Essanay plant Thursday morning, March 25, to meet Director Wallace Beery, who has been assigned the task of producing the "Sue" photoplay.

The girls were carefully coached on the mysteries and dangers of appearing before the stern eye of the camera, and taught that bashfulness, which forbids gazing at the eye from the front, was a virtue devoutly to be practiced, and also that self-consciousness was an abhorrent thing. Director Beery was so pleased with the aptness of the aspirants for screen fame that he fairly made them blush by his words of praise.

"I have never worked with girls who showed such adaptability," Mr. Beery said. "Miss Warshauer, especially, is quick and has never once looked at the camera. Most beginners, you know," Mr. Beery added, "insist upon looking directly into the camera, and spoil more films than we ordinarily use in a whole production."

The opening scenes will be taken in the office of the photoplay editor of the Herald, after which an exterior view of the Herald Building will be taken, with appropriate action on the part of the characters in the cast. The production will be finished the week ending Saturday, April 3, and the film will be released as soon after as possible, so that the many thousands who voted for the favorites will be able to see them on the screen without delay.

Orchestra Hall Leased for a Season of Moving Pictures.

The Strand Theater Company, the leading members of which are E. C. Divine, A. J. Pardridge and J. C. Interrieden, all prominent Chicago capitalists, have leased Orchestra Hall, this city, for a period of five months, in order to give Chicagoans a "grand opera season" in moving pictures. At least the announcement made concerning the enterprise claims that much.

The announcement also furnishes the information that continuous programs of exclusive Paramount service will be offered, and that a symphony orchestra of twenty-five pieces will furnish the accompanying music and play selections during the intervals of the presentations.

The stage of Orchestra Hall is being remodeled and beautified for the opening, which will take place on or about May 1. The prices for matinee exhibitions will be 25 and 10 cents, and for evenings 10 to 50 cents.

The managing director and secretary is Edward Q. Cordner, who has been identified with several New York amusement enterprises.

Essanay Players Off to the South.

Fifteen Essanay players left for the South last week to engage in the making of several special feature photoplays which require a Southern atmosphere. The scenes will be taken at the exact points which occur in the stories in order to create realism.

The first stop will be made at Chattanooga, Tenn., and the players will afterwards travel to other points in the South as the special scenes may require. This first company will return in about four weeks and another will be immediately sent from Chicago to the South. This system will be followed for several months, until all the features are finished.

Among those in the first company are Director E. H. Calvert, Byrant Washburn, Lillian Drew, Mabel Forrest, John Cossar, Grant Foreman, Eugene Acker, Bertram Bates, Betty Scott, May Skinner, Jack Meridith and Charles E. Ashley.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Invitations have been received at this office to attend the premier showing of "The Lady of the Snows" at the Keystone Theater, 3912 Sheridan Road, on Tuesday evening, April 6. This three-reel feature has been adapted from Mrs. Carter H. Harrison's novel of that name, and has been produced by Essanay. Mayor and Mrs. Carter H. Harrison and a party of friends will attend, and a notable gathering is expected by Charles J. Schaefer, proprietor of the handsome Keystone house.

Fritzi Scheff, in "Pretty Mrs. Smith" and "The Pageant of San Francisco," will be the screen attractions at the Ziegfeld for the current week.

Miss Jeannette Connell scored wide-spread publicity one day last week by averting a panic at the Bijou Theater, 304 S. Halsted Street, this city. A fire started in the rear of the house about noon Wednesday, March 24, and George Weinberg, manager, went before the curtain and quietly announced the fact to the patrons, whom he urged to make an orderly exit. The smoke was pouring into the theater, and those present became panic-stricken. Miss Connell, the pianist, seeing the danger, immediately began to play "Tipperary," and the crowd was quieted and made their exits without accident. Miss Connell was almost overcome by the smoke when the house was emptied, and had to be assisted to the open air.

I met George H. Hines, who is now running the Auditorium, South Bend, Ind., one day last week, and he fairly bubbled over with enthusiasm while relating the great success attending the reception given Miss Ruth Stonehouse at the Auditorium, Thursday, March 18. This popular Essanay actress was invited to attend on this occasion, the program presented including "The Wood Nymph," in which Miss Stonehouse plays the lead, and also George Ade's fable, "The Divine Spark That Had a Short Circuit," in which she also plays the leading role. The films showed the clever little actress in strong dramatic work, comedy and in terpsichorean numbers. Over 6,000 people attended during the day, and the freedom of the city was granted Miss Stonehouse. The local press club met her at the station and entertained her at a reception dinner at the Oliver Hotel. Miss Stonehouse made quite a hit by the neat little speeches she made while on the stage, and she was repeatedly encored.

J. T. May, formerly owner of the only moving picture theater in Ochoelata, Okla., paid us a call last week. When asked for the name of the theater he advised us it had none, and that the patrons referred to it simply as the "picture house." He stated that L. W. Brophy purchased the Odeon Theater, in Bartlesville, Okla., a short time ago, and is doing well. The Odeon seats 970 people. Mr. May hopes to remain in Chicago, where he intends either to secure a position as manager of a house or to buy a half interest in a house well located.

Luman C. Mann, moving picture lecturer, has entered on an engagement of about twelve weeks in Canada to lecture on the Williamsons' submarine pictures. Two weeks will be spent in Winnipeg at the Walker Theater, and after that the Grand Theater, Edmonton, Alberta; the Empire Theater, Calgary, and others will be visited.

An invitation exhibition of "The Eternal City" will be given at the Studebaker Theater, Thursday evening, April 1. This special invitation presentation will be given at the instance of Daniel Frohman, who has given much personal attention to the production of this great feature. It was produced under the direction of Edwin S. Porter, producing manager of the Famous Players Film Co. and of Hugh Ford, formerly stage director for the Liebler Co. A large and fashionable audience is assured and the occasion promises to be a very notable one in the moving picture life of the city. A souvenir program of the presentation will be given every one in attendance. The affair will be under the management of Messrs. Jones, Linick and Schaefer.

Salisbury's "Wild Life" moving pictures will be seen for the last time at the Studebaker on Wednesday night, March 31.

Mysterious Feature, Mysterious Part

HOBART HENLEY, Imp star, has been allotted the star part in an Imp feature that has just been started and the nature of which is not disclosed by the studio. Nor is the nature of Mr. Henley's part. It is the lengthiest Imp to ever be made, being one reel longer than Imp's famous "Traffic in Souls," and is expected to create a similar nationwide sensation, the tip states.

Mr. Henley was born in Louisville, Ky., where he first attended school. Later he moved to Cincinnati, O., where he completed his preparatory schooling, and then went to the University of Cincinnati. During his course at college he achieved considerable distinction as an athlete; incidentally, he was one of the football stars of the institution.

Hobart Henley.

However, during all this time the theatrical bee had been buzzing in Mr. Henley's ear, and when an opportunity for joining a traveling stock company presented itself he snapped it up. That was eight years ago. In the stock company he made rapid strides toward success, and a year later he was playing an important part in one of David Belasco's road shows. For five years after he played prominent roles in many legitimate successes.

It was two years ago that Mr. Henley first secured picture experience. It was with the Reliance Company. A few months later he joined the Imp, where he has since remained.

Lois Meredith in Lasky Feature.

MISS LOIS MEREDITH, the dainty Broadway dramatic favorite who made a sensational hit in "Help Wanted," has signed a contract for the role of the telephone operator in the Lasky-Belasco picturization of William V. De Mille's famous modern drama, "The Woman." The cast for this production is now of truly all-star calibre, including with Miss Meredith such noted artists as Theodore Roberts, Mabel Van Buren, and James Neill. Other players, in addition to these, are Ernest Joy, Raymond Hatton, Tom Forman, Helen Hill and Dr. Bietel.

Lois Meredith.

The very notable success of "The Woman" when first produced by David Belasco in New York City is still within recent memory, and by many people this has been held to be the most absolutely convincing and absorbing of the dramas on modern American topics ever offered by the wizard of the stage. The plot concerns a big political fight in Congress, and the efforts which the representatives of the predatory railroad interests make to discredit the reformer who is opposing them by involving his name with that of a woman. The heroine of the story is really the little telephone operator who refuses all bribes when asked to betray another of her sex. In the end, the trap that has been set for the reformer catches not him but the very political boss who has originated the idea, and thus justice is meted out appropriately.

MANY THRILLS IN LUBIN FEATURES.

Two of the costliest and most sensational reels of film ever made were shown at a private exhibition at the Lubin studio in Philadelphia this week. The reels consisted entirely of spectacular big punches that have been used in Lubin productions during the past few years and are the first two of a series that are to be made, not for release, but as a sort of catalog of spectacular climaxes which are to be kept on record at the Lubin laboratories at Betzwood, Pa.

Perhaps the biggest punch of the punches in the two reels is the wrecking of two trains which Lubin especially staged for one of his dramas. One sees the two trains smash together head on, but there is no opportunity for mental recovery, for right after it a big bridge is dynamited in a thousand different directions; then an automobile plunges into a river from a high cliff, followed by the burning of a steam yacht and its disappearance under the surface. In rapid order the thrills follow. Boats, trains, automobiles, buildings of all sorts and descriptions are burned, dynamited and wrecked. There are daring rescues, wild mob scenes, spectacular fights and daring stunts by Lubin players on the earth, in the air and on the sea, and when one hastily asks oneself what else could possibly be done for sensation, a mountain is blown up and a mining town is wiped out of existence.

BEAUTY COMPANY'S NEW STAR.

The assignment of Miss Neva Gerber as the new leading lady of the American Beauty Company has added a delightful character to this already talented company of players. Miss Gerber is a proficient actress with experience on both the screen and speaking stage, which qualifies her for important roles and her playing opposite Webster Campbell will form a very pleasing combination.

BEN GOETZ LEAVES CRYSTAL.

Ben Goetz has resigned his position as general manager of the Crystal Film Company, which resignation takes effect Saturday, April 3. He will take a short vacation and will announce his plans for the future shortly.

Doings at Los Angeles.

UNIVERSAL CITY is opened for good and every one there is busy. Mr. Horsley having arrived is looking over the ground for his new animal studio and other big and interesting happenings are in the air. The crowd of visitors who came on the Universal special brought much news and are taking much news away with them. Some want to remain here and live, while others wish the snow and blazing summer. The ever changing complement of the half hundred companies keep one busy maintaining a line on who is who and who's where. The past week has been exceptionally exciting, with many banquets and other affairs for the film people.

The Static Club did itself proud once more when it gave a wonderful banquet at a local cafe. Nearly every cameraman was there, as were many big directors and leading players. The dinner was a grand success and the club is to be complimented. Mr. Horsley was one of the honored guests.

James Kirkwood, who has been directing Mary Pickford at the F. P. studio, left for New York on the 24th to resume eastern producing. Allan Dwan is now directing the famous little star. We nearly had an election of Screen club officers, or could have held one, for President Kirkwood, Treasurer Blaisdell and several other well known Screeners were present.

George Melford and his Lasky players are in San Francisco getting scenes for "Stolen Goods," in which Blanche Sweet is starring. Eighteen people went up on the steamer. K. McGaffey, publicity man for Lasky, also made the trip. They will be gone for a week or more. George has been doing some record shooting at the L. A. Gun Club meets at Venice, and last Sunday he nearly made a record score at the championship shoot.

Wray Physioc, directing Indian specials for the A. B., has returned from a trip to San Fernando valley, where he did some big desert scenes for a redskin picture. While on the edge of the little Sahara one of the men killed a big rattler while a scene was being made. It had 9 rattles and a button. The players were there four days.

Selig's zoo received the largest shipment of wild animals ever brought across. There were in the consignment of live freight 2 elephants, 2 camels, 2 snow leopards, 2 black tigers, 4 Bengal tigers, and a number of funny birds and miscellaneous animals. The Selig plant now has 18 Bengal tigers, the largest number owned by any single firm. There were enough animals to occupy two special cars for the transcontinental tour. It took 90 days for the trip from India, the voyage being made on a German ship which had to zigzag across the waters in order to miss encounters with alien ships of war.

Fred Kley of the Lasky firm, if asked how he likes the road to San Diego, will say, "It's fine, but one place. That is where the old road switches for Mexico." When on a half week vacation Mr. Kley motored to the southern city and en route he missed the right road and found himself on the way to old Mexico after several hours' running.

Wilfred Lucas and his Fiction Players are in Las Vegas, Nevada, getting scenes for the latest picture, "The Taming of the Red Butte Western." There are 25 people in the company and they will be gone for a week. The new F. P. studio at Melrose and Bronson avenues is fast nearing completion and the company will soon be moved in from the Rolfe studio, which they are now using through the courtesy of Mr. Rolfe.

Dave Kirkland, who directed for Sterling, and who more recently was with Keystone, has joined the L KO and Pathe Lehrman and is captain of a squad of players and is turning out comedies by the thousand feet.

* * *

Well, the record is going up. "The Clansman" has run eight weeks.

And we had not a cloudy day in March.

Rex De Rosselli kept a panic from starting at the opening of Universal City when he closed a cage door which had been opened by some green hand or by a wandering visitor. The cage contained leopards and one of the animals had made its exit when Mr. Roselli discovered the situation. The person who opened the cage had fled in terror.

Lillian Gish has forsaken the screen and is now living in San Francisco—but it is only a vacation, and she will be back in a few weeks to resume work at the Griffith-Mutual studios.

Jesse L. Lasky is due to arrive this week from New York. New stars will probably be brought west to appear in features during the summer. May Allison is now working at the American in Santa Barbara, having gone from the Lasky studio after finishing a picture there.

Mack Sennett and Ad Kessel have been busy the past week plucking stars from the Orpheum, and every show that comes to town is learning to fear the comedy film makers who make serious inroads on their stock of good actors.

Fay Tincher will now have a chance to work a new idea into one of her comedies, for a woman of this city has invented an electric manicuring machine which cuts, trims, polishes and perfumes the nails. It ought to be good for a laugh in a Mutual comedy.

Bids have been called for by the city government for pictures to be made of the entire system of training in the local schools. The films will be exhibited at the expositions and throughout the States. Outdoor work and play will be shown, as will the special instruction, swimming, fire drills, night school, cafeteria system, penny soup kitchens, musical organizations, science, domestic art, manual training, building, athletics, and in fact every branch of the educational system in vogue here. Every student is to be photographed, kiddies and kindergartens, and School Marms and Normal will be pictured. About a hundred thousand persons will be filmed for this big exhibit.

Paul Powell and his company of 20 players have gone north to Santa Barbara to get scenes for "The Nun," in which Dorothy Gish is featured. They will make scenes around the convent there and will be gone four days.

Eugene Pallette was the pleasing master of ceremonies at this week's good fellowship dinner at which a record breaking number of players were present. Gene is from the south; those who missed the feed missed something worth while.

* * *

The set-to between the local board of censors and J. A. Quinn, manager of Quinn's Superba Theater, which is now showing "Hypocrites," was brought before the courts today and Mr. Quinn given time in which to plead. The shoe pinch comes on the showing of a beautiful girl, nude, as "Truth." The "Evening Herald" had a front page story on the 24th devoted to the battle for the exhibition of this big film.

Miss Rea Martin, late of "Peg o' My Heart" company, has rejoined the Biograph and is an ingenue again and is appearing in "When Love Is Young" under the direction of Eddie Morrissey.

Wm. Wolbert and a company of Kalem players have ceased production at the Hollywood studio and are now at leisure. Chance Ward is still making "Ham" comedies here.

J. A. Berst, the new general manager and vice president of the Selig Company, while visiting the headquarters here said that the new Selig feature, "The Millionaire Baby," is to be one of the best ever made. He also sees a great improvement in the general run of pictures and says that there will be even a greater improvement in the near future.

The Progressive Motion Picture Company, in the Marsh Strong building, handling Paramount Pictures, report that a new departure has been made in the exhibition of features. At Quinn's Superba, where "Hypocrites" is having so strenuous a run, there are six shows a day, prices being 25, 35 and 50 cents. Three-quarters of the entire house is reserved. There are 700 seats, and no one can stumble in while the picture is being run and miss the beginning or have to wait to see the start. The present exhibition consists of the overture, a single reel scenic, the prologue to the feature, and then the four reels of big film. The new idea is working out well, according to Manager M. H. Lewis of the Progressive Co.

Henry B. Walthall is now with the Mutual. It was stated some weeks ago on this page that Mr. Walthal would rejoin

Griffith, but at that time it was only a rumor, but very well founded. Since that time he actually signed up again and is now working at the old stand. He is being featured in Ibsen's "Ghosts," picturized by Russel E. Smith.

Bill Cavanaugh, the fat ex-policeman who was recruited to the Ince forces, has joined the L KO in Hollywood and is working in funnies again as the heavy copper.

Herbert Rawlinson, screening Sanford Quest, and his assistant, Anna Little, and the rest of the Black Box players are up by Oxnard doing some desert scenes for the latest installment of this wonderful serial.

Mildred Harris and Paul Willis are seen in a novel little play by Mary H. O'Connor at the Mutual. It is "The Matchmakers" and is a story of school life, a fire and rescue being brought into the picture. F. A. Kelsey is making the film.

Recent additions to the producing staff of the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, Kriterion release makers, are Miss Veronica Larkin, who was with King Baggot in Imp Pictures, and also with Lubin; Joe Massey, a great character man; Dorothy Browne, formerly of the Universal; Elsie Cort, who was also with the Universal; Robert Morris, late of Lubin; Edward J. Peil, also from Lubin; and Pete Morrison, who was a cowboy leader with the American, has swung across the gap to the Big K studios and is working with Bert Bracken.

Three big men have been added this week to the already large complement of the Ince forces. Henry Woodruff, H. B. Warner and Dustin Farnum have all been signed and will appear in multiple reel specials in the near future, with casts of well known actors supporting them.

Nick Cogley, formerly with Selig, is now operating a company for the Mutual at Hollywood. He is directing Charles Clary in a big feature. The two were with Selig together and are now again going over old times.

Reginald Barker, directing an Ince story this week, used 15 out of 40 babies that were submitted to him by anxious mothers to use in "The Reward," which features Bessie Barriscale. Imagine Barker's position when he had to choose with the mothers watching, each desiring her own lovedarling to be selected to play in the picture.

Jack O'Brien and his Mutual players are in San Diego getting new settings for scenes in "Captain Macklin" by Richard Harding Davis, and filmatized by Russel E. Smith.

David Horsley, who arrived last week, is busy on the field at his big lot which now contains the Bostock jungle and arena. The new studio is being constructed and it is to be a wonder, both in size and quality. One great innovation is the "pie" stage, as he calls the circular stage which contains 12 different sets. It is like a pie cut into a dozen portions. The entire list of interiors can be made in rotation without resetting the camera. The cameraman swings the machine around from set to set and shoots as fast as the director can run his people and animals through the scenes. He will release one single reel animal comedy and one three reel animal drama each week. The whole ground is 590 x 350 feet, with a studio space of 225 x 350 feet. There is room for six studio platforms in addition to the main circular stage. The Horsley diffusing system will be used.

Before James Kirkwood left he was given a big farewell dinner by Mary Pickford and Al Kaufman, with W. E. Wing as roastmaster. It was a topsy-turvy affair and was uniquely unusual, everything being just the opposite as usually done. The diners filed in to a funeral dirge. Kirkwood was roasted. Guests were called on to talk, and they knocked Kirkwood, who was not allowed to eat, for his soup was hot hypo; fish, gelatinized soda, and other tasty dishes were faked for him. After each course, however, he got something to eat. At the conclusion he was presented with a fine jewel case in which rested his own gold watch, which he had been searching for for a week. Finally he was given a chance to talk and was given best wishes for his journey homeward. The affair was in the blue room of the athletic club and was one of the biggest dinners of the season, being attended by many prominent film people.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Jessie Stevens

WRITING of Jessie Stevens—fat, fair, and a favorite—is like writing of theatrical history, for on the stage she's been since she was plumped down, as a three months' old, some forty odd years ago. No, Jessie is a rara avis among actor folks in that she is very careless about telling her age. But that's only part of her effervescing good nature which has infected many a screen with heartiest of laughs.

Jessie—no one thinks of calling her "Mrs. Stevens"—came from a theatrical family, her father, George E. Stevens, in the early seventies, having several theaters throughout the east, run on the old stock system, where the star travelled about and was supported by the permanent stock company. One of these which she recalls with pleasure is J. H. Stoddard, who played in her father's theaters.

Jessie Stevens.

She played child parts innumerable, but perhaps "Topsy" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" claimed her most. At ten years of age she was playing Marie's mother! But Jessie was "some" ten-year-old for size and weight. From 1876 to 1882 she played in that company in various parts. Her fall in weight was accompanied by her rise to stardom, for in 1884, registering but 120 pounds—on the scale—she toured throughout the middle west as star in repertoire with her own company. And the west has never forgotten Jessie, where she acquired a great following, even to this day.

She then appeared, till 1890, in various comedies and dramas, playing everything from Martha in "Faust" and the Duchess of York in "Richard the Third" to comedy characters, at one time playing with the late John Griffith.

Then followed engagements with Frohman's "Jane" company, the southern company playing "Mme. La Marquise," in the Schiller Comic Opera Company at Chicago, in stock all over the country, in J. H. Wallack's "Dairy Farm," and then in Hal Davis' vaudeville sketch, "Fall of '63," where her work as the black mammy is easily remembered.

Motion pictures first saw her in 1909, when she appeared with the Essanay. With a breath in vaudeville, she was again back, this time with Selig for one year, disappearing again to appear in vaudeville in "The Little Mother," when she joined the Edison stock company two years ago and is still there. In Edison films she has played comedy characters and dramatic roles, her motherly face and figure becoming known the country over.

POLLOCK BUILDING NEW THEATER.

Edward Pollock, of North Tarrytown, New York, has had plans drawn for a moving picture theater he is to build in that city. The plans call for a structure 40 by 120 feet, to be built of brick and concrete. The facade will be pretty in design and there will be eight exits. A stage with dimensions of 14 by 40 feet will be provided for. There will be 800 seats in the auditorium, 600 on the parquet floor and 200 in the balcony. The appointments and equipment will be on a par with those to be found in deserving and handsome picture theaters in bigger cities.

BURR McINTOSH FILM CORPORATION.

Burr McIntosh, expert photographer, actor and jack of all artistic trades, has organized the Burr McIntosh Film Corporation and will play the stellar role in "Colonel Carter of Cartersville," the first production of the new concern, inspired by F. Hopkinson Smith's novel. This and subsequent pictures will be handled by the World Film Corporation. Mr. McIntosh made his debut as a picture actor some little time ago in "In Mizzoura."

A friend of mine, a moving picture star, rambled into a Broadway picture house a few days ago and saw himself on the screen, and so, apparently did a stout female in front of him, for he learned in the space of two minutes that he was the meanest cuss in the world and old Jesse James, the personification of perfection compared with him. The stout person glibly informed her friend that he was a brute even in real life. And here is a man with one of the happiest homes in the city. You'll have to guess who it is.

King Baggot told me this one. One of the Universal companies went to Fort Lee to make some pictures and used an auto to convey them to the location. When all was ready it was discovered that the car was in line of the camera and the director ordered it to be moved. The chauffeur in backing the machine struck and upset an Italian vender's push cart, whereupon the wildly gesticulating son of Italy demanded reimbursement for his loss. The director offered him a few dollars to lessen his stress, but the brown-skinned person refused what would readily have restocked his cart and insisted on being paid five dollars. He finally received the five spot and then the town authorities to whom he had complained of his loss fined him the five for peddling without a license.

One day a Lubin director, scouting around for a location, came upon a magnificent estate in the suburbs of Philadelphia and requested the use of it. Not only was it granted but the owner, a prosperous man, and his wife acted as host and hostess to the players when the company goes there to make pictures. Lunch is served to them and the men receive the owner's favorite cigars. Directors, kindly refrain from seeking information concerning this Utopian spot. We're awfully busy!

South African Letter

Motion Pictures and the Trade in South Africa.

SOUTH AFRICA is a large country, but it possesses a fair number of moving picture theaters located in the cities and towns possessing a population which desires healthy amusement.

But, first of all, there is the African Theatres Trust to be consulted. At one time four exchanges were in existence, all located in Johannesburg and Cape Town. In September of 1913 there was organized the African Films Trust, which was the amalgamation of the four exchanges. This company controls practically all films entering South Africa.

It has a contract with almost every theater in the country to use only its films. The buying offices are in London, where four men are employed for the sole purpose of viewing every picture on the market. These men are instructed to get what, in their opinion, are the best. Of course the exhibitors are not always satisfied with the selections. American pictures are the most favored.

Playing appropriate music to pictures is not practised to any great extent in any hall I have visited. Cape Town has one exception; that one is Fisher's Grand Theater. The music there is exquisite. Advertising is good in some sections, and bad in others. The particular mediums employed are billboards and newspapers. Nothing startling nor in any way of a novel character has yet been employed. Advertising is controlled exclusively by the trust, which works through the medium of the Argus Printing & Publishing Co. Local advertising is controlled by the district manager appointed by the trust.

People have a hazy notion of the names of the various actors, the producing companies, and their trade marks. Nothing is done to help patrons—no Reel Life, Mutual Girl Weekly or Universal Weekly, tabloid edition, is distributed. No paper will undertake to devote say a column or two weekly to motion picture news. Their cry, so far as Port Elizabeth and district is concerned, is "get me their ad and then I will listen to you." Censorship for the trust is carried on at Cape Town by a voluntary board. This board was formed in March, 1913. It consists of seventy members, thirty of whom are delegates appointed by religious, commercial, legal and philanthropic bodies. In April, 1913, Kalem's great picture "From Manger to Cross" arrived. When the administrator, Sir Frederick De Waal, heard it was to be shown (he had not previously seen the picture), he said that it must not be run, giving his reasons that it was a religious picture. When he was told there was no law under which he could prevent its exhibition he curtly replied: "There'll be one." In fourteen days he had pushed a bill through the provincial council giving him full power. This particular ordinance is known as "Provincial Council Ordinance No. 3 (Religions)." A film comes under the ordinance when:

(a) Christ is personified.
(b) It is not an accurate representative of Biblical truth.
(c) It is calculated to give offence to the religious convictions or feelings of any section of the people.

In spite of this, however, the film was shown privately in Johannesburg. Cine's "Quo Vadis?" was permitted to be shown, though it came under the second rule.

Practically all the films imported into South Africa are viewed by the committee. The following rules have been drafted, to test whether a film is objectionable or not:

(1) When the tendency of the film is to degrade or corrupt the morals of youth or to degrade white women in the eyes of colored men or natives.

(2) All films showing gruesome details or tending to teach the technique of crime, the administering of drugs, poisons, etc.

(3) Unmitigated sensationalism and malicious mischief.
(4) Infidelity or unfaithfulness of husband or wife.
(5) Wanton cruelty.
(6) Violent death scenes and executions.

Now and then complaints are made and Keystone Comedies are the particular ones falling under the ban. It seems that there is a goodly number of church people who cannot look at both sides of the question. The daily paper takes the question up, and that is about where it ends.

Of course we in South Africa have to consider the effect of the picture on the native and colored man's mind. Especially as we have a great number of moving picture theaters devoted exclusively to them.

There exists only one association, namely, "The Western Province Cinematograph Association."

From all this you can see that the trade in South Africa is still in its infancy; and, some day, it will rival that of your grand country. SYDNEY HAROLD CRAWFORD.

The Photoplay in China

Benjamin Brodsky, on His Sixth Return Trip to America, Tells of Improving Conditions.

By Hugh Hoffman.

EVERY year, for the past six years, there has come to America from far off China, a most interesting little man by the name of Ben Brodsky. He has just left New York on his way back to the flowery kingdom after one of his annual film buying trips. Mr. Brodsky is the president and general manager of the China Cinema Company, of Hong Kong.

The China Cinema Company is a new firm, but Brodsky's experiences extend back over a half dozen years devoted principally to the introduction of moving pictures into China. He has seen that country change from an absolute monarchy to a republic. He has seen natives flee from the first motion picture they ever saw. He has also seen this fear change into confidence, to such an extent that he is now president of a Chinese film producing company employing Chinese actors and making films for the Chinese public.

There have been many changes in China since Mr. Brodsky went there as a tent showman. He had to hire his first audience to come and see the show. He had a Western picture, and when the cowboys came riding down the road shooting pistols every Chinaman in the audience departed from that tent as quickly as the God that presides over pigtails would let them, entirely forgetting the pay that was due them. Today he is managing a large firm composed of Chinese capitalists, which firm is now establishing a circuit of newly built, modern moving picture theaters in various parts of China.

Mr. Brodsky first went to China to open the Variety Film Exchange, as a branch of the San Francisco office. On one trip he organized film exchanges in Honolulu, Manila, Hong Kong, Shanghai, Canton, Vladivostok and Yokohama. To these exchanges others were added on later trips.

Through Almond Eyes.

When a Chinaman buys a ticket to go into the theater he wants to feel that he has bought something substantial. Paying over his money and getting a little "scrap of paper" doesn't agree with Mr. Chinaman's sense of proportion. He must receive something that looks like merchandise, and his intuition tells him that a little piece of cardboard is certainly not worth the money he has paid out. This is the reason why Brodsky's millions of tickets are still lying on a shelf. He had to go to a lumber yard and have the tickets sawed out of planks. So every Chinaman, when he goes to his picture theater at home, instead of a paper ticket gets a wooden paddle about eight inches long and three inches wide with Chinese hieroglyphics painted on both sides.

In six years' time Mr. Brodsky has learned what China requires in the way of photoplays and things pertaining thereto. His first great task was to get the Chinese to even look at a show at all. His next task was to buy the right kind of film for the Chinese audiences; the next was to secure theaters in which to show the films, and the next was to break down the indifference and prejudice of the Chinese capitalist. To know how well that has been done one has only to glance at the accompanying illustration.

Seated in the center, Mr. Brodsky is to be seen surrounded by the men who are the directors of the China Cinema Company. Everyone of them is a college bred man, and all but two of them have been through English or American colleges. Some of them speak better English than native Americans. They are all men of means, and a few of them are very wealthy. It is encouraging to know that the film business in China has fallen into the best possible hands, for these men represent the progressive spirit and high principles of the better class of Chinese.

It is the intention of the China Cinema Company to produce Chinese subjects exclusively, but these subjects will be so treated that they will be understandable in all parts of the world. Chinese stories in the skillful hands of natives who have the broad cosmopolitan experience will be interpreted in such a way that the other races will understand them and will appreciate the full beauty of the Chinese muses. The directors of the China Cinema Company realize that China has suffered by being misunderstood, and it is their desire to bring their race closer to the other races of the world. They have a firm conviction that they can interpret the Mongolian mind through motion pictures so that all the world will understand the Chinese people, and that the psychological barriers that have existed for so many hundreds of years between East and West may be eliminated.

Thus will be seen the greatly improved conditions for motion pictures that Mr. Brodsky has brought about in China by hard work under conditions of living that would have been the death of a less hardy man. Even this year the improvement over his results of a year ago are truly remarkable. The business is well started in China, although nothing could have started it on such a high plane except a reputable set of men as appear in the illustration. As yet, in the interior of China the natives are still a little shy of moving pictures, but with these well established business men to push it through a big circuit of theaters throughout the country is bound to be the result and the great Chinese field will be opened in a systematic way.

With the Chinese market added to the European market, this promises larger sales for producers of all countries, but particularly for American film makers, for, as Mr. Brodsky says, the American film is the big favorite in China.

Gleichman's New Enterprise

World Comedy Star Productions to Be Released Through World Film Corporation.

Phil. Gleichman's company, the World Comedy Stars Film Corporation, formed to release one comedy a week with prominent stage celebrities of the calibre of Lew Fields, Richard Carle, Tom Wise, Lulu Glaser, appearing in specially written stories, has arranged its release schedule. These comedies will go out on the World Film Program and the release dates may shortly be expected.

Phil. Gleichman, President of the World Comedy Stars, Surrounded by His Staff.

Report speaks well of the World Comedy Stars' comedies that have so far been made by Phil. Gleichman's director, Ed. Lawrence. It is the intention of Mr. Gleichman in course of time to make multiple reel comedies. Meanwhile, the World Film Corporation feels that in adding these comedies, with the attraction of these great Broadway names, to their program they are materially aiding the exhibitor to secure increased patronage from the public.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

IN COMMENTING upon the exhibition of a picture so offensive that two women left the theater with their children, a writer asks why some public spirited citizen does not take legal steps against such films. There should be no occasion for a public appeal of that kind. If the censor fanatics were as sincere in their work for the maintenance of morality and decency as they pretend to be, such films would not be on the market. Inactivity on their part in this direction is easily accounted for. They will not surrender for an instant their work of persecution to take up that of necessity; most of the aggressive fanatics do not visit picture houses and know nothing of the pictures, save what is told them, and, none the less true, is the fact that if they appealed to the authorities to enforce the police regulations against such films their co-persecutors, the professional agitators and reformers, would be deprived of their jobs. A brief and sincere campaign in the right direction would leave absolutely no work for the censors. Instead of doing this these people spend all their time, energy and money in making victims of more than ninety-five per cent. of the moving picture people for the offensive action of the remaining meagre percentage.

An exhibitor in conversing with one of the so-called reformers who was trying to justify the censorship agitation asked him why he had not taken steps to prohibit the production of a certain film, or against the offending exhibitor. The reformer replied that the people pay taxes for the employment of officials to do that work. The reformer admitted that he had not even taken the trouble to lodge a complaint with the officials. He also admitted that he had never seen an offensive film run in the house of the exhibitor with whom he was conversing. "Then," the exhibitor exclaimed, "by what code of justice or common sense do you justify your warfare upon me for offenses committed by another through your own inactivity. You have the law in your own hands but fail to use it. We have officials who are paid for the work. We also have officials for the prosecution of criminals, but we cannot expect them to act when they are not cognizant of the facts." To this the reformer answered that officials, as a rule, are prejudiced against the reform element and unusually strong evidence is required to secure conviction. "Bah!" continued the exhibitor, "the trouble with you people is that most of the time you create a tumult on hearsay evidence and most of the rest of the time you depend upon the reports of irresponsible people in your employ as spies. If you did more individual work and less preaching you might accomplish something worth while, as it is you are simply the retainers of a band of professional agitators who cannot be brought to reason because they fear to lose the graft. You are continually pounding the motion picture people for the sake, as you say, of protecting the morals of the young. If a child under sixteen years old accidentally gets by the ticket seller at a motion picture house you have the seller or the manager locked up in a jiffy. How many spotters have you people got located at the gallery box offices of the burlesque houses? Do you have them posted at the numerous dance halls and so-called dancing schools? Occasionally, when some parent makes complaint, you people come forward with your arms raised in expression of horror and help in the prosecution, but there is no court record in this city for the past two years that will show a case where you have taken the initiative. You are too busy pounding the motion picture people. It isn't censorship you people want. Your contention for it is merely one of your subterfuges towards crushing the motion picture business if it can possibly be accomplished."

Subsequent to this encounter with the reform representative the exhibitor said all this reform movement against the motion picture houses has been wrong from the start. "It has cost me a lot of money to stay in the business on account of the continual nagging of these people. I know what I am talking about when I say that before the picture business commenced to spread as it has throughout the country churches, chautauquas, Y. M. C. A. and kindred associations were deriving considerable revenue towards covering their expenses from moving picture exhibitions. As the regular picture houses multiplied in number the drawing power of the pictures at the other places diminished until to-day it has almost become extinct. The so-called reformers saw this coming years ago. Did they open the attack by complaining of immoral pictures? That idea never struck them. They dug into the fire, building and health laws and when those laws were not sufficiently effective they provided amendments for ammunition against the picture houses. Such laws had the full endorsement of the public and such exhibitors as could afford the changes and improvements required readily complied with them. But many an exhibitor was driven to the wall and this encouraged the conspirators to believe that the best part, if not all, the business would eventually be crushed. After exhausing all the advantages that could be afforded by all the laws they could unearth and finding that they were unable to put the regular exhibitors out of business, these so-called reformers suddenly discovered that immoral pictures were being thrown upon the screen. The first complaint of this nature was that mutes who had been trained in the lip method of conversation had discovered that in the production of the pictures some of the players had used offensive language. Singularly enough this discovery was made simultaneously in various parts of the country. The manufacturers quickly disposed of these complaints by admonishing the players, although at that time they were in doubt as to the plausibility of the complaints. During all this time the country was flooded by pictures of foreign manufacture that, from a moral standpoint, were worse than any pictures shown today, even by the few offenders who are in a great measure responsible for the present consorship agitation by persistently ignoring all censorship."

"The so-called reformer will tell you to-day," continued the exhibitor, "that inactivity from the moral standpoint of view in the earlier days is accounted for by the fact that in those days the picture houses were not as numerous and consequently the patronage was correspondingly less. But in those days the evil was there. The children were the first patrons. Their enthusiasm over the pictures led the adults to what was at that time looked upon as places of childish amusement. The majority of the picture places were 'dumps,' and yet it was not until the regular motion picture business assumed irresistible proportions and they had exhausted all other resources to stem the tide that the so-called reformers opened the campaign of immorality—the nucleus of the censorship bugbear. Realizing that the elimination of anything tending to impair the morals of the patrons was essential to the continued success of the business the manufacturers voluntarily established a system of censorship. They met the issue squarely and effectively. This appeased the agitators for a time and, assuming a conciliatory attitude, they suggested that a more educational standard be adopted by the picture makers. To this the manufacturers acceded and many of them went to considerable expense in that direction, relying to some extent upon the patronage of those who suggested the subjects. It was not long before the manufacturers realized what the wily agitators had no doubt foreseen. The demand for educational subjects was so limited that a continuance of their production as at first undertaken would eat up the profits made on the regular subjects, consequently it became necessary to curtail the making of strictly educational subjects and leave the field to specialists. This action led to a renewal of the hostilities. The so-called reformers saw the suicide plan had failed and retaliated by charging that the manufacturers had no desire to keep their productions within the bounds of decency, therefore official censorship should be invoked."

A manufacturer shown the statement made by the quoted exhibitor said, "Well, he hits the historical end of the subject about as close to the truth as I could. Manufacturers and exhibitors have been conceding anything and everything to these people right along, but nothing seems to satisfy them. There is a limit to everything and I think these reformers have about reached their limit. We are unalterably opposed to official censorship as they want it because censorship as well as other things has a limit which must be respected in justice to us. Local boards have multiplied like mushrooms. State boards are also multiplying. On top of these they want a Federal board. They never will be satisfied until they so overload the manufacturers with license fees that the business will become unprofitable. They never will become reconciled to the motion picture industry, no matter how much is conceded them. Take Cincinnati, for instance. The producers of a film are put to the expense of a contest because the Mayor of the city withholds his approval of it notwithstanding the State Board of Censors passed the subject. Local censorships conflicting with the State Board established by the reformers with the manufacturers and exhibitors paying the piper is a puzzling state of affairs, aside from a condition of injustice. The manufacturers have once more stepped to the front. For the purpose of endeavoring to solve the censorship problem satisfactorily to all concerned, they will accede to a Federal Commission. This move cannot be brushed aside easily, or reasonably. I look upon it as a move that must be effective, or so impress public opinion that the motion picture people will be enabled to demand and get that justice which springs from true reform."

BRITISH NOTES.

ONE of the leading English theatrical papers is making a special effort to stigmatise a certain type of American film. Someone who is obscurely referred to as "a producer from the other side," is quoted as having stated that there are manufacturers in the States who refuse to pay more than $5 a reel for manuscript. The result of this, it is alleged, is that the drama of the camera has suffered and is still suffering from the cheap film issued mostly by American firms. Since the early growth of film production and circulation into a separate industry detached from the ordinary stage, relationship between the spoken and the silent drama has been most amicable. Great actors and authors have each bestowed unqualified praise and approval of the work being accomplished by the moving picture, but these are rarely, if ever, countenanced in the theatrical press.

The present war has been responsible for a number of pictures illustrating operations upon land or sea, but none more thrilling have been obtained than a short series just to hand showing the Falkland Islands engagement. The films are being featured in London at the Scala Theater and were taken from the deck of the "Invincible." With remarkable clearness of detail the British squadron is shown leaving Port Stanley and encountering the enemy's ships near the Cape sometime later.

Writing of ships reminds me that Mr. Williamson has formed a company called the Williamson Submarine Film Company for joint purposes as submarine film makers and marine salvage contractors. Surely an unusual combination. "In the bed of the ocean," says Mr. Williamson, "there is more gold than few people would ever dream of, and we think we have a method of recovering some of it by employing moving picture films to locate its situation."

* * *

The proprietor of the Topical Film Agency was fined heavily in London last week under the new emergency laws for storing a large quantity of film without the permission of the Chief Constable. This is the first case of its kind under the Defense of the Realm regulations.

A new printing and duplicating plant for the American Film Company is rapidly nearing completion at Croyden, a few miles out of the metropolis. The new printing plant is to be utilized for making those copies of the America Company's negatives required for home circulation, and is described by people in the know to mark the latest advance in scientific construction and equipment.

The attractiveness of the illuminated sign in the picture theater is liable to suffer if there are too many of them about. An effective arrangement dispensing with the necessity for suspending in the body of the hall injunctions to the patrons to "transfer here for sixpenny seats" has been introduced into a few northern theaters. Outside the entrance facade is an interchangeable electric sign indicating which seats are vacant and how many are vacant. The denominations of the seating accommodation are controlled from an electric switch in the hall so that when, for instance, the fourpenny seats are occupied the figure representing them drops out.

It is a fortunate fact that the moving-picture industry is stoical. Many industries, notably shipping and transport, have grown quite "panicky" during the past day or two upon account of German submarine activities, but the views of the situation I have elicited from film distributing agencies dependent upon foreign supplies are commendably optimistic. Nearly all the leading American depots have laid by a reserve stock of negatives in case of emergency, while those who do not actually print their positives on this side have effected suitable arrangements should the "blockade" materialize.

Strange are the ways of the exalted. Mr. Hall Caine, who yesterday damned all and everything moving-picturesque, today announces he is personally writing a scenario of his famous play "The Christian."

Apropos the remarks in a recent issue of the "Moving Picture World" upon advertising it is becoming more and more apparent that the bombastic boomery, hitherto regarded as an indispensable adjunct to the release of a feature production, is nearly played out. No amount of big-drum beating can make a mediocre picture into a masterpiece. If it could there would be no masterpieces. In the home producing houses there is a manifest tendency towards something higher and better, something more inspiring and educative than the lurid magnification of the thrills and sensations of the subject. One firm in particular has set a praiseworthy example, the Hepworth company, whose posters are already demonstrating their superiority over the gaudy litho.

The London County Council have been asked in the Court of Justice to state a reason for refusing to license three moving-picture theaters in London, the property of the London and Provincial Electric Theaters, Limited. Out of £55,000 capital £50,000 was held by German and Austrian shareholders, and in the words of the Lord Chief Justice "the real reason why the County Council refused to renew the licenses was that the control of the company was absolutely in the hands of alien enemies."

An important event in the monetary side of the industry took place last week when the old and world-known firms of Butchers and Houghtons, photographic manufacturers, joined hands. To expedite the amalgamation a new company, entitled "British Photographic Industries, Limited," capitalized at close upon a million dollars, has been registered for the purpose of manufacturing photographic apparatus and accessories and particularly as makers, hirers and dealers of moving-picture films. From this it must not be inferred that the respective business of Houghtons and Butchers are to cease. On the contrary, the amalgamation is obviously for consolidative purposes and each of the aforementioned houses will still continue upon their own particular lines. Next to the Eastman Kodak Company the new undertaking will be the most formidable of its kind in Europe.

In addition to the foregoing arrangements another company, entitled "Butchers Film Service, Limited," has also been incorporated, with a capital of £12,743. Its powers enable it to deal with the moving-picture film hire department. Although new in registration the firm of Butchers were one of the first in the British moving-picture field. They manufacture the "Empire" brand of projectors and films.

Mr. Leo Vint, an established renter in London filmdom, is now in business as the managing director of a company only recently incorporated under the title Famous Copyrights Limited. His first purchase in his new capacity is the American success of Elinor Glyn, "Three Weeks."

The form of entertainment most acceptable to the troops at the front is picturesquely expressed in the following extract from a letter written by a man in the Army Service Corps: "Went to a concert last night given by the Fourth Division Follies. It was an awful rag. This afternoon we went to a kinema in motor busses about four miles back from here. We did have a great time. The room got so full of tobacco smoke that they had to stop the films until the air cleared a bit."

The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, have recently inaugurated a new plan in handling their big productions. Three advance men have been employed by this concern, whose duty it is to go out in advance of each production and attend to the necessary publicity. This is not only done in the larger towns, but also in the small ones. This experiment is working out very successfully.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Why, or Why Not?

WRITING of a recent submission, B. A. Holway, of Proctor's Broad Street theater, Elizabeth, writes:

> I was, or rather have been, rather disappointed that you have not seen fit to tear the Motion Picture Guide, successor to the Proctor News, to pieces, as I really desired criticism on it.

This is rather different from what we sometimes get, but we'll be jiggered (whatever that is) if we can see why Mr. Holway should be disappointed because we found his work good. Criticism is not synonymous with "roast," but properly speaking criticism is one man's opinion of the merits as well as demerits of a thing. It is his opinion alone and is valuable only in proportion to his knowledge of his subject. We liked Mr. Holway's submitted sheet and said so. We might have been finical and have called attention to the fact that the last letter of the third line of column three on the first page was shaky on its feet, but that is not criticism. Could we have seen a way to materially improve the looks of the sheet, we would gladly have offered suggestions, but there seemed to be no reason for suggesting unimportant changes. The only criticism we have to make is that he let the sheet go under when he might have farmed it out and have kept it going that way.

Now he sends in his third try, a vest pocket card. Here again there is little to comment upon, though he might have used a different face for his titles: a heavier line letter. He needs, too, to be more careful in his wording. One day reads:

Exploits of Elaine, Episode No. 2.
SHOULD A WOMAN DIVORCE?
In which the social problem of the day is discussed vividly.

The second title is in twelve point caps while Elaine is in six point lower case Gothic. The inference is that Episode II of the Exploits of Elaine has for its title "Should a Woman Divorce," instead of suggesting a double bill. The word "and" between the lines would have helped. Better still would have been the "and" and setting the Elaine in the same point and face as the other title.

The same lack of definiteness is shown in a film held for two days. He speaks of it as a Monday-Tuesday special, with the Monday date at the left and the Tuesday at the right, but a "For two days" in between would have driven the point home. In the general display the effect is good, but more could have been done through an adroit use of type.

Took an Encore.

John William Kellette and the Thanhouser players like their New Rochelle theater so well that they went out and got another one. Kell tells about it:

> This house, it seems (Neptune), has a harder name than North Avenue had. It has been dominated by a bunch of roughnecks and it finally drove the Vitagraphers, Flora Finch and Jimmy Morrison, who ran the house during the past couple of months, back to Flatbush.
> They had been running a 60-90 day program on Licensed, occasionally showing Vitagraph stars at attractions, but they couldn't make it pay. Well, there's an old saying about "Fools rush in," etc. We have hopes. The accompanying ad. will show you a nice "tame" statement, not too loud, yet full of promise. The house is in a "Lent" territory, and that undoubtedly will affect attendance in the beginning, and down the avenue a bit, Steve Stainach is beginning, Monday, a stock house with "Bought and Paid For," at 35, 50 and 75 cents. If he sees where he can get off on a 604-seat house at those prices, certainly we ought to do something with the overflow, what?
> On Thursday, March 4, we have the adorable Flo LaBadie in person at the Thanhouser. I might be able to get her to promise an appearance at Neptune on the last show. Hope to, and in event I do I'll bill that section of the City like wildfire. And please look! The CITY has a WEST and an EAST. Also it has a NORTH and a SOUTH. I'm playing the MIDDLE against the four sections. One section is even CALLED West New Rochelle—Get me? It snugs up to North Pelham on the off-side, and it exits towards Mount Vernon. Mount Vernon has been taking West New Rochelle money for a long time for amusements, and I am about to serve notice on Mount Vernon that if it continues to do so I'll bite it on the wrist.
> The union help at Loew's were called out Saturday night. Immediately I hired a UNION operator and whispered it to the daily newspapers. They said that "Loew's operator" was agoin' to work for "Kell." Publicity! Gotta do it! Labor News, representative of unionism in Westchester County, came out Saturday as per see. There's a strike on at Loew's, but we should worry. We are either going to go broke serving (our check for service, this week, reads $80 without paper) good stuff, or eventually we'll be able to pay dividends. But one thing is certain. We're not going to let people call us pirates while we are in the game. We are giving the class of entertainment we'd like to see when we pay our way in, and if they don't want it served that way it will be their fault. We are going to let them know, however, that the stuff is here if they want it. If they want it we'll get them all coming some day. Of course, everybody is chasing the devil during these 40 days, and who knows but the pennies they are saving now will be brought to us in barrels after the festival is over. Nothing like being optimistic, y'know!

Given the right man with the right methods and not too much opposition, and almost any house can be made to pay. The labor sheet Kell speaks of gave him two columns and a cut. We think he went down and set the advertisement himself. It certainly does look nice, but it is too long for the width to be reproduced here. There are not many black lines, and there is plenty of white space, and every last word will be read because it is easy to read.

Running the last Million Dollar Mystery story he used this throwaway:

THANHOUSER THEATRE,
(290 North Ave., Phone 3741)
Offers
"$1,000 Reward,"
Friday Eve., March 5.
DON'T MISS THIS
Admission 5-10.

It is a "sting," but so mild a one that it will probably be enjoyed instead of resented.

Has His Answer.

Philip Chakeres, of the Chakeres Amusement Company, Springfield, Ohio, writes:

> Dear Sir: As we are spending considerable amount of money for advertising, and wish to get the best results, we are enclosing a copy of last Sunday's ad for your close attention. The ad enclosed was prepared by myself and the advertising solicitor from the Sun Publishing Company, publishers of the morning paper in this city. Hoping to hear from you soon as to what you think of the enclosed copy as a good motion picture ad and a business getter.

If Mr. Chakers will turn over the page he sends us ad look at another advertisement that backs it, he will find the answer. He is using about two-thirds of a full page. In the centre is a cut of Marguerite Snow. From the corners of this cut lines run diagonally to pictures of Miss Labadie and James Cruze in the upper corners and to the Million Dollar Mystery cuts in the lower corners, the texts relating to the showing of the final episode. This roughly divides the space into four blunt wedge-shaped spaces. At the top is the Million Dollar Mystery title. The other three spaces are given to mortised cuts, the inset advertising one of the other features for the week, but without dated days. The advertisement takes three times the space the other house uses, but will be read by the uninterested where only the confirmed fans will puzzle out the other. Whether the money spent would do more good in another direction is largely a question of how much the space costs, but if the space rate is not exorbitant, we think that this is good advertising indeed. It is good because it gives the message. It is not loaded down with a lot of type matter and fine screen cuts. It all stands out boldly and legibly. It will have to be read, even by the man who is merely glancing over the paper and not reading it. As newspaper advertising it is capital work.

With Spangles.

The Strand theater, Sacramento, Cal., is a new house and starts off with a greeting that is out of the ordinary. It is a four page sheet, 4¼ by 6, green coated stock printed in silk green. On the front cover there is only "The Play's the Thing" in 24 point. This is slightly above the centre. The house mark should have been added in the lower right hand corner to relieve the bleakness and at the same time stamp it the Strand. The second page carries the announcement with marginal side heads. These cover the date of opening, the organ and organist, the programs and the announcement of a "Toy Room" with a colored maid in charge where mothers can leave the littlest kiddies while the rest of the family watch the films in quietness. The third page has attached four frames of film and a rhapsody on the pictures and the back cover advertises "Three Weeks" for a starter with Damon and Pythias underlined. The prices are ten cents in the afternoon and ten and fifteen in the evening. The Glazer-Webster Company, owners of the house, have procured a well printed first offering, and if they can keep up the suggestion of swaggerness, they can keep going. Much depends on the first impression and here the impression is excellent.

We Wonder How Many.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., sends in a novelty that probably is put out by the releasing company, but which we have not seen before. It is a tape of heavy paper thirty-eight inches long. On one side it advertises Annette Kellermann in Neptune's Daughter, and on the other gives a tape measure marked off in inches, with special marks for Miss Kellermann's measurements. We wonder how many of the women patrons took them home to see how closely they approximated the "perfect woman." It is a clever stunt and drives home as nothing else will suggestion of the time-honored "perfect woman," a title carried by many since Venus or Helen of Troy or some of those old timers first used the billing matter. The Lehigh Orpheum seems to be sticking to their vest pocket program, which is very nicely done and about all they need. If you want a small, but not too small a program, this is a good house to apply to for a sample.

Rather Late.

Under date of March third the Kozy theater sends in its November program for comment. They do not send any later issues, so we cannot tell what progress they have made. The French gray stock is rather dismal and bleak for an amusement program. A warm tint would be better. And there is no descriptive matter; merely the name and perhaps the name of the star. That and the date and nothing more. They might get some help by sending a stamped and addressed envelope to the Lehigh-Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., asking for a sample of their folder.

It is a mistake to use sober colors for stock. Dark blues and mixtures of blue are cold, but gray is positively frosty. Brown is warmer, a light blue does well and green comes up nicely, but the sad colors depress and sometimes even annoy.

Two for One.

Royle V. Rothermel writes that in Fulton, Mo., John Pratt, of the Opera House, decided that a second house, while not making money, hurt his business, so he bought out his competitor. Instead of letting the house stand idle he sells a combination ticket, offering both shows for fifteen cents if used the same night. This is one way of fighting opposition that may appeal to others. If there must be a second house in a one-house town, run it yourself.

Has a Thinker.

W. W. Dunkle sends in some stuff he did for the La Salle theater, South Bend, Ind. Two of the pieces are a house program that is far from being well printed. Cheap ink is used on cheap stock and the result is cheap and smudgy looking, but the text is better than the printing. He takes the trouble to remember or else look up facts. Instead of telling what a hit Tom Wise was in New York, he writes:

> Tom Wise needs no introduction to South Bend play-goers. Neither does his "Gentleman from Mississippi." He played it here for a week with the Lucille La Verne Stock Company and amused thousands.

That gives the intimate, local touch. He's a man they have seen in flesh and will want to see on the screen. In the same way he gives the identifying history of other players, sounding a personal note that is more valuable than the glowing press stuff about the film.

In advertising Tillie's Punctured Romance he features a typewritten letter, purporting to have been written by a student at Notre Dame college, asking that the film be run. It is signed merely "A Pair of Movie Bugs," yet it seems to have the weight of a bona fide testimonial of an outsider. It takes a little thought to evolve these schemes, but they are worth while and worth the trouble or the expense of hiring an expert.

But we hope that Mr. Dunkle will coax the house to better the press work by getting better stock.

Another House Sheet.

The Modern Times is the newest house sheet. It is gotten out by Samuel Pinanski, of the Modern theater, Boston. He writes that he finds it valuable. Any house sheet is, but we think that he makes a mistake in holding it too closely to the films of the moment. In other words he gives too much advertising matter and too little to the house and general topics. It is too frankly an advertising herald and not enough of a house publication yet—though the back page seems to give promise. It is not possible to step right in and get out just what is wanted, but we hope that in later issues Mr. Pinanski gives more talk about his house and more about films in general, using not more than half of the matter for the immediate attractions.

There is nothing more valuable than a well edited house organ; one the public comes to look for, but to reach this point there must be stuff worth reading; not merely reprint of press stuff. That Mr. Pinanski can do it is shown from this house stuff:

> Our prices for admission are invariably the same. Bargain time is every morning until 12 o'clock, with every seat in the house at fifteen cents.
> Afternoons and evenings the balcony is fifteen cents and the orchestra floor is twenty-five cents.
> Our prices remain the same Saturdays, Sundays and Holidays.
> Our shows run continuously from 10 A. M. to 10.30 P. M.
> The last show in the evening commences at 8.30 P. M., and you can always see the entire feature picture by arriving here at 9 P. M.
> We have arranged this time schedule for accommodation of our patrons living both in and out of town.

That covers all you need to know and tells it clearly. Just above is a mention of the Ladies' Parlor, and an invitation to use the house stationery there for correspondence.

Lengthy, But.

The Gus Sun Amusement Company sends in a letter sent to Springfield, Ohio, patrons. It is in imitation typewriter on a paper that looks like an honest blue suffering from a complication of the hives and the jaundice, pink and yellow splotches staining the sheet. The paper is badly chosen, but the text, though full, is well written. It starts out with an apology for the letter and the explanation that it is the only way they can thank their friends for the support given the Paramount venture. It covers all four pages of a small note sheet and winds up with another apology for having written so much. We do not favor the over-long argument at any time, but at least this is well phrased and at times interesting. It would have been better to have cut to two pages.

Hey! Ralph Ruffner!

Real Reels speaks of a particularly effective advertisement gotten out by Ralph Ruffner. If he doesn't send us one we shall begin to get jealous of that Carpenter person. The same Real Reels gives some advertising suggestions for Rule G, that will be as effective for any railroad film:

> If ever there was an opportunity to advertise a show "Rule G," the coming big railroad story release on the Paramount Program is the occasion. This film was endorsed by the railroad companies of the country. In our territory the railroad officials are taking a great interest in this production and we are in receipt of several letters of inquiry and offers of assistance on this subject.
> One manager is already figuring on putting his ushers into overalls and having them carry lanterns to show the people into their seats.
> We know one system that would gladly loan you a "Safety First" semaphore to put outside of your theater. You could also erect a Cross-Roads sign "Stop, Look, Listen." Or why not get a painter to rig up the front of a locomotive for your lobby and then go down to the railroad yards and borrow a headlight and then put everybody's eye out with it across the street. Or, what's the matter with a man to call the trains outside? Get in touch with your local railroad boys, there are a score of schemes you could work up and set the town talking. Of course a locomotive whistle and bell are hardly in keeping with the high standard set by Paramount.

This is all right except that headlight idea. Suppose someone coming across the street is dazzled by the light and gets run down by an auto. He'll go to the hospital or the morgue instead of the show and you'll lose his dime or quarter. Don't have the light too bright.

Working the Suffs..

Alberta Claire, of Hot Springs, sends in a page long column advertisement for "The Million Dollar Mystery" that she wrote for the New Central. It is in open display, forty-eight point letters telling "Why you should see the Million Dollar Mystery New Central today." Save for the title the words run into the smaller type. For example the house name refers to "New tricks that will mystify" and adds that "Central" will vouch for the statement as to numerous telephone calls of inquiry. It is effective largely because of its open composition and odd shape.

For another house, the Lyric, Miss Claire, who is a newspaper woman, and former actress, arranged a showing of "Your Girl and Mine," the Suffragette propaganda play. The rather small local body took charge of advertisements and the sale of tickets and received 20 per cent. of the gross for their efforts. In spite of some antagonism to the movement interest was aroused and they did a good business. Others may work the same scheme.

All of the cities and most of the small towns have their clubs, and the house manager who works in with them will not only make money but acquire much merit in their eyes.

In Mourning.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., offers something new. It is a black envelope 4¼ by 2½ enclosing a black slip to fit, printed in size and aluminum bronze. It merely reads:

A Politician
A Loving Wife
Twenty Thousand Dollars
Northampton
St. Theater
Friday and Saturday
March 12 and 13.

That is all there is to it. No title and no hint of a title. On the back is written in ink "What is the name of this picture?" We'll be the goat. Shoot!

The use of the black envelope comes as a shock—perhaps too much of a shock—but most assuredly every recipient will read the enclosure to see who is dead. At any rate it is distinctive and original. The idea might work as well in a flaming red printed in aluminum.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Plot Getting.

HAVE more than one way of getting a plot. Find out as many different ways as you can. We know one man who gets all of his plots by letting published synopses suggest other and wholly different stories to him. It is one good way, but not if it is the only one, because sometimes he has to read through several bound volumes of this paper before he can hit an idea that is sufficiently far from the published plot to be safe to use. It may be that with his mind in that mood he is just right for one of the other methods of plot getting, but it does him no good because he knows only the one way.

Another writer waits for some incident in real life to suggest a plot. Many suggestions come from actual happenings, but not enough to keep a properly constructed author supplied.

No one method can be developed that is infallible. It is necessary to be able to work along any line in order to suit the method to the mood. There are times when the mind seems full of ideas. That is the time to evolve plots from memory of happenings. There are other times when it seems that nothing that looks even remotely like a plot can be evolved. That is your cue to read up and get the mind centered on plots. You may not find much in what you read, but merely getting your mind into the plotting atmosphere may have the desired result.

Perhaps it is better to take a newspaper and look for a hint in its columns, and there are times when it is best not to do so, but to think over happenings and try and find either a start or a finish from which to work.

Too few authors realize that it is possible to work either from a beginning or an ending, yet the author who always works from the start is but partially equipped for his work. You may go from New York to London and come back by way of Boston or Philadelphia. On the return trip you use the ending of the first voyage as the start of the second and get an entirely new trip just as you may go from New York to Chicago over the New York Central and come back by the Pennsylvania.

Flexibility in plot getting leads to variety in the plots themselves, and the more varied your product the better chance you have to sell. If you write always of the triangle or of the faithless wife editors will soon tire of your output and yet it may be that one mode of plotting with you will bring but a single result.

Very often it is possible to take a story and by continuing the story get a brand new idea. Or a parallel story may be developed. A recent American, for instance, told how a musician was forced to sacrifice love to art. A similar but different theme might be the story of the girl who sacrificed her love that she might not clog her sweetheart's progress, or with either of these endings it would be possible to write another story showing the emptiness of an artist's life when he has sacrified all to his art.

Plots are in the air. All you have to do is to reach out and take them, at first you must learn to know what plots are and grab plots and not the similar looking but utterly different incident germs, which are similar to plots but which lack their solidity.

Don't Bother Universal.

The Universal announces it is not in the market for any scripts whatever and will not read or accept any until further notice. Most of the Universal directors have always written their own stuff.

Those Books.

We now have in our library books by Esenwein and Leeds, Wright, Phillips, Ball, Slevin, Radnor, Thomas, Wiltermood, Hoagland, Dench, Gordon, Carr, Ross (Penn, Ass.). Katterjohn and Earl. We also have the courses of McIntyre, Moore, Watt and Atlas.

If you have any other book that you do not care for and want to sell, please state the title and price and give your address. This latter may seem to be unnecessary, but one man from Rochester wrote an offer, but gave no address.

One correspondent refused to make a price on the Gordon book, offering it for the good of the craft. It is the worst that we have seen, particularly when it is understood that the book costs two dollars. It consists of eight pages of type, a sample script, a sample of script paper with dotted lines to show how to fold, a list of addresses, many of them obsolete, and two slips of paper the size of ten and eleven envelopes. Most of it is a crude condensation of our own Technique of the Photoplay with such vicious additions as the Atlas letter to the editor asking what he wants and the absolutely incorrect statement that scripts can be copyrighted.

Earl's "Book," which is "free" only you must send a dollar, is done in typewriting, apparently on a multigraph and bound in cover paper. It is what he has been able to learn from this department. It is issued in connection with his work as a sales bureau.

The Wiltermood offering is also loose sheets bound in cover paper, but printed. Much of the text is good, but the sample script is not good technique.

The Moore lessons are very badly done. He has none of the marks of a teacher, but contents himself with bald statements.

Most of the books seem to be based on our own or the Leeds-Esenwein book, but often the meanings are twisted in paraphrasing, and practically none of them are teaching books.

We would like to procure a full set of these books. Will you help?

Professor Powell.

A Van Buren Powell will succeed Arthur Leeds as instructor in the Home Correspondence Schools course in photoplay.

Bolstering Up.

Business must be bad with the Thomas school. Now he announces that as a special favor you can send only ten dollars and the other twenty when you have sold your second photoplay. This looks as though he were certain that he can teach you to write plays that sell, but it probably really means that he'll gamble with Fate on the other twenty rather than not even get the ten. Of course you must join "NOW" because he is going to keep all of these pupils in the same class.

And he speaks of his scenario plot chart. Marc Edmund Jones please take notice. Jones invented the idea of drawing two straight or wriggly lines to demonstrate that John meets Bess. As an aid to progress it's as useful as steam heat in Hades.

"Mat" Remarks.

E. W. Matlack, after writing that, unlike a recent correspondent, he does not have let downs, but sticks to a general average of three a week, adds:

> My bunch of Inquesters are getting rather despirited. Outside of Clark and myself, no one is selling, although I am reasonably sure that if two or three of them would dig below the surface and put some smoke into their stuff, their chances would be better. There is no use blaming the war, or the narrow market, and a lot of other things. I still cling to your old bromide that if you can write what they want, it will find a harbor. Not that my early going was so smooth and I had a lot to learn—and still have for that matter—why just the other night, I got out your old Tecq and re-read it—and found lots of good dope—stuff that goes double today.

The Inquest is the Pittsburgh circle, and Mr. Matlack has the right diagnosis. If you can give them what they want they'll take it. But the trouble is that at the moment some of the companies do not know what they want. They know the stuff they have been making is not selling as it should, and they do not realize that more care given the production of one and two reel subjects is the real answer to their financial problem.

Polishing.

One young man writes that he has written his script over and over again and still it does not seem to sell. Naturally not. It is his first script. His single, solitary idea. He thinks that he can learn the art of photoplay writing by working on that one script. He cannot. Even were he able to eventually polish that script to the highest approximation of perfection he would still know only how to write that one script.

But he never will make this single script perfect because long before he gets half way through it he will be so tired of it all that he simply cannot do good work. The only thing to do is to work on a script a week or two and go on to another and another, finding fresh problems in each new plot and so, gradually acquiring a working knowledge of the entire game instead of seeing it only from the angle of that lonesome plot.

Too many beginners start to work with the idea of selling their first script before they write their sceond. It cannot be done that way, as a rule and where the first sale does happen it hurts the sale of many more than the next because it incites a feeling of overconfidence.

It is better, at the start, to write a hundred ideas once than one idea a hundred and fifty times, because perhaps the hundredth script will give the student the idea that will permit him to make the first plot over into something decent.

The Boss' Stamps.

Of course it does not affect the value of your scenario if you hook, steal, swipe, borrow or abstract your postage from the office stamp box, but it does get the editor guessing if you send in a good script and the return stamps are punched. Stamps are punched by large concerns to indicate theft and prevent their being sold to brokers. An editor is apt to imagine that an author who will steal his postage will not be over particular as to the source of his inspiration. He cannot know that the boss told you to help yourself or that your father is the boss. All he knows is that the stamps are perforated. He is apt to regard you as a thief.

This applies with almost equal force to the stamped envelope with the business card in the corner scratched out, and it goes double for the young genius who sends us in an inquiry twice or three times a week and each time sends a going and return envelope with the essential part of the return card cut out with a knife. In our own editorial days we threw out more than one script because of apparently stolen stamps and careful editors still follow that plan.

Emotions.

Study emotions before you write them and you'll know which emotion best fits the situation. Take these three scenes.

A—Railroad station, close to gate—Maude and mother enter—Maude kisses mother passionately—tries to follow her through gate—guard checks her—she weeps.

B—Railroad station—close to gate—Maude and mother enter—they kiss—mother shows ticket—passes through gate—Maude tries to follow—guard checks her—she stands there, tense and rigid, trying to hold back the tears.

C—Railroad station—close to gate—Maude and Mother enter—they kiss—mother to train—Maude waves her hand—turns and exits.

There are three scenes that you may see any day. Suppose that Mother is going a few miles out of town to visit friends and Maude is going shopping. Naturally you use scene C. There is nothing here to suggest a long parting. No great emotion is aroused. Maude is in a hurry to get to the shops. She will see her mother at the dinner table. Either A. or B. would be out of place.

But suppose that the mother is going on a long journey. She may be gone for months or perhaps for ever. Here one of the first two scenes will be called for, but which? It depends on Maude, her mother or both. If the two are passionately attached to each other, and Maude is emotional, then A. would seem to be called for. If Maude must be shown as a restrained, self-contained girl, then B will be better, showing the control she possesses over her emotions. A still stronger situation can be evolved if Maude is a girl of the type shown in A., but holds her emotion in check as in B. because she knows that her abandonment to tears will make the parting still more trying to her mother. In that case a follow scene showing how at last tears come to her relief when they can flow unchecked will be the stronger through contrast. And lastly if the mother never has been a real mother to the girl; if she is of the vapid, butterfly type of society woman, then even the long parting would call for scene C. as showing that the two women have little in common.

Not all parting scenes call for bitter tears. The type of women must be studied by the author because it is through their actions that he tells his spectators the sort of men and women his characters are. It is not sufficient to play a scene in the most obvious manner. Draw character from action. Make your people possessed of an individuality. Make them real and not puppets.

There are as many shades to any emotion as there are possible combinations of colors. Know your mind-children so well, and know the expression of emotion so well that you can, almost instinctively give the exact shade of stress.

Don't argue that you don't know just how that man or this would act in a given situation. It is your business to know and you have no business calling yourself an author until you do know. It is not sufficient that you want to write. To be a real author you must know how to write and this knowledge is inherent ability developed through study and practice, and until you have given your full quota of study and practise you are not an author but a fourflush, no matter how many scripts you have sold.

Novelty.

You may go down the same street on your way to work six times a week and fifty-two weeks a year, and there may be only one or two mornings when something really sensational happens. If you keep your eyes open you'll see interesting things every block, but it is not every day that you dodge a runaway horse or see a man killed by a trolley car. It is pretty much the same way with your plots at first. You may write fifty and of these but one will have the necessary punch. It follows, then, that not all you write will be worth sending out, so don't send out anything until you are not only certain that there really is a punch to the stuff, but that you have given it the best possible technical development.

It is all very well to argue that you can't tell how you are getting along unless you send out, but remember Noah when he landed. He sent out a bird and it did not come back, so he waited a week and tried again. He didn't bundle the whole menagerie out of the ark the moment he made soundings. He took it easy. We never could quite underdstand why Noah didn't look out of the window and see for himself, but at least he took things easy and did not try to rush the season, wherein he is to be emulated.

Try out one of your very best now and then, but hug to your heart the fact that you'll have to do a lot of work to get your stuff up to a grade where you can possibly hope to compete with others.

Revision Schemes.

Eventually the revision scheme will displace the school fake as a money-making scheme because, carefully run, there is less danger of interference. If a man advertises to revise a script and does so, it is a legal compliance with a contract and wholly within the law. It does not matter how poor the revision may be nor how hopeless the plot may have been in the first place. With these factors the law has nothing to do. If the advertiser performs his contract he stands clean in the eyes of the law. A correspondent writes:

> Enclosed herewith, you will find sundry advertising matter which I received from the Story Revision Co., Smethport, Pa., upon replying to one of their advertisements in a magazine about six weeks ago.
> I sent these people twenty-five cents for a sample scenario and in this same envelope enclosed a story entitled, "The Poor Preacher and the Rich Deacon," also a stamped envelope for the return of the manuscript. I asked them to give me a free criticism on the story as advertised and asked them if they thought the story might be made into a good photo play.
> I received a sample photoplay in a one cent envelope after several days. I waited awhile to receive an acknowledgment of my manuscript and the free criticism which they promised to give me, thinking of course, that it would come along together with the manuscript itself, for which I enclosed postage. Not hearing from them in about ten days, I wrote to them and called their attention to the fact. I heard nothing from this first reminder, so in a few days I wrote them another letter asking them why they did not acknowledge my letter or return the manuscript. I thereupon received a postal card written with pen which simply stated: "Criticism was mailed you two days ago." Not receiving it, I wrote them to return my manuscript; I then received the free criticism which I attach hereto. Upon receipt of this free criticism, I explained that, inasmuch as they had delayed, and failed to treat me in a businesslike manner, I had written them to return the manuscript and wished that they would return it as I had made arrangements elsewhere. I am also enclosing the letter they send out with their free criticism.

The "criticism" is a printed sheet stating, in print, that the story is a "Class B" production. They have three classes: scripts ready to be submitted; scripts needing revision, and scripts that are so impossible that they must be returned. It is a matter for speculation as to whether this last classification is ever used. The plot is "very good" but the style "weak." It will cost $3 to make into a play from what appears to be a full synopsis.

Another correspondent states that he paid $5 to have his script developed and the story was spoiled. A third writes that he entered some stuff for sale and on its return it did not look as though it had been out of the office.

Another, a placing service, offers free instruction, but you must pay a dollar for a book. Others work the extras in various ways, but most manage to get all the money a would-be author has.

A hint as to their capacity may be gained from the Smethport sample script which states that one reel plays average "about 23 to 25 scenes." And this in a day when few plays are released under forty scenes to the reel! Smethport says "we have seen excellent plays with 17 scenes, others with 30." Even so. And if they had seen as many plays as they should have, they would be able to recall plays with one scene to the reel and others up to 120 scenes to the reel.

When the blind seek to lead the blind, someone will tumble into a pit.

Lone Leaders.

In her articles in the Chicago Herald, Mrs. Parsons makes a plea for a lot of leader. She quotes from William Lord Wright and our Technique of the Photoplay, advising that leader be used sparingly, and then—

> I have quoted two men who are well-known photoplaywrights, and, while I cannot say that I agree with them, I think it is only fair that you should have the two sides of the question presented to you. I believe, of course, that a certain economy of subtitles is necessary, but I want to emphasize most emphatically the necessity of using enough leaders to make your story clear.
> In these days of advanced scenario writing the elimination of subtitles is not the first consideration, rather the revising and polishing of these sentences until they are written in telling language. Your English, your power of expression and your literary style have all a part in the subtitles of the newer photoplay.
> You cannot be prodigal in your language and interpose any unnecessary flowery phrases; footage is too precious. Neither must you express yourself in the stilted words of a child just learning to talk.

Mrs. Parsons cannot quote from either of the books in question any advice to shorten leaders at the expense of clearness, nor can she cite any advice to leave out necessary leaders. We are just as strong for fully explanatory leaders as Mrs. Parsons can ever be, but we urge writers not to be lazy and sloppy in their work. We point out that the leader should be avoided where possible and that often a little common sense and thought will permit the action to be so framed as to be as fully explanatory as a hundred-word leader. In a word, you do not merely write action and leader according to the need of the moment, but you should figure out how to avoid leaders. Most of the time it can be done, but it is a lot easier to loaf along and let the leader cover up slovenly development. The fool cutting editor will put in plenty of leaders without your helping. It is getting to be a disease with some of them, a chronic but, most unfortunately, not a fatal disease. Nothing is more inartistic than a leader "John goes down the street," and then a walk through picture, but this is what a lot of unfortunates are being educated up to because they see it on the screen and suppose it must be right.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents. stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without study.

Question No. 79.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is a water rheostat? How woud you make one? Could you handle 500 volt current temporarily with water rheostat? What would be the limit of amperage when using a water rheostat? Could you use a water rheostat on either A. C. or D. C.? Could you use dirty, impure water, or would very clean, pure water, say distilled water, be better? Would you add anything to the water, and if so, what and how much?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 73.

The Roll of Honor on question 73 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico; A. C. Stewart, Waitsburg, Washington; Montreal, Canada; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; Harry W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana; B. M. Spencer, Attleboro, Massachusetts; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; R. T. St. James, Great Barrington, Massachusetts; J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tennessee, and Los Angeles, California.

There were a number of excellent replies, but none really suitable for publication. The trouble with some otherwise very good answers was they were too technical; that particularly applied to Brother Spencer; that is to say, too technical to be understood by the average reader. Others left out some important part. Everything considered I have decided to apply my own knowledge of the subject, supplemented by a careful reading of the various replies, and answer the question myself, so that the answer is really to be credited to the entire Roll of Honor.

Reply to Question No. 73.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

Explain, in plain, understandable terms, the action of a transformer. What purpose does it serve? One transformer may deliver a 50-volt, and another a 1,000-volt secondary, both taking the same supply. How is this? Explain fully. What is the approximate efficiency of a well designed and constructed transformer? Where should an economizer be located, and what precautions must be observed in locating it? If an economizer became so hot you could not lay your hand on it, what would you conclude? Suppose you connected the secondary of your economizer to the line by mistake; approximately, what would the voltage at the arc be?

The Answer:

The action of the transformer is simple. It depends for its operating principle on the fact that every wire carrying A. C. is surrounded by a magnetic field, and if a second wire be placed in close proximity to a wire carrying A. C., and in such position that the lines of force of the magnetic field will cut the second wire in a certain direction (under this condition the two wires must run parallel for a portion of their length in order to get the effect), a secondary electro-motive force will be set up in the second wire, although it has no mechanical connection whatever with the first or current carrying wire.

In a transformer this law is taken advantage through the building up of a strong magnetic field, and winding the wire in that field in such manner that the lines of force of the field cut the wire a great many times.

The construction is as follows: A large number of very thin (the thinner the better, 1/100 of an inch being best) plates of a certain kind of iron, made specially for the purpose, are cut into either a square or a rectangle shape, with the center punched out. These plates are then painted with an insulating compound, clamped tightly together, and two coils of copper wire bearing heat resisting insulation are wound thereon, both coils being completely insulated from the core, in a certain fixed location with regard to each other, the aforesaid location differing with different types of transformers. In some the primary is wound over the secondary, in others the primary is wound on one leg of the core and the secondary on another. In fact there are a number of different methods of placing the two coils, but that is a constructural detail and has nothing to do with the principle of operation, which will be described later. In the case of a step-down transformer (one in which the voltage is reduced) the primary will be called upon to carry a less number of amperes than the secondary, therefore the primary coil will be of smaller wire than the secondary, or, in other words, the secondary will be a heavier wire than the primary. In operating room transformers it is necessary to vary the amperage. Now amperage on the secondary will vary in direct proportion to the relative number of turns in the primary and secondary coil. Thus, if the primary had fifty turns and the secondary twenty-five, the secondary would deliver a greater number of amperes than if the primary had forty turns and the secondary twenty-five. This fact is taken advantage of as follows: taps, usually three in number, are connected to the primary coil at different points, and a switch connection made in such manner that by moving the handle current is taken through tap 1, which is the end of the coil, thus putting all the turns of wire on the primary coil into action which gives the highest amperage possible with that transformer; by moving the switch connection is made with tap No. 2, which cuts out a few turns of the primary, thus reducing the amperage; again moving the switch, connection is had with tap No. 3, which cuts out still more turns, and still further reduces the amperage.

The electric action is as follows: The primary coil is connected directly to the supply line, which must be of the voltage and cycle for which the transformer was built. The secondary is connected to the arc lamp (speaking, of course, of an operating room transformer). Now, when current is switched on a strong magnetic field is instantly set up in the transformer core, and the primary coil instantly becomes a choke coil, and a choke coil so effective that almost no current at all flows. When, however, the carbons of the arc lamp are brought together, thus short-circuiting the secondary, current instantly starts flowing in the primary, and this current, while it is not taken from the primary directly, and is an entirely separate, secondary, induced current, still in another sense it is taken from the primary through what you might term a magnetic belt, and the proof of this is that the cycle of the secondary current will be identical with the cycle of the primary, and the amount of energy taken from the primary will be exactly equal to the amount consumed in the secondary, plus the loss in the transformer itself due to magnetic leakage and other causes. Many electricians lay stress on the fact that the secondary current is an entirely separate and distinct current, having no connection whatever with the primary current—meaning that it is not taken from the primary. With this I must disagree. It is as well to say that the motor consuming power in a planing mill is not connected with the generator in the power house. To my mind it is precisely the same thing. In one place the generator or engine in the power house is connected to the motor in the planing mill, or elsewhere by an electric belt, and in the other case the primary coil is connected to the secondary coil by a magnetic belt.

The transformer, as applied to the projection circuit, serves the purpose of reducing the voltage without such heavy loss as is necessary with the rheostat. The reason one transformer may deliver a 50-volt and another a 1,000-volt secondary, both taken from the same supply, is found in the relative number of turns the secondary bears to the number of turns in the primary, as has already been explained. In the case of the 110 V. transformer having a 50-volt secondary, the secondary would have but few turns compared to the primary, whereas in the other case (1,000 V. secondary) it would have a great many times the number of turns in the primary. A transformer having a certain number of turns in the primary, and the same number of turns in the secondary, would deliver the same voltage it received. By adding turns to the secondary the voltage would be increased and by cutting out turns of the secondary it would be decreased. The efficiency of a transformer may run as high as 97 per cent., but in the case of a low voltage operating room transformer actual test of a number of these devices made by the Consolidated Gas and Electric Light Company, New York City, show an efficiency of approximately 80 per cent. It is only very recently I have succeeded in getting these figures.

The economizer should be located in the operating room, and at a point where the operator can reach it from operating position and instantly change the amperage at will, but it should always be placed on insulating material, and under no conditions be less than 12 inches from the lining of a metal lined operating room, because a transformer is nothing more or less than a powerful magnet, and as such it is likely to set up vibration in the metal, causing a loud humming sound and a loss in efficiency.

The temperature, which would be uncomfortable to the hand, would not necessarily mean there was anything wrong. Transformers are designed to withstand a temperature seventy degrees in excess of the surrounding atmosphere, therefore the best guide is to take the temperature near the transformer and then stick the same thermometer in against the coils. If it goes up more than 70 degrees there is something wrong. If smoke comes from the transformer cut it out immediately; it means that one of the coils is short-circuited. Its repair will be a job for the manufacturer. If a 110-volt economizer's secondary be connected to the supply by mistake the condition would be dangerous. The voltage at the arc would then be approximately 375.

Makes a Fine Library.

E. L. Meyer, Benld, Illinois, encloses $2.50 and says:

> Send me the second edition of the Handbook. I have the first edition and want a new one. It is too useful to do without. Every operator ought to have one. I have a set of Hawkins' Electrical Guide and that together with your Handbook makes a fine operator's library. The questions you are running in the department are fine. Keep up the good work! I do not answer but I am studying hard.

All of which requires no comment by the editor.

Greatest Thing Done.

H. Ducharme, North Hampton, Massachusetts, says:

> Enclosed find answer to question 69. These questions certainly are the greatest thing ever done for the projection end of the business, and I have had many things made clear to me that I could not seem to understand. Wrote several answers but did not dare send them, however, fearing that you might think your efforts were not appreciated. I have at last mustered courage to break in and here is the result. Enclosed find twenty-five cents for the second list of questions.

It does not require any courage to butt in on this question proposition. If your effort is not correct enough to reach the Roll of Honor nobody knows that but me, and in any event you have done your duty and you have learned something. If operators were as alive to their own interest as they ought to be there would be something like fifteen or twenty thousand answers a week, so I suppose I may be duly thankful there are not, for heaven only knows what I would do under those conditions. I am pretty nearly swamped as it is.

A Few Questions.

H. Coates, Saginaw, Michigan, encloses $2.50 for the Handbook, and says:

> I would like to ask a few questions. Have noticed lately that quite a few operators seem to have trouble with film running off the lower sprocket. Mr. George Mave of this city owns four theaters, three of which have Simplex machines—two in each house, and every one of them have this trouble. It seems to me the Precision Machine Company ought to give this matter special attention. The machines I speak of are practically new. We use Universal service. And now let me tell you that when the teeth of these machines indent the film they make two little dots with a cross-bar joining them, somewhat resembling a dumb-bell. I have been watching the fight on censorship. Is censorship going to ruin the movies? It looks very much that way to me. I do not see why they want to cut out such strips as they do.

I do not think the Simplex machine is any worse in regard to the matter complained of than are some of the other popular machines. Also I have no doubt but that the trouble will be remedied, and I think you will stop your trouble if you will very carefully line the lower sprocket idler with the sprocket and adjust it so that it is just a trifle more than the thickness of the film away from the sprocket. As to the censor proposition, well it was first brought into being by some very flagrant abuses on the part of producers. Now you know, and I know, and everybody else knows there is a certain element in every community who either have no business of their own or who prefer to attend to the business of others rather than their own, and this busy-body element quickly discovered the fact that here was a glorious opportunity. The abuses were remedied but it is an awful job to pry these sharp-jawed individuals loose. They found an outlet for their misdirected energies which kept them gloriously busy, which is fairly popular with the unthinking, and actually gets a bit of the lime light turned in their direction occasionally. Let go? Not on your life If there were nothing but Sunday School shows they would want to censor them, and cut out something, and then when they have got through with their censoring for the day, they take their children and go to a legitimate theater and calmly witness a melodrama in which there is, at least, one drunken sot, proudly displayed to the audience as a principal in the production, and not less than two and probably three soul harrowing murders. In fact only two or three days ago I read of an operatic production, pulled off in the Metropolitan Opera House, the home of ne plus ultra grand opera of America, in which, so the papers said, there were six murders, but the censors were delightfully absent. No, they won't ruin the movies. Don't you let that worry you, Brother Coates. But I strenuously object to one or two men undertaking to tell a whole city of three or four million human beings what they shall and what they shall not look at, as is the case in Chicago.

The Fort Wayne Economizer.

C. R. Metchear, of the Boston office of the Fort Wayne Electric Works, contributes a reply to question 70, which, however, is not really a reply to the question, I think, but, nevertheless, since it contains valuable information concerning the Fort Wayne D. C. to D. C. economizer, I feel it ought to have space. Mr. Metchear says:

> The question asks if it is possible to substitute a motor generator set, called a D. C. to D. C. economizer for rheostatic control. It is. But the Fort Wayne D. C. to D. C. compensarc is not a motor-generator set, except in mechanical appearances. In some special cases this machine may be built as a motor-generator; for instance, where a theater can only get 500 to 550 volts D. C. supply. Under those conditions a D. C. 500 volt motor coupled to a specially made D. C. generator would constitute a D. C. to D. C. compensarc for such service, but the D. C. to D. C. compensarc designed for 110 or 220 volt D. C. service is not a motor-generator set, since the field and armature circuits of motor generator sets are not electrically interconnected, as is in the case with the Fort Wayne D. C. to D. C. compensarc. In this machine neither of the two units of the set can be referred to as a generator or a motor, as the two armatures are connected in series across the line, and one is, therefore, just as much a motor as is the other. Any electrician familiar with balancer sets designed for handling the unbalance in the neutral of an Edison 110-220 volt three-wire service will readily understand the principle of the Fort Wayne D. C. to D. C. compensarc. The second sentence of the question refers to the generator of this set, but as has already been made clear, it has no generator, except in the case of the special 550 volt machine. No resistance is necessary in series with the arc, since one of the armatures of the D. C. compensarc is wound to give proper arc voltage, and the field circuit is in itself made up of variable resistance whereby the lamp voltage may be varied. With regard to the third sentence in the question—watts taken from the line, when using a D. C. compensarc on 230 volt service, is 2,600, which gives 35 amperes at 55 volts at the arc, or, an arc wattages of 1,925 watts, which shows 675 watts loss in overcoming friction of brushes on commutators, windings, field excitation and hysterisis, or core losses. These figures you will note give an efficiency of 74 per cent. (Mind the editor of this department does not vouch for that 74 per cent. That is Brother Metchear's statement. We hope it is true, but doubt it, if the figures are taken under ordinary operating room conditions. By this I mean that I don't think there is a single motor-generator set on the market that will show an actual every day efficiency of 74 per cent. My own experience is if they show 65 they are doing well—some of them very well indeed.—Ed.) Compare this with the rheostat where 35 amperes from a 230 volt supply is 8,050 watts, which shows a loss in the rheostat of that amount less 1,925, or, 6,125 watts as against 675 lost in the D. C. compensarc. On 110 volt service (other conditions being the same) the D. C. compensarc will save 1,425 watts as against the rheostat. The next question asked is if waste is eliminated with these sets, and this is what I have answered in the above.

I will not comment on this more than to say that the Fort Wayne is a good machine, but it will have to be demonstrated to me very clearly that any motor generator will show an actual every-day efficiency of more than 65 to 70 per cent.

Wants an Answer.

A correspondent who forgot to put the name of the town on his letter, and whose signature looks like a cross between a crow track and a badly scrambled egg, says:

> Please answer the following in the department. We have a 3½ k.w., 60 volt D. C., Detroit generator belted to a 6 h.p. Fairbank-Morse special electric gasoline engine, using about 35 amperes at the arc. After running two reels our voltage drops from 60 to 56 and 58. The dynamo is located about 130 feet from the operating room. We have no rheostat, but have a coil of wire. What kind of rheostat should we use for this voltage, and what is the cause of the voltage dropping?

First when the voltage begins to drop feel of the wires. If they feel warm, that is probably the cause of your trouble—wires overloaded. In that case you should either put in larger wires or else reinforce your wires with a wire of sufficient capacity to bring the total up to the area of No. 6. You say you have a resistance coil. If it is made of iron why possibly that is the seat of your trouble, since iron has a high temperature co-efficient, which means that as its temperature rises its resistance also rises very fast. For 60 volts you should have about two coils such as are used in a 25 ampere, 110 volt rheostat. I believe the Charles A. Strelinger Company, 96 Bates street, Detroit, Michigan, can supply you with the proper device.

On the Road.

B. C. Evans, Saginaw, Michigan, says:

> Friend Griffiths claims the center of the condenser should be 2.5 times the focal length of the objective lens away from the film. In my case it does not work out right, but, nevertheless, I believe Brothers Griffiths and Arkin are on the right track, and are helping a whole lot. My lens combination is as follows: objective 5.75, with two 7.5 condensing lenses; distance back lens to crater 4 inches; distance center of condenser to aperture 17 inches. Using a 2-inch spot I get as clear a screen as I have ever seen. Current D. C.. Have figured out all the dope in the Handbook and projection department, and, according to it, my combination is wrong. Believe me, Friend Richardson, this lens game is some puzzle, but I believe it will be solved in time. Would you advise me to invest about twenty dollars to have an arc lamp made as per sketch.

I would not. Those lamps are being used now for small home projectors. Your arc is too far away from the lens. What Brother Arkin means is 4 inches from the optical center of the rear lens, which means approximately 3½ inches from its face. Are you sure your condensers are what they are claimed to be? I do not want to go into this matter now, however. You wait a little. I think you will find some dope in the department, which will be the real thing before very long.

I Was Right.

L. F. Wallace, Red Oak, Iowa, whose traveling show was recently described in the department, says:

> Don't know where my mind was when I said two and a half gallons would run the show and move the rig and the operating room. Well, anyhow, I take it all back. To settle the matter, we put two gallons of gasoline in the tank today and pulled the arc for an hour, under the same conditions as when showing. The ammeter hovered between 38 and 42. The engine varies that much. It took just one gallon and a little over a quart to run the hour, the conditions being not the best, as it was too cold for gasoline to vaporize well. The engine has a Schebler carburetor, same as your Harley-Davidson go-devil has, and we made it take all the air it would without missing. As for the tires, why, I forgot all about the darned things. We had to buy two new tires at twenty-four dollars each, and just spent fifty-two dollars on the rig; put in new exhaust valves, one new connecting rod and a new differential on the rear axle, but even then, Brother Richardson, our juice don't cost us over 5 cents per k. w. (Ha, Ha Diskivered! That is more like it, Old Top.—Ed.), and it moves itself over the roads. The five cents includes the upkeep, the depreciation and everything else. Do you figure meniscus-bi-convex condensers the same as the regulars? I want a set for a one quarter size Gundlach-Manhat objective; 75 foot throw. What would you advise? Also what M. B. C. combination for a 4-inch Gundlach objective? We want to do some experimenting with different size pictures, length of throw, etc. How long will it be before the Edison people will have their new projector ready for the market? That shutter-with-equal-blade-width appeals to me. I won't bother you again for a long time, but I wish you and the department all kinds kinds of success. And—by-the-way, as one who travels around among the smaller places and visits different operating rooms, the first thing I look for when I step in the office or operating room of a theater is a file of Moving Picture Worlds, and I have noticed without exception when the manager or operator never heard of the Moving Picture World, or the projection department, the results on the screen are rotten. No doubt the Chicago union thinks its stand on the knowledge question is correct, but the average small town operator with his bundle of Worlds and Handbook is crowding Mr. Chicago operator pretty hard. Some of the punkest projection I ever laid my eyes on was right there in that old Chicago burg.

As to the cost of current, why five cents is something more like it. I knew there was a screw loose somewhere with the former statement. As regards the meniscus-bi-convex condensers, I will refer your inquiry to the Laemmle Film Service, with a request that they supply the desired information. I expect to be in position to supply it myself before very long, but I could not do it now with certainty. I would direct attention to Brother Wallace's statement that in small towns where they deny knowledge of the projection department of the Moving Picture World screen results are invariably rotten. Well, Friend Wallace is in position to speak with considerable authority on that particular subject. Owing to the destruction of the Edison plant by fire some time since, we are informed it will be two or three months before the new projector will be on the market.

Being Carried Away.

Don L. B. Hancock, manager Lyric theater, Knoxville, Illinois, says:

> I read the department with much interest and necessarily imbibe all the James-Griffiths-Arkin optical discussion, and like it, though it seems as if some were being carried away with the subject. The projected picture is magnified, say about 25,000 times. Is the ray of light likewise magnified—surely(?) What got me started was the "reflection from the screen" converging at the aperature. (Griffiths' article November 21st issue). If a ray of light projected on the screen is magnified proportionately with the film picture through which it is projected and is then diffused (which it surely is) back into the auditorium, how does it reassemble itself after having passed from a unit into thousands of units (by diffusion) and again focus at the aperture of any machine? It is enough to make the head of the Egyptian Sphinx ache. And, by the way, how fast does light travel. Such a jumble!

No, Brother Hancock, it is not a jumble. Also granted that this particular thing has no direct bearing on projection, but it has an indirect bearing in that the studying of these various things broadens our knowledge of light action, therefore it is, I think, of value. As to the method of reconvergence, why, I understand how that happens all right, but it would take a page of this paper at least to make the matter clear. Let me reply by asking how you see the picture on the screen. Do you realize that in order to see the picture its image must be formed and focused on the retina of your eye just exactly as it is formed and focused on the film back of the lens of the idle machine? The lens takes the place of the crystalline lens of the eye; the film is the retina, and there you are. The study of such matters is interesting—also it is beneficial.

Club Organized.

Elgin, Ill., operators have organized a club designed to improve the projection of pictures in local theaters. We do not quite understand. If the boys are organized in the union and the club is merely a social feature, well and good; that is fine, but if it is otherwise we would suggest that a union would be more to the purpose.

A Nice Operating Room.

From Bangor, Maine, comes the following:

> The Park theater is located on the corner of one of the most traveled sections of the city, therefore getting its share of the patronage of our 26,000 population. The interior is lofty and spacious, and the theater has been decidedly popular, as the people seem to like its clean, well-defined lines and cosy atmosphere. Bangor has four theaters, the Bijou being a vaudeville and picture house; the others pictures only at 5 cents, except the Park, which is the only 10-cent picture house we have. The Bijou and Park theaters are controlled by the Keith people, under the able management of Stephen Bogratt, and Leslie Davis, Assistant Manager.

The operating room is 12 feet by 7 feet, with a 7-foot ceiling. Its ventilation pipe is 18 inches in diameter. When the photograph was taken the fan had been ordered, but had not arrived; it will be placed in the vent flue. The equipment consists of two latest model Simplex projectors, supplied by a Hallberg A. C. to D. C. 5 k. w. generating set, delivering 25 to 60 amperes at the arc. As will be seen in the photograph, there is a voltmeter and ammeter, and one of Hallberg's arc controllers, or ballast, to prevent the arc from fluttering while in operation. At present our operator uses 40 amperes through a 50-volt arc, and gets a clear field all the time, distance of projection 130 feet, with a 16-foot picture on a gold fibre screen. I believe our picture is one of the best that modern equipment can produce. This theater has played to capacity ever since its opening, six weeks ago, and I think this is largely by reason of the excellence of our projection. The pictures fade from one reel into the next, making one continuous performance, every reel being in perfect frame when its projection is begun. Such is the care our operator puts forth in threading that the patrons really think it is one continuous reel. The operating room is equipped with a fire extinguisher, and last, but not least, one of Richardson's Handbooks, the best authority, we think, it is possible to get on modern projection. The man behind the gun is his Royal Highness,, chief operator, Arthur C. Davis, who has been operating for the past six years and prides himself on holding down some of the big jobs in the state, this being one of them. Mr. Davis is a member of Local 198, I. A. T. S. E. The assistant operator stands by the rewind bench; he goes by the name of Clayton W. Ayer, and nobody disputes his word. Mr. Davis, assistant manager, is an old time operator. He started operating when films were 2½ inches wide, and was, in those days, called one of the best men in the operating game. He has seen seven years' actual service at turning the crank, enough to make any man a crank against his will. Lately he has been promoted to assistant manager of the Keith houses at Bangor, Me. Oh! by the way, the operating room is equipped with two A. C. economizers, so that in case of anything happening to the motor all the operator has to do is to pull one switch, throw in another and go ahead on A. C.

The operating room is excellent. There is but little to criticise. The room is clean and orderly. One error, however, is present, even as it is present in ninety-nine operating rooms out of every hundred, viz., the location of the fuse links in the fire shutter cord. Those links should be located immediately above and quite close to the magazine. Where they are they would do little or no good in case of fire. Aside from this, the installation seems to be indeed excellent, and it is the kind I like to hear of. My compliments to Brother Davis. Eveidently he is the right man in the correct position. I would like to call attention to the fact that in this instance the operator gets credit, and that is something rare enough to be almost unique.

Says It Is Good

F. J. Becker, Weston, New Jersey, sends in a year's subscription and says:

> Received the Handbook and must say it deserves all that has been said about it, although I was a little disappointed at not finding anything with relation to electric generating plants. Suppose, though, you will get that in your next edition. Of course, we cannot expect everything in such a small book—430 pages; as it is it must have been some job to incorporate what you have in that amount of space. What size generator would you advise to operate two machines, one spot light and fifty incandescents. Also, what would you do in a case where you were supplied with 110 volt A. C. public service current, and wished to switch over from one to the other—I mean for the incandescent circuit as well as for the machine circuit? Would it be all right to install a transformer or rheostat on the A. C. to reduce the voltage to that of the D. C. line? On page 379 of the Hand-book under "Stereopticon Slides," you say slide measures 3¾x4 inches. (That is a typographical error; should be 3¼.—Ed.) Also, I believe, Fig. 167, line 5, page 405, should read 175. I do not suppose these small errors amount to much, but they are, nevertheless, confusing when you first look at them.

Yes, that is the fact, Brother Becker, but it is a mighty hard job to get out a book of that kind without any errors at all. Yes, the 167 should be 175. As to the size of generator I would rather you would consult manufacturers about that, because a considerable depends on the kind of machine, its voltage, etc. Just give the manufacturer the dope as to what you want to operate, and require from him a written guarantee that what he sells you will do the work. That is the best way. As to resistance, yes, you can install a rheostat to reduce the voltage, but you must cut out your D. C. motors during the time you are running on A. C. I would not advise the installation of a transformer, because presumably you will only use the A. C. once in a great while in case of emergency, and a transformer is costly. You can, of course, connect so as to switch from one to the other by means of a double-pole, double-throw switch, as per Fig. 43, page 102 of the Handbook.

Fires the Arc Back.

R. E. Wicker, Pinehurst, North Carolina, sends in some dope on the Powers Six Machine which I have referred to the Nicholas Power Company. Incidentally, I may say, however, that granting the correctness of his theory with regard to the toggle gear, its application would be not only impractical, but, I believe, quite impossible. Brother Wicker winds up by saying:

> I've got the hooks on my a.c. arc all right. We use 220 volt current through compensarc, and that arc has been known to come out of the lamphouse and go around the corner to the corner saloon for a drink (dry state too) in spite of all I could do. Previous to operating I was in the electrical business, so I used the principle of the Garton-Daniels lighting arrester. I got enough asbestos insulated wire to wrap a small magnet and mounted it inside my lamphouse, just back of the arc, with the core within ¾-inch of the arc gap, connected four dry cells in series with a push button and the magnet. Now, when Mr. Arc starts for the back door I push the button, and zing! Mr. Magnet starts to fire magnetic lines of force and slams the arc back into place. It is quite possible to blow the arc out in this manner. Why not ride that go-devil down to the sand-hills? I have one too and I'll show you the country. Received the Handbook and it is all to the good.

Yep, Brother Wicker, that magnet stunt is well known. If you will notice that in dealing with that problem one of the things I looked for was magnetic influence, because it could blow the arc the other way you know. The principle is an old one, and, as you say, the arc can be blown entirely out. As to visiting you, why I have been in Pinehurst—about eight years ago. I'm afraid if I took my go-devil into the sand-hills it would be on top more than half the time, and I would not like that.

Light Trouble.

Irving Levi, manager Alamo Theater, Gadsen, Alabama, orders a Handbook and says:

> Am having a little trouble with my light since I began using American made carbons, or possibly I am hoodooed. We use a.c. through a Fort Wayne compensarc, projecting on a gold fibre sceen, using a Simplex machine which has been in use for about a year. Everything in the plant is in good condition. The trouble is a "ghost" on the screen continuously. I have set the carbons at different angles, changed the condensers and cleaned all parts, but it is still there. Use ⅝-inch cored carbons, the same as I used before, except as to the make. I receive much help from the department, as does my operator, Mr. Humphries, who is in a class by himself in this city and district. We receive films every day from Birmingham, and they come to us soaked in oil. On the first run we have to stop continually on account of poor patches. I complained to the exchange until I saw it did no good and quit. Am just arranging to close for repairs and thought the Handbook might help me a great deal in getting at the thing right.

As to the light trouble, possibly you have changed condensers and have gotten one that is not the focal length you think it is. You have not told me the width of the picture and the length of throw, therefore I cannot judge as to that. Thirty amperes is not enough current when using a.c. By no stretch of the imagination can you get a really high-class result with that amount of current, and I do not think an ammeter would show less than forty, though I may be mistaken, but if you are really using 30 amperes try two ½-inch cored carbons, and match your condensers with the objective as per the table published in the department recently. First, however, carefully measure the condenser lenses, as per page 357 of the Handbook, to be sure they are what they are supposed to be. If you will advise us as to the width of your picture and length of throw I will be able to tell you what you ought to do.

Teeter in Pictures.

G. W. Thomas, Marshalltown, Iowa, complains that his 6 A goes on the rampage about once a month and injures films at the lower sprocket. He sends in a bunch of samples in proof, and says:

> I have a teeter in my picture; not a bad jump, but just an up-and-down movement. Another operator told me my intermittent shaft was sprung, but how can that be, if the movement is not regular? (It could not. Probably it is due to worn bushings or dirt on the intermittent sprocket. Clean your sprocket thoroughly with a tooth brush and some kerosene or gasoline at least once a day.—Ed.) I have a new shaft. I am going to start answering the questions soon, and now last but not least——.

And right there the brother "takes up something else again" which I do not think it would be advisable to publish at this particular time, though I hope to be able to say more about it later on. He informs me that operators' salaries are from twenty to twenty-five dollars in that city. As to the sprocket matter, I answered that, and the film injury I am referring to the Nicholas Power Company. I think that, in as much as the trouble only occurs "once a month," it is not the fault of the machine.

Is This True?

From a seemingly authoritative source comes the information that a boy fourteen years old, in short pants, took the examination in Nashville, Tennessee, paid his two dollars, was given a license and complete charge of an operating room at five dollars a week.

If this is true then it strikes me that the new Nashville license is—well, something a good deal worse than a joke.

Reading Is Cheap.

D. P. Carpenter, Starke, Florida, says:

> Why is it the new nitrogen filled incandescent light has not been described in the department? I have been reading in magazines that it can and is being used for the projection of motion pictures and that it provides a better light than even does the electric arc. If this is true why has it not been mentioned in the operators' sanctum sanctorum of the Moving Picture World? The department has sure done lots of good. The M. P. World is worth more to me than any other moving picture publication. A week or so ago I noticed where a correspondent was criticising another department in another publication. I, myself, get that magazine, and it affords me considerable amusement to read some of the things published therein.

When the nitrogen filled lamp becomes available as an illuminant for motion picture projection the department will inform you of the fact—if it ever does become available. It does not cost much to read about things in magazines. Magazines, as a rule, are looking for a good "story," and the little item called truth does not cut much figure if the thing makes a good yarn. In this poor, foolish department, however, strange as it may appear, we cling to the old-fashioned idea, and put truth ahead of everything else. The nitrogen filled lamp bids fair to be a marvelously effective illuminant. One of the high officials of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company was telling me not long ago that he believed it would be available for moving picture projection before long. I told that gentleman then, and I tell you now, I don't believe it. I do not believe it within the range of possibility that sufficient light intensity can be concentrated into a small enough space through the medium of an incandescent lamp filament to make the thing available for projection of moving pictures, except in small home machines where nothing above a six-foot picture is required, and where the illumination is by no stretch of the imagination brilliant. As to the other publication as I told you before we do not criticise our esteemed contemporaries. We have got plenty to do attending to our own knitting.

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

THE MAID OF ROMANCE (Biograph), March 22.—A young girl is left a fortune, becomes convinced that ulterior motives are actuating a trio of suitors, takes a position as maid in a wealthy family, the son of the house falls in love with her, she comes to his financial rescue, and all ends happily. A precocious small child is one of the best things in the film. Augusta Anderson makes everything possible of the heiress, and Chas. Perley is the unheroic hero.

ONLY THE MAID (Edison), March 22.—Ashley Miller's one-reel drama opens with a murder and ends with a fight. The attempt of a criminal to entrap a wealthy young girl, furnishes the basic motive. A quick-witted maid and her policeman lover frustrate the designs of the polished villain. Everything is in accord with the rules for writing and staging this class of drama. Sally Crute is the daughter of wealth, and Herbert Prior the wide-awake policeman.

SWEEDIE LEARNS TO RIDE (Essanay), March 22.—In this one-reel comedy Wallace Beery gives a remarkable demonstration of the several thousand different ways of mounting—also of falling off, of a horse. Mr. Beery's broad and vigorous comedy methods have ample opportunity while "Sweedie" is taking her first riding lesson. The horse that Mr. Beery rides gives him patient support.

PATSY ON A YACHT (Lubin), March 22.—No. 13 of the "Patsy Bolivar" series runs true to form and forecasts many trials and tribulations for Patsy—he is married to Jane. The marriage is led up to through an amusing trail of Patsy's blunders. It is to be hoped that this venture will not prove the crowning blunder of poor Patsy's life.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 23, 1915 (Selig), March 22.—The launching of the dreadnaught, Pennsylvania, at Newport News, Va., is the leading event in this list of news items of the world. The trial at New York of the Sperry Stabilizer for flying machines; logging at West Forks, Me.; the collier, Vulcan, sailing for Palestine with famine supplies; Russian Poland war scenes, and the latest fashions are included.

MR. JARR AND THE LADY REFORMER (The Jarr Family Series No. 3) (Vitagraph), March 22.—Mr. Jarr takes a trip to Chicago, gets taken for a White Slaver while on the sleeper, gets mixed up with a stout actress and a slim Lady Reformer, gets handcuffs, gets put off the train, gets into other horrible scrapes, gets out of them and gets safely home. A merry instalment of the other fellow's miseries.

HANS AND HIS BOSS (Edison), March 23.—Jessie Stevens, "Arty," "Waddy" and Gladys Schultz constitute the comedy quartette of this one-reel comedy. The two men are rivals for the hand of the same attractive widow—she has been left $5,000 by her first husband. The devices resorted to by Hans and his Boss to capture the prize supply many hearty laughs.

HAM AMONG THE REDSKINS (Kalem), March 23.—No hero of the famous old dime novel ever slaughtered the Indians with the neatness and dispatch exhibited by "Ham" and "Bud" during the progress of this one-reel farce. Fully sustains the reputation of the "Ham" comedies.

AN EXPENSIVE VISIT (Lubin), March 23.—A well-turned one-reel comedy with the pranks of a number of college boys as the foundation of the fun. The spirit and humor put into the performance makes the film exceptionally amusing. Ed Lawrence, Oliver Hardy, Raymond McKee, Ben Walker and Chas. W. Ritchie are on the honor roll.

THE OUTLAW'S BRIDE (Selig), March 23.—A western drama, Tom Mix appearing as a resourceful sheriff who saves the girl of his choice from the consequences of a forced marriage. Plenty of blood-stirring material throughout the film.

THE NEWLY RICH (Edison), March 24.—This one-reel comedy of a man raised to sudden wealth and position, and becoming purse-proud and arrogant, contains little novel material, but is well acted by Herbert Prior, John Sturgeon, Maxine Brown, Alice Grey and others.

THE FABLE OF "THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN PERSONAL LIBERTY AND REFORM WAVE" (Essanay), March 24.—A George Ade satire upon woman in politics, and a reform wave having a tussle with the adherents of a "wideopen" policy. Full of shrewd thrusts at all parties concerned, and capital fun.

ALICE OF THE LAKE (Selig), March 24.—With but three months of life left him, according to his physician, a man offers to wed a young girl, in order to leave her his fortune. The girl is in love with another man, but, prompted by the object of her affection, she accepts the offer of the doomed man, that she may profit by his death. Man lives, wins girl's heart. (One reel.)

THE MASTER OF HIS HOUSE (Vitagraph), March 24.—Billy Quirk and Constance Talmadge have the leading roles in this one-reel comedy of domestic life. As the gentleman who sets out to rule his own domicile, Billy contrives to furnish quite a number of laughable situations, and is ably seconded by Miss Talmadge and the rest of the cast.

THE LOVE TRANSCENDENT (Biograph), March 25.—One-reel drama. The heroine marries the wrong man and is united to the faithful one after her first husband blows out his brains. She bursts in upon the gentleman just in time to prevent him from trying the dead man's remedy. A loaded revolver held to a man's head makes an effective stage picture—but not when the business is repeated in the same reel.

TWO BOLD, BAD MEN (Essanay), March 25.—Ben Turpin and Leo White are the two bad men of this film farce; Victor Potel is the village constable that hunts them down. One reel of solid fun.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 24, 1915 (Selig), March 25.—The burning of the Moulin Rouge, Paris; the "Giants" at their training camp, Marlin, Texas; Russian Poland war pictures; cross-country riding at Washington; and Grace Darling leaving Panama are the most striking of the illustrated news items shown in this film.

THE OTHER MAN'S WIFE (Vitagraph), March 25.—Another of those one-part photoplays whose advent is the occasion for heartily congratulating every one concerned. Stella B. Jackson, Ulysses Davis, George Stanley, Jane Novak, Jack Mower and Florence Dye have all an equal share in the production of this "slice of life." A man's thoughtless act and its almost tragic consequences are told in a masterly manner. Screen drama at its best.

THE TALE OF THE HAT (Kalem), March 26.—A one-reel rapid-fire farce that gives the Kalem comic corps a run for their salaries—also other strenuous activities of a laughable nature. On a par with the best of this company's burlesques.

THE THIEF IN THE NIGHT (Lubin), March 26.—There is a theatric atmosphere about this one-reel drama of George Terwilliger's that weakens its sold upon the spectator. The young man who turns thief, robs the man who has robbed him, and prevents his sister's lover from committing suicide, seems considerably overdrawn. The acting of Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley, Kempton Greene and Herbert Fortier goes a long way toward making the film acceptable.

THE CLAM SHELL SUFFRAGETTE (Selig), March 26.—A one-reel farce-comedy that fails to keep the ball of merriment rolling at sufficient speed. Everyone in the cast works with energy, but Wm. E. Wing's conception of life—and suffragettes—in prehistoric days, does not reveal sufficient humor.

THE LADY OF SHALOTT (Vitagraph), March 26.—A mildly-amusing one-reel comedy built upon Tennyson's poem, which affords Flora Finch scope for one of her lifelike portrayals of a romantic spinster. The film has a number of other good character studies, to which full justice is done by Kate Price, Wm. Shea and Jay Dwiggins.

A STOP-OFF IN NEW MEXICO (Biograph), March 26.—A half-reel, with a comic man-hunt the sole motive. A tourist and a "badman" are the leading sprinters. A spirited and amusing race is introduced, amid novel and picturesque surroundings.

A HOT-FOOT ROMANCE (Biograph), March 26.—On the same reel with "A Stop-Off in New Mexico." Another comic chase furnishes most of the fun. This time the pursuit is after a fleeing bride and groom, accompanied by a minister who marries them "on the run." The comedy keeps pace with the time record of the runners.

A FOOTHILL PROBLEM (Biograph), March 27.—In place of the usual triangle, a new turn has been given to this one-reel drama by bringing in a fourth character—the brother of the heroine, who obliglingy puts an end to the lady's brutal lover. An average good western drama. Mary Malatesta, Hector V. Sarno and C. E. Griffin are in the cast.

THE OUTLAW'S AWAKENING (Essanay), March 27.—Neva West and Bernice Sawyer are G. M. Anderson's female support in this one-reel tale of the West. The story affords "Broncho Billy" ample opportunity to ride, shoot and do the hero, with his customary effective ease. The climax is especially well done, and will make glad the hearts of Mr. Anderson's admirers.

THE GIRL AT LONE POINT (Twentieth of "The Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), March 27.—Last week Helen gave the center of the stage to a one-armed signalman; this week she more than makes up for her short respite from danger. In one of the most engrossing reels of the series, she performs stunts with a moving train that would not be believed unless given ocular demonstration. Assisting Helen Holmes are Leo D. Maloney, M. J. Murchison and G. A. Williams.

IT HAPPENED ON WASHDAY (Lubin), March 27.—A half-reel comedy, played entirely by colored actors. Considerable broad fun, which recalls the old minstrel "afterpiece." John Edwards, Mattie Edwards and "Speedy" Smith assume the leading roles.

SI AND SUE, ACROBATS (Lubin), March 27.—A team of clever acrobats is utilized in this half reel, shown in connection with "It Happened on Washday." Pete and Eva Ball make up the pair of tumblers, and their rise from life on a farm to "World Renowned Artists," provides a series of comic vicissitudes. May Hotely and Harry Loraine appear as the parents of Si and Sue.

General Film Company Specials

THE GIRL OF THE MUSIC HALL (Kalem), March 22.—Alice Joyce in the title role of this three-part drama is the strongest factor in its success. A realistic handling of the character a girl who goes from a music hall of the cheapest grade to a recognized position on the regular stage, and ends by marrying a celebrated composer would never have done at all. Miss Joyce endows the girl with an innate refinement that wins her the sympathy and liking of an entire audience.

RETRIBUTION (Selig), March 22.—James Oliver Curwood evidently believes that the stage villain is no respecter of persons and may be found inhabiting the soul of a Governor of one of the States of the Union. Such is the exalted position of the "leading heavy" in Mr. Curwood's two-part drama, the gubernatorial gentleman proving his right and title to being cast for the part by committing seduction, becoming the father of an illegitimate son, attempting bribery, trying to force a young girl into marrying him, and winding up his career of crime by the one decent act of his life—blowing out his brains. Heated material! The work of the producer and the cast deserves nothing but commendation.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER (Biograph), March 23.—The story of two brothers; the elder all firmness and self-reliance, the younger weak, pleasure loving and reckless. A two-part western drama, most of the incidents are consistent with life, and all of them make for quick action. The scenes are varied and selected with excellent judgment. Joseph McDermott, Jack Mulhall, Edward Cecil, Hector V. Sarno, Irma Dawkins and Gretchen Hartman are in the cast. All do high-grade work.

THE LITTLE STRAW WIFE (Essanay), March 23.—Reviewed by James S. McQuade on page 67, issue of April 3, 1915.

A WIRELESS RESCUE (Vitagraph), March 23.—A romance of the rail, this two-part "thriller" uses wireless telegraphy as the means of averting a disaster to an express train. The usual love story is woven into the sensational effects, the sweetheart of the conductor-hero sending the message that saves the train from plunging into an open drawbridge. An engrossing photoplay, acted in the right spirit by James Morrison, George Cooper, Dorothy Kelly and Wm. Shea.

THE DIAMOND BROKER (Kalem), March 24.—Episode No. 9 of "The Girl Detective" Series. A diamond broker is suspected of smuggling, and the case is put into the hands of the Girl Detective, in place of calling in the U. S. Secret Service. The young woman conducts the case with so much skill and contrives to throw such an interesting atmosphere around the affair, that the wisdom of chosing her is apparent. An entertaining chronicle of crime. Cleo Ridgely in the title role.

THE BLESSED MIRACLE (Lubin), March 24.—In this three-part domestic drama, by Harry Chandlee, the "eternal triangle" is handled with refreshing fidelity to fact. "The Blessed Miracle" arrives just at the right time to reunite his parents, mother and son doing well and father supremely happy at the finish. The acting of Joseph Kaufman, Ethel Clayton and Rosetta Brice, and Mr. Kaufman's production of the play, left nothing to be desired.

MEN OF THE MOUNTAIN (Lubin), March 25.—Edgar Jones is the producer and leading actor in this two-part drama of the country where one puts a rifle ball into one's enemy before allowing him to explain matters. The story is full of vigor, and is an interesting display of the primitive instincts in man. Wild mountain scenery, gun play, and a sympathetic love motive, are blended together in the drama.

A THIEF IN THE DARK (Edison), March 26.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1937, issue of March 27, 1915.

THE GREAT SILENCE (Essanay), March 26.—The three-part photoplay which has been made from the novel by H. Tipton Steck has many excellent qualities. It is dramatic, colorful, human, and the characters are drawn with a firm hand. The winter scenes in Alaska offer a strong contrast to the pictures of wealth and refinement shown in the home of the heroine. Francis X. Bushman gives one of his virile and authoritative impersonations, as the man from "The Great Silence." Beverly Bayne, Chester Beery, Frank Dayton and Bryant Washburn complete the cast of principals.

Mutual Film Corporation.

AMBROSE'S FURY (Keystone), March 25.—Mack Swain appears in this breezy low comedy number in his familiar character of Ambrose. He and a neighbor's wife disport themselves on the beach. All goes well till the husband and his own wife show up. This is a characteristic number; not very delicate in its humor but will bring many laughs.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 12, 1915 (Mutual), March 25.—Among many interesting incidents related in this number of the Mutual Weekly are the capture of a sea cow; oil lands on the reservation of the Osage Indians; and the first snowstorm in twenty-five years in San Antonio, Texas.

MIXED VALUES (Komic), March 28.—An unusually clever comedy directed by Eddie Dillon, and introducing Elmer Booth in the leading comedy role. Fay Tincher plays opposite him, and we can truthfully say that nothing much better in comedies could be desired. The story is built around a misplaced ring.

IN THE SUNLIGHT (American), March 29.—One of the "Light" series by Marc Edmund Jones. It is in two reels and very acceptable. One of the chief characters of the story is a dope fiend, and is played by Harry Von Meter, who does some realistic work. Vivian Rich plays well the role of the wife of the dope fiend; David Lythgoe is excellent as Frank Stead, the young city doctor who comes into the country and rents the offices of the dope fiend, also a doctor, after he has deserted his wife, and made a more complete wreck than ever of his life. Others of the cast who do good work are Charlotte Burton and Edith Borelli.

THE FIRST STONE (Beauty), March 30.—There are many points of interest about this little drama, in which are featured Irving Cummings and Virginia Kirtley. The story is not based on a particularly original theme, nor is it a very strong story. The production, nevertheless, is an interesting one, in which the players do themselves credit.

THE JEWELED DAGGER OF FATE (Reliance), March 29.—This illustrates the way in which a dagger brings back to the mind of a wealthy scoundrel the wrong he has done a girl in Italy. It also operates to prevent him from wronging another and restores the latter to her true lover. This makes a fairly strong, offering though it has no particularly novel features.

THE PRIMITIVE SPIRIT (Reliance), March 31.—Illustrating the way in which the desire to protect his name and honor awaken in a young man who had been taught not to fight. Wm. Hinkley is pleasing in the leading role. The photography is good and the story gets quite a hold on the observer.

THE SCHEMERS (Princess), April 2.—A comedy number of about average strength in which a quarreling bachelor and widow correspond unwittingly through a matrimonial agency. The way in which they meet at a hotel makes quite an amusing situation. There is also a second love story between the son and the niece.

THE LIFE WORTH WHILE (Thanhouser), April 4.—The story of a wealthy old skinflint who comes into contact with his brother's children and a widow and her child. This brings about a change in his character. This theme has been much more strongly handled, but is pleasingly presented here.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

BUBBLING WATER (Reliance), March 27.—The chief fault with this two-reel Reliance is that white people have been substituted for Indians. The effect of this is never good. Otherwise the picture is an attractive one. It has been directed by Arthur Mackley, and features Catherine Henry and Charles Gorman.

THE OLD CHEMIST (Majestic), March 28.—This two-reel production treats of an arrest for murder on circumstantial evidence. The old chemist, who is a sour old fellow, gets annoyed at his old negro servant, and insisting on making his own sandwich, lays the bread on some poison that he has previously spilled on the shelf, and dies from the effects. His nephew is arrested for the murder, and is freed from the charge through the efforts of a scientist who investigates on his own accord and discovers the cause. Thomas Jefferson and Augustus Carney are featured in the picture, Jefferson playing the role of the old chemist and Carney that of the scientist, and both with good effect.

THE SPIRIT OF THE MARSH (Reliance), March 31.—No. 12 of "The Runaway June" series. This continues the Bermuda adventures. The plot is again deflected and the affairs of Durban, an artist, are gone into. These affairs are very interesting and picturesque, particularly the work of the two models. The first model, when attacked by the artist, jumps to her death; the second, which is June herself, escapes his embraces. Durban himself, however, is swallowed up in the marsh. The photography and scenic effects are very good in this; the fish pictures were remarkably interesting.

THE CYCLE OF HATRED (Thanhouser), April 6.—A two-reel offering, with Flo LaBadie and Morris Foster in the cast. A widow woman, jealous of the girl's hold on the young physician, poisons some flowers. Her own child gets the flowers and inhales the poisonous odor. The doctor is called but cannot find an antidote; this is later furnished by the Hindu maid. The motive in this is not particularly strong. Its chief strength is in showing the manner in which jealousy sometimes works upon people in love. It makes on the whole an offering of about average merit.

MOLLY OF THE MOUNTAINS (Broncho), April 7.—A two-reel moonshiner story which follows its numerous predecessors very closely until the latter scenes, which are quite dramatic. The young surveyor makes love to the moonshiner's daughter. Later he refuses to marry her and tells the revenue officers of the illicit still. They enter the cave and the father escapes. He takes refuge in the surveyor's cabin; they struggle and Harlow runs away. Later Harlow is mistaken by the revenue officers for the moonshiner and shot. The shooting was dramatic, but on the whole the story has little novelty.

THE WINGED MESSENGER (Domino), April 8.—A two-reel subject, featuring Richard Stanton and Elizabeth Burbridge. Jack and his rival, Jim, are wireless operators. Jim gets the former a job on an outgoing steamer in order to get rid of him. Later he refuses to send help when the steamer is on fire. Jack and the captain are sole survivors and send a message to the girl by a carrier pigeon. This is a pretty and romantic story enacted by a pleasing cast. The fire and panic on shipboard were well pictured. A good yarn.

THE ROUGHNECK (Kaybee), April 9.—A two-reel number, featuring Wm. S. Hart as foreman of a mine who is suddenly called to New York to confer with the Hilliard heirs. They receive him coldly, the girl saying they do not receive employes socially. Though deeply stung by this treatment, he turns the tables when a letter from the dead owner is found deeding the property to himself. This is finely presented and the cast is pleasing. Enid Markey plays the girl. Though the plot is of an obvious type, it is absorbingly worked out.

Paramount Program.

GRETNA GREEN (Famous Players), March 18.—The winning personality of Marguerite Clark is the best asset of this four-part picture, reviewed in The Moving Picture World of April 3, page 69.

ARE YOU A MASON? (Famous Players), March 22.—A capital screen farce finely acted by John Barrymore. A review of the production will be found in The Moving Picture World of April 3, on page 70.

The Pathe Exchange

PATHE NEWS NO. 22, 1915 (March 17).—This number shows among other interesting items the first battalion of French Canadian soldiers recruited, drilling in preparation for departure for the war zone; a remarkable view of the automobile races at San Francisco photographed from an aeroplane; Beachy, the aviator, in his successful drop previous to the accident which caused his death; McGill College students drill near Montreal, Canada; Rome inundated by the overflow of the Tiber; the launching of the Pennsylvania, and the Bray cartoons, "Some Feathers Fly," referring comically to the attack of the Allies on Turkey.

PATHE NEWS NO. 23, 1915 (March 22).—There is shown in this issue the arrival of a party of Indians from Oklahoma at the Panama Exposition. There is also an excellent view of the skiing contest at Montreal, Canada; the Twenty-ninth Infantry off to guard the Panama Canal; remarkable illumination effects obtained at the Panama Exposition by use of quick flashes of electricity, and the Bray cartoon, "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Zeppelin."

HIS FRIEND THE CAPTAIN (April.)—This is rather a good comedy. A good deal of slapstick business has been utilized in the bringing out of the comedy. It would doubtless be an acceptable offering in most theaters.

THE STICKLEBACK (April).—On the same reel with "Picturesque France and the Grand Morin" and "A Religious Festival in India," this film presents an interesting study on the stickleback, showing numbers of them together in the water, also their nests and eggs laid ready to hatch.

PICTURESQUE FRANCE AND THE GRAND MORIN (April).—This is an exceptionally beautiful scenic bit on the same reel with the above. It has been developed in colors which, of course, enhances the beauty of the scenes.

RELIGIOUS FESTIVAL IN INDIA (April).—This also appears on the same reel with the two above mentioned subjects. It is necessarily short, but intensely interesting.

SUGAR INDUSTRY IN JAVA (April).—A film treatise on the sugar industry showing the gathering of the full grown canes, the laying aside of short pieces suitable for raising new stock from the making of the trenches into which these pieces are laid in single rows, the transplanting of the small plants which are the result of this careful planting, and as they appear later at the different stages through which they pass before the crop is again cut and taken to the mills, where the sugar cane is then crushed and pressed, and the liquid sugar passed through the usual process which brings it to the market as we see it.

The Pathe Exchange Specials.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE, EPISODE 13 (Pathe Exc.), March 22.—"The Devil Worshippers" is the title enjoyed by the thirteenth episode of the Pathe-Hearst serial. This is an excellent number in which Elaine again gets into the hands of the Chinaman, Long Sin. This time a fake medium is employed, and Elaine is about to be sacrificed to the Devil God, when Craig Kennedy, disguised as a Chinaman, rescues her.

United Film Service.

THE COME BACK (Premier), April.—An excellent western type of man has been chosen to play the leading role in this picture. In fact it may be said of the picture that his work and personality are the most attractive features of the production. It is the story of a man whose life has been almost ruined by drink. The picture opens at his return restored to a semblance of his former and better self. The picture naturally has a good moral.

HER NEW YOB (Luna), April.—Dot Farley is featured in this picture in an eccentric comedy role. Some of the work seems a little too exaggerated, while other parts of the comedy are thoroughly enjoyable. The children, Mattie and Earlie, also appear, and to good advantage, in the picture.

THE MISPLACED TWINS (Luna), April.—A comedy that doubtless would set some audiences in roars of laughter. Dot Farley plays the lead. In the picture she has a drunken husband who in returning a basketful of clothes to its rightful owner, and in which the two older children, jealous of the twins, have hidden the sleeping babies, breaks his promise to his wife and enters a saloon. The basket and the children are stolen by some boys, hence the comedy of the picture.

BACK TO THE FARM (Empress), April.—This is a one-reel picture in which Joseph Levering and Marian Swayne feature. Joseph Levering has also directed the picture. In it the young farmer dreams that he has left his home and gone to the city in search of a fortune. The dream proves to be a nightmare, and effectually cures him of ever again thinking of leaving home. The production has been well made.

STUNG! (Starlight), April.—In this farce comedy Aubrey and Keunig the well-known comedians are featured. The situation is a comical one, and has been well handled without vulgarity of any sort. One of the down-and-outs impersonates a duke who has come over to America to marry an heiress whom he has never seen, and who has never seen him, introducing his partner as his friend. The picture would please any audience.

BLAZING THE TRAIL (Premier), April.—This is a western subject of fair merits. The thrill of the story comes when the team attached to the big prairie wagon runs off with the girl who has been bound in it hand and foot by the villain. It is, however, a fairly acceptable offering for most audiences.

THE PARASITE'S DOUBLE (Lariat), April.—A two-reel western of a very stirring character and thoroughly enjoyable, showing the thrilling result of a similarity of personalities. The production contains some lively wild west saloon scenes, also some attractive and equally lively exteriors.

IN THE BLOOD (Regent).—The enjoyment of this two-reel production, which has a fairly good story, has been considerably minimized by too numerous and badly arranged sub-titles and inserts. The story is built around the life of a young man who was unable even under the best influence to withstand the temptation to steal.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 159 (Universal), March 24.—The 29th Infantry leaving New York for the Canal Zone, the burned Moulin Rouge in Paris, fox hunting in England, launching of U. S. S. Pennsylvania, and war scenes are shown in this number.

REFORMATION (American), March 31.—Edward Coxen and Winifred Greenwood appear in this as brother and sister crooks. He is sent to prison and on his release tries to drag his sister back to the old life. This is not very original in plot and contains no particularly strong situations. At the same time the cast is agreeable and the story fairly entertaining.

THE STORY THE CLOCK TOLD (Imp), April 5.—Novel photography aids in holding the interest in this number. The scenes are shown on the face of a clock while the girl's father is dreaming. The developments are such that he consents to the lovers' marriage. The offering is an entertaining one of fair strength.

WEDDING BELLS SHALL RING (Joker), April 5.—Max Asher in the part of a policeman sits on a pan of eggs while calling on the hired girl and hatches out a brood of chickens. Other nonsensical features make this a characteristic number of the low comedy type. Gale Henry and Wm. Franey are also in the cast.

IN THE LAND OF THE MIKADO WITH HOMER CROY (Nestor), April 5.—A half-reel subject picturing the Missouri humorist, Homer Croy, in Hawaii and Japan. Numerous native scenes in both countries are shown; the humorist himself takes a prominent part in various sports. This is an amusing half reel.

PUTTING ONE OVER (Big U), April 6.—The clever finish comes as a surprise in this film and raises the production from that of an ordinary crook story to something fresh and original. Murdock MacQuarrie plays the part of the gunman. The twist at the end is a good one.

EDDIE'S LITTLE NIGHTMARE (Nestor), April 6.—This is an extremely laughable domestic comedy, concocted by Al E. Christie and produced by Eddie Lyons. The latter also plays the leading role. His dream of wedded life, during which he takes care of a room full of babies, raises a great deal of mirth. This is unusually clever and the observer will not blame Eddie for going to the Fiji Islands instead of marrying.

THE CLUTCH OF THE EMPEROR (Rex), April 8.—The story of a girl revolutionist, impersonated by Dorothy Phillips. Ben Wilson plays the part of a steamship official who aids her in reaching America. The scenes occur on board ship. This makes a photoplay of about average strength. The hiding of the girl and her escape from the vessel was the strongest feature.

THE BUTLER'S BUSTED ROMANCE (Sterling), April 8.—This is a comedy number in which Ernest Shields appears as a butler. He poses as his master and attempts to marry the heiress, but the chauffeur and the maid foil his scheme. The humor is of the knockabout type and is quite in evidence. The settings are unusually attractive for this sort of production.

THE BABY'S FAULT (Nestor), April 9.—An amusing little comedy number in which Lee Moran, as a young husband and father, takes the baby to a poker game with him. The mother returns home and some complications arise. Slight, but pleasing.

THE RUSTLE OF A SKIRT (Victor), April 9.—Dick Benton and Matt Moore appear in this as a woman chaser and woman hater respectively. Mary Fuller plays the former's sister, whom he introduces to his friend as Naughty Mabel, a burlesque queen. She wagers to win the woman hater's love and plays a lady Raffles part. The photography is good but the plot is not of very great appeal.

FARES, PLEASE (Joker), April 10.—Ernie Shields and Eddie Boland appear in this as rivals for the hand of Queenie Rosson. Ernie buys an auto and competes with the street car conductor for business. The girl compromises by marrying a bandit. This is never extremely funny, but it makes an entertaining reel.

THE LAW OF THE OPEN (Powers), April 10.—A western number of about average interest, picturing the way in which an eastern man becomes a cattle thief and is hung by a posse. The coming of the wife was made overly sentimental. This is conventional and rather old in theme.

Universal Film Mfg. Co., Specials.

A LESSON FROM THE FAR EAST (Rex), April 4.—A well-constructed, though not powerful, two-reel offering, featuring Ben Wilson as a young Chinese missionary. He leaves the native girl, with whom he is in love, and returns to America. Here he meets his father's second wife and her sister, Anne. Two intrigues develop, the stepmother trying to win the young missionary's love and Anne falling into the hands of a young man whom the missionary forces to wed her. The photography is good and the scenes are attractive; the supporting cast is also competent. The missionary returns to his Chinese sweetheart. A fresh plot worked out quite entertainingly.

AN OLD GRUDGE (Universal Special), April 4.—Episode No. 4 of "The Black Box" series. Many interesting and even stirring situations are presented in this number, but there is the same vague, disconnected construction noted in previous numbers. One or two well-placed subtitles would aid in clearing up the activities of the detective and other characters. Quest's drop from the signal tower to the moving freight train was a good feature. The second murder mystery was introduced in an abrupt way at the close of the second reel. Obscure construction is the worst fault of this instalment.

THE GUARDIAN OF THE FLOCKS (Victor), April 5.—A picturesque and generally pleasing two-reel number, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, Vera Sisson and George Periolat. Kerrigan plays Tony, a Mexican sheepherder, who sees a cowpuncher carry off the girl with whom he is in love. He threatens to kill the cowpuncher on sight and a year later comes to their cabin. His finding of the baby and protection of it from the ravaging wolves made a tender and appealing series of scenes. The wolves were present in reality, and all through the story there are beautiful scenic effects. This makes an entertaining offering.

THE MYSTERIOUS CONTRAGRAO (Gold Seal), April 6.—An entertaining two-reel number containing in the cast the aviator, Frank Stites, who recently met death at Universal City. The Contragrao is an invention which defies gravitation, lifting the person holding it up in the air at will. This instrument is stolen from the inventor and the plot has to do with its recovery. The yarn is quite ingenious and contains sufficient novelties to hold the interest well. Some thrills are accomplished in the final scenes.

THE HEART BREAKER (Big "U"), April 8.—A girls' school story, featuring Muriel Ostriche as the mischievious miss who wins the love of the professor and keeps the students in an uproar. This is very much like other offerings with the same locale; some observers will find it a little drawn out. Those who have not seen similar stories in this setting will no doubt enjoy it very much. The girl students are attractive and the atmosphere of the production is accurate. The photography is also pleasing.

THE BROKEN TOY (Imp), April 9.—A two-reel film story featuring Violet Mersereau as the mother of a little girl. Scenes from her early life are shown, picturing her career as a dancer after her parents' death. She left her husband after injuring her foot, thinking he no longer loved her because she could not dance. The little daughter dances at a society function and the father learns who she is. A happy family reunion follows. This story strikes a good average, but has no particularly strong points.

THE FATAL NOTE (L-KO), April 7.—A two-reel low comedy number of fair strength, with Billie Ritchie and Peggy Pearce in the cast. Billie flirts with a girl on a bench and brings her to an apartment house. Here a rival lover turns up and their jealousy leads to prolonged knockabout scenes of a mildly amusing character. The tone of this plot is not the best, and some of the photography was too light. A fair number of its kind.

World Film Corporation.

THE ARRIVAL OF PERPETUA (Shubert), March 29.—A passably entertaining five-part picture in which Vivian Martin is starred. A review may be found in The Moving Picture World of April 3, on page 71.

Miscellaneous.

THE CURIOUS CONDUCT OF JUDGE LAGARDE (Life Photo-Film). March).—Founded on a play by Victor Mapes, a story of dual personality has been made into an interesting five-part drama, with Lionel Barrymore in the principal role. It is reviewed in the current issue of The Moving Picture World.

Capably Acted Drama.

The characters portrayed by Winifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, Josephine Ditt and John Steppling in the one-part picture apologue, appear to have been especially made to suit the histrionic abilities of these talented picture favorites. The plot is highly dramatic and deals with the question of a daughter's acceptance of a wealthy but loveless marriage in payment for the mother's sacrifices made for the girl's education and social ambition. A powerful story with a moral.

Versatile Betty Harte.

Betty Harte, leading lady for the Alhambra Motion Picture Company, releasing on the Kriterion Program is not only a brilliant screen star but a writer of scenarios and short stories. Among the scenarios written by Miss Harte, the following have already been produced: "The Token of Gratitude," "The Bridge of Sighs," "The Spy," "Their Only Son," "The Little Stowaway," "The Wild Rose" and "The Claim Jumpers." Miss Harte's latest short story, "Jimsey of the Movies," will appear in one of the magazines shortly.

John Emerson Joins the Mutual.

John Emerson, recently starred in "The Conspiracy," a popular New York success of which he was both author and producer, has become one of the Mutual's stars. He has arrived at the Hollywood studios in Los Angeles and begun rehearsals in an orginal four-reel feature photoplay prepared especially for Emerson. The title has not yet been selected.

Turns Down Cupid for Thespis

AGNES VERNON, leading woman with Murdock MacQuarrie's Big U company of Universal players, whose engagement to Abe Deuce, staff writer for the Newspaper Enterprise Association, was recently announced through the columns of the Los Angeles Record, has changed her mind. There will be no wedding bells for her nor for Mr. Deuce if he waits for her to reconsider.

Cause? Yes, there was plenty of cause. Miss Vernon has been advised by those who know, to avoid the lures of Hymen lest it interfere (as it almost inevitably does) with her future in the theatrical world.

Although she has been in pictures only six months, Miss Vernon has in that short length of time risen from the lowly position of unknown extra girl to the proud post of leading woman with one of the best-known American character portrayors. Her start has been too good to let slip, so think her friends, and by dint of continued argument they have finally brought her around to their way of thinking.

Result: no wedding bells for her and one big grouch for Mr. Deuce, if accounts may be believed.

That Miss Vernon is like unto adamant in her decision now that she has made it, may be gathered that besides giving up a possible hubby, she is doing what many people regard as even more serious. She has returned to him the speedy little roadster which he presented her on the eve of their engagement. The accompanying photographs were taken while Miss Vernon was taking her last spin in the little "boat" before returning it to the luckless donor.

Mr. Deuce refuses to make any comment anent the new arrangements. That he is dissatisfied, however, goes without saying, so far as those who know Miss Vernon are concerned. In the meantime, that little lady has turned her face decidedly away from the matrimonial knot and has resolved to devote her life to her art.

PLAYS KLEINE FEATURES AT 25c. ADMISSION.

Aberdeen, South Dakota, has at least one exhibitor who believes in giving his clientele the best and charging accordingly. H. L. Walker, manager of the Orpheum theater, that city, is the author of a circular letter to all his patrons announcing his new policy of renting the best film obtainable and charging twenty-five cents admission instead of the usual five or ten. Mr. Walker has arranged for an opening line of Kleine's Features, starting with "Stop Thief," and including "Antony and Cleopatra," "The Naked Truth," Mrs. Leslie Carter in "Du Barry," "Julius Caesar" and others. Mr. Walker has engaged a splendid symphony orchestra of seven and is making other arrangements to place his performance on a higher scale than customary. It is believed that his progressive example will have much to do in bringing about better conditions for exhibitors in the north central states.

PAULINE CURLEY WITH THE LIFE PHOTO.

Little Miss Pauline Curley, now appearing in "Polygamy," playing at the Park Theater, New York City, has been cast by the Life Photo Film Corporation for its forthcoming five-part feature production, "The Unbroken Road," in which Mary Nash takes the leading role, supported by Alexander Gaden and William H. Tooker.

"The Third Commandment"

Kalem Three-Reel Picture About a False Oath—All of It Holds Well, But First Two Reels Are Exceptionally Interesting.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE thing that shows the advance in the equality of present day picture offerings most clearly is their interest in the human emotion in any situation rather than in the more direct and simple excitement of the situation itself, which lesser interest was quite often met with in pictures of last year. An old situation thus "worked up" has a new face and a sense of fresh imagination makes it alive and personal. Even situations that are not wholly probable are made deeply interesting when the players and their directors contrive by sheer force to present them as though they believed the story and felt themselves a part of it. This thing is finely exemplified in "The Third Commandment," a three-reel Kalem offering featuring Tom Moore and Marguerite Courtot. The script is by Harry O. Hoyt and Tom Moore directed it.

Scene from "The Third Commandment" (Kalem).

The plot pictures how it came that the villain happened to be led into temptation and averred under the most solemn oath that the hero had murdered a third man. The progress of the story to this point is praiseworthy—it is not a planned villainy, but the perjured man is led by one unforeseen circumstance after another to bear false witness at the trial. Naturally, there is a girl in the plot and hero and villain are rivals for her. Tom Moore plays the perjurer and his victim is played by Robert Ellis. These with Miss Courtot make the trial scene effective emotionally and very satisfactory. Up to and through this group of scenes the picture is truly strong. The murdered man is played by Warner Richman, who in the last reel plays the man's cousin. In the continuation in which the guilt of the perjurer is fastened on him, the action is more improbable and the spectator feels a slackening of interest. Yet, taken as a whole, it is above the average; for the final incident is fresh and sufficiently sensational.

The picture is strong in its lesser characters, among which the part played by Richard Purdon is most pleasing. That there are many beautifully photographed scenes need hardly be added; but as usual with the Kalem offerings, they are one of the picture's strong points.

"Jack Chanty"

Excellent Five-Reel Adaptation of Hulbert Footner's Novel Presented by the Alliance Films Corporation.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT is rather a remarkable fact that a story presenting the atmosphere of the Canadian Northwest (Athabasca), has been done to the ocular satisfaction of even a critical observer, in the Sierra Madre mountains of California. Nevertheless the Californian-made production of the story of Malcolm Piers, who at a financially embarrassing situation struck off for the Canadian wilds, enveloping his former identity in the name of Jack Chanty, is all-satisfying.

The Masterpiece Film Co., with Max Figman as director, has produced the film. Figman also plays the attractive role of Jack Chanty, with Lolita Robertson impersonating the quarter-breed girl Mary Cranston, playing opposite to him. H. A. Livingston does an admirable piece of work as John Garrod, the "heavy" of the picture, and Edwin Harley, as Sir Bryson Trangmar, governor of Athabasca, makes a noticeably fine type of fussy Englishman. Antrim Stewart as Mary's younger brother speaks well for the rising generation of moving picture actors, while P. H. Gowalond plays well the half-breed heavy, Ascota, who jumps from a mountain peak for the entertainment of the spectator, as well as to avoid further encounter with Chanty.

There seems to be no particular effort made in the production to bring about abnormally spectacular results; in fact it might be defined as a simple, human interest story told with sincerity. Rather a novel and unobtrusive method of relating the former history of Jack Chanty, and explaining the hate of Garrod, the former secretary of Chanty, has been used. This has been done in a few effective scenes which blend into the rest of the story without causing confusion after the current stage of the story has been well launched.

Lolita Robertson in the role of the quarter-breed Indian girl has been especially well cast. Her makeup is excellent, and the fact that she is a white woman detracts little if any from the realism of the character.

Scene from "Jack Chanty" (Masterpiece).

The production is one that has been well made, the adaptation of Footner's novel under the hands of one Clawson by name, is clear and concise, and the photography is also of excellent quality.

"Pretty Mrs. Smith"

A Five-Reel Screen Version of the Morosco-Harris Play, with Fritzi Scheff in Her Original Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FOR its initial release, the Oliver Morisco Photoplay Company has chosen a five-reel version of "Pretty Mrs. Smith," the comedy-drama written by Oliver Morosco and Elmer Harris, in which Fritzi Scheff was starred on Broadway the early part of this season. The filming has been done under the direction of Hobart Bosworth; and Mr. Morosco, whose name when connected with theatrical management has become synonymous with liberality and cultivated taste, makes it clear at the outset of his career as a film producer, that he intends to pursue the same policy in regard to his photoplays. He has evidently given Mr. Bosworth instructions to obtain the best results possible with the scenario, regardless of cost. Mr. Bosworth's achievement in the way of settings, dramatic action and high-grade photography fully sustains his past reputation.

A resume of the story of "Pretty Mrs. Smith" recalls that the lady who gives the play its title is a Smith three times over—a triple-plated Smith, as it were—having married a trio of men by that name. The first is a missionary, the second a poet, and the third a wealthy club man. After a short time spent with her first husband in Africa, Mrs. Smith returns alone to America, hears that the Reverend Smith has been drowned, marries the poet and tries love in a cottage. The poet tires of it first, pretends to take the water route into the next world, and the twice widowed lady become united to number three. For such a chain of events only one denouncement is possible: the minister and the poet both show up at the hotel at which Mrs. Smith and the latest edition of, or addition to, the Messrs. Smith are stopping. The claimants of the first and second degree attempt to embrace the wife they had sworn to love and cherish, and a lively chase through the rooms and halls of the hotel follows, with a wild-eyed and madly jealous claimant of the third degree bringing up in the rear, as the terrified Mrs. S. tries to escape the consequences of her trigamy. Thanks to the generosity of the Reverend Smith, the club man retains his wife.

Such a series of comedy complications and the shifting scenes of the story furnish excellent material for a film drama that grows steadily in humorous interest until the climax is reached.

Scene from "Pretty Mrs. Smith" (Bosworth).

Miss Scheff's debut upon the screen is attended with gratifying success. The vivacity and charm for which her stage work has always been noted will be found in the film version of "Pretty Mrs. Smith." The three husbands are capitally played by Louis Bennison, Forrest Stanley and Owen Moore.

"The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde."

Dual Personality Provides the Life Photo-Film Corporation With Material for an Engrossing Drama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ORIGINALLY, "The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde" was a play written by Victor Mapes and given a brief run on Broadway. It impressed Jesse J. Goldburg as being good motion picture material, and having verified its scientific background he wrote a five-part scenario to be produced by

Will Davis for the Life Photo-Film Corporation with Lionel Barrymore in the character of Judge Legarde. The picture is unusual in the treatment of the dual personality theme, and still more out of the ordinary in its physical aspects. Street scenes at night were made in a studio for the purpose of getting novel effects in which the light values are correct, and in other respects the camera man displayed a quite daring ingenuity rewarded by success, for photographically the film is notable. Time and again the dramatic worth of incidents in the story is appreciably strengthened by the artistic quality of the scenes, toned and tinted with evident care.

The story opens with a capitally realistic court trial, serving to bring out the argument on which the drama is based, or rather showing how Judge Legrande refuses to countenance the plea of a dual personality, one good the other evil, offered in defense of a young woman accused of crime. Knocked down by an automobile, the judge is so deranged that he leads a double life, remaining an upwright citizen by day and becoming a thief and a gangster at night. His unconscious shifting from good to evil, the dovetailing of the life of the judge and the gang leader, with its limitless possibilities for dramatic complications, is made interesting. Needless to say, there is an abundance of action in a story of this description, the better for the scientific foundation explained in the sub-titles, some of them direct quotations from a treatise on dual personality.

In both phases of Legrande's character, Mr. Barrymore acts with authority and power, delightfully free from unnecessary exaggerations. The unaffected sincerity of Edna Pendleton in the role of Amelia, wrongly accused of theft and finally an outcast among thieves, lends distinction to the part; William H. Tooker is a perfectly natural figure as the detective, and a vivid piece of acting is supplied by Arthur Morrison as one of the crooks. The production is certain to take a high rank among Life Photo-Film subjects.

"The Outcast."

The Fourth of the Mutual Masterpictures a Reliance, and Based on a Well-Known Story by Thomas Nelson Page.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

OF the Mutual masterpictures thus far reviewed, none has been more noticeably well made than "The Outcast," produced in four reels by John B. O'Brien. That Page's story has lent itself well to the screen, goes without saying, but that a seer has guided its conversion into film shape is an undeniable fact. To use a common phrase, O'Brien has lost no tricks in making the production truly a master picture.

Mae Marsh and Robert Harron are featured in the picture, by courtesy of the Majestic Motion Picture Company, so says the screen. There are others also appearing in the production who add not a little to the general effect. Among these latter are Mary Alden, Spottiswoode Aitken, Jack Dillon, Jack Conway and Ralph Lewis.

First and foremost, after acceding that the human interest and sociological principles upon which the story is based have been presented with forcefulness, attention is due the remarkable manner in which the court proceedings have been handled. A quickly changing camera acquaints us with the impressions made on all parties concerned, including the onlookers. The story is told on the screen simply, and one would almost say, quaintly. Evidently attention has been paid to the choosing of types, and even of the men in the jury box, it can be said that each has a distinct individuality of his own, and proceeds to act it out to the last letter.

If there is a lack of reality apparent in any of the scenes of the production it is in those which in the recital of the story of the "Outcast" by the old grandfather, picture the meeting of father and daughter and the nameless baby with the gossips of the village. Here the shaping of the incidents is not as natural as it might be. This portion of the production, however, is covered by only two or three scenes. Apart from the melodramatic element of the story there is present much that is artistically beautiful; the portrayal of the true nature of the "Outcast" might be referred to as being exceptionally impressive. It would be needless to make special comment on the work of individual players after what has been said, for it must be realized that a production of as refined quality as "The Outcast" could scarcely reach the degree of perfection which it has with a poorly appointed cast.

"THE BREATH OF ARABY."

Four-Reel Vitagraph of Great Beauty, Featuring Helen Gardner.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

UNDER the direction of Charles L. Gaskell, "The Breath of Araby" becomes almost a pure example of the new triology, its class being the aesthetic drama. According to the new theory, this form of acted story gives primary consideration to the outward expression of beauty, not only in grace of movement and sumptuous settings, but even in picture composition. The aesthetic movement is in vogue and it is inclined to be revolutionary. It is certainly of high value in an art dependent largely upon visualization, though it is often only incidentally dramatic.

Fitted by native taste to make the screen story a thing of physical beauty, Mr. Gaskill has greatly improved his treatment—perhaps the improvement has been thrust upon him by a broadening appreciation of Miss Gardner's delightful art of interpretation. She has been Galatea of the marble to Pygmalion of the artist eye, while she was really endowed with the soul of thought and feeling. Miss Gardner has always been capable of finer intellectual and emotional appeal than her opportunities have afforded, of greater artistic depths than can be sounded by mere action.

Most fortunately for 'The Breath of Araby," which is attenuated to the breaking point at times, Miss Gardner and Rogers Lytton hold the eye fascinated by self-revelation, baring their minds to the audience by an infinitude of delicate interpretation. Rogers Lytton is himself again, recovering suddenly from what might well be called a "waning personality." He has recovered that vigor of emotional expression which made him a strong figure in screen dramas of the past. Mr. J. Herbert Frank is an admirable type, and quietly impressive throughout.

The story is merely a fantasy, hinging upon a magical potion or love philter, of which there is but one drop left, and that a thousand years old. It is hardly big enough for four reels. Clothilde covets the priceless potion and offers to exchange herself for it, that she may employ it for a secret purpose of her own, that of enslaving Captain Thurston, a gentleman so rarely virtuous that he rejects the overtures of a beautiful and seductive girl. Out of this slender thread the drama is woven, but it is artfully woven into a fabric of thoroughly artistic design, a synthesis of sensuous appeal.

"HIS BROTHER'S DEBT."

An American Production in Two Reels, with Miss Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen in the Leading Roles.

Reviewed by James S. M. McQuade.

AN ORDINARY story of ordinary life, that finishes happily, although the conclusion is contrary to what customarily happens under the circumstances surrounding the main issue, has been filmed by the American under the title "His Brother's Debt." Nowadays, it is rarely the case that a brother shoulders the consequences of a lapse of moral conduct on the part of his brother, just deceased, especially when he is peremptorily called upon by an irate father to save the name of a daughter, who has been wronged; yet the story very plausibly succeeds in establishing the precedent. Not only that, the girl in the case saves her husband (in name only), from business ruin, and wins his love and devotion, and the spectator goes away happy, without feeling any desire to subject the outcome to critical analysis.

Miss Winifred Greenwood makes the best possible of the part of the wronged girl, Clara Meyers, and Ed. Coxen appears to fine advantage as Arnold Downs, the super-honorable brother and devoted son. The other characters are capably sustained, with a few exceptions.

Arnold Downs and his brother, Frank, work in the establishment of the Block Construction Co. They are the mainstay of their father, who has been an invalid since the death of their mother.

Clara Meyers is the only daughter of their next door neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Meyers; and, unknown to his brother, Clara and Frank are much in love with each other. Arnold is promoted to a responsible position in the firm and meets Sadie Block, daughter of the principal owner. The latter is pleased to see the attachment formed by his daughter for Arnold and its return by that promising young man.

One day there is an explosion in the Block works and Frank Arnold is killed. When news of the tragedy is brought to Clara Meyers she faints, and reveals to her mother the intimacy that existed between Frank and herself; also showing that the dead man had arranged for a secret marriage ceremony on the evening of the day of his death. When Mr. Meyers learns the facts he is overcome by passion and, denouncing his daughter, rushes off to berate the invalid father of the dead man. He is intercepted by Arnold, who learns of the wrong done by his brother, and who consents to save the reputation of Clara by giving her the name of wife.

Mr. Block never forgives Arnold for the marriage and plots his ruin. Years afterwards, when Arnold is engaged in the construction business for himself, Block secures every contract on which Arnold bids, by making his figures a trifle lower. This he succeeds in doing through the disloyalty of Arnold's chief clerk, who furnishes him the exact bids made by his employer.

Clara Meyers and her little boy are the instruments by means of which the dishonest clerk is discovered, and an important contract—which spells solvency for Arnold's business—secured for her husband in name only.

"LIFTING THE BAN OF COVENTRY."

A Three-Part Military Drama of Unusual Strength and High Moral Worth.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

COL. JASPER EWING BRADY, the author of "Lifting the Ban of Coventry," the three-part military drama recently released by the Vitagraph Company, evidently cares little for the accepted rules of play-making, and the conventional "happy ending." It is also equally certain, to judge by his work, that he cares a great deal for truth, loyalty and high ideals of conduct in the characters of his photoplay. "Lifting the Ban of Coventry" follows the career of a young West Pointer, who is cast off by his fiancee, and who, while under the influence of liquor, marries an inmate of a western dance-hall. Up to this point, the story follows the beaten track; but with the awakening of the soldier to the step he has taken, Col. Brady gives the youth of the land a lesson in true manhood assuming the responsibility of its act. In place of the cowardly and theatric device of placing a loaded revolver to his head and contemplating suicide, this young officer wastes no time in self-pity, but gives the woman who bears his name her rightful place at his side and protects her by every means in his power. For this he is "sent to Coventry" by his brother officers. Six years later his wife dies, leaving him a five-year-old daughter. The scene at her deathbed—the suggestion of how her husband's cheerful acceptance of his duty has given her an insight into the beauty of life, and filled her heart with a pure love and devotion for him and their child—is one of the finest moments ever put into a photoplay.

In not yielding to the popular clamor for a "happy ending," and having his hero killed upon the field of battle, Col. Brady has again let "even-handed justice" decide the issue. The woman who so lightly threw aside her youthful sweetheart and learns to regret her act, is made to pay the penalty in solitude and in tears. What the French call the scene a faire—in this case, the one between the wife and the former sweetheart—is omitted. The two women never meet, but the child of the one becomes the charge of the other. Cant and rant have no place in this play, and the people of it do not move and have their being by right of dramatic license and the demands of stage technique.

In making of this splendid melodrama high praise must be accorded Director Wilfrid North for his sympathetic and intelligent treatment of the theme; to Darwin Karr for his manly and convincing impersonation of the young officer; to Julia Swayne Gordon as the wife; to Lillian Walker as the cadet's sweetheart; and to Rose Tapley, Harry Northrup, Ned Finley, Helen Costello, and the rest of the cast for their effective acting.

The scenes at West Point, those showing army life in the Southwest, and the battle scenes in the Philippines are noteworthy for their accuracy and the interest they incite. This silent drama not only fulfills its mission, in being uncommonly good entertainment, but sends a ringing message to the rising generation—a triumph call to duty, that will not be denied.

"The Ladder of Fortune"

An Interesting Two-Reel Rex Production, Featuring Ben Wilson.

IN this production Ben Wilson is seen in a role that is in many ways well suited to his talents. The character is less passive than some in which this talented actor has appeared and gives more opportunity for lusty work.

lips playing opposite Wilson is particularly pleasing in the role of the beautiful Italian woman who loved the violinist, who for the possession of his lady love fights a duel with the insolent Navarro, the suitor favored by the young woman's father, and supposing that he has killed him, rushes off to America.

The picture is attractive principally because of the excellent cast that has been chosen to portray the various characters. The story is somewhat unusual, but shows a remarkable tendency toward always having things come out straight. Once or twice there is noticeable an inconsistent jump between scenes that have too slight a connection; but also there are moments in the production where one is inclined to pay tribute to the director.

The first portion of the picture is supposedly in Italy, while the latter half is set in America. Here the violinist, who through a turn of circumstances becomes foreign manager of a large business concern, has the good fortune to inherit the sum of $300,000, which has been left him by a Bowery recluse whom he has aided while he himself was a member of the bread line. The young woman follows to America, and all goes happily, the picture closing with the honeymoon.

"The Man Who Found Himself"

The World Film Corporation Makes a Strong Picture from a Play by George Broadhurst—Robert Warwick the Star.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SOME time ago George Broadhurst wrote a drama which he called "The Mills of the Gods," a title that would never do for a picture nowadays. It has been used too often. The story, as produced in five reels by Frank H. Crane for the World Film Corporation, was rechristened "The Man Who Found Himself" and under this name will be released on April 5. The production is a worthy successor to "Alias Jimmy Valentine," in that it possesses a story of sustained dramatic quality and presents Robert Warwick in a strong role. Sing Sing, a resort that motion picture men seem determined to advertise, has its place in the scheme of things, and oddly enough, a novel method of contriving a convict's escape is introduced.

James Clarke (Mr. Warwick) is an unselfish thief, for the money he takes from the cash box is used to send his consumptive sister to the health-restoring West. That, of course, gives him the sympathy of the audience, which has no use for the villainous Payton, whose theft is not explained by kind motives. Both are living in Sing Sing when a motion picture director takes a company of players to the prison to stage a scene. The actors in the garb of convicts, and the temporary abandonment of the customary watchfulness, give Clarke an opportunity to escape, and later, clinging to the rear of the automobile carrying the troupe, he is carried to the World Film Corporation's Fort Lee studio, where he changes his clothes and walks away without exciting suspicion. All this is made plausible and becomes appreciably more effective than the wall-scaling accomplishments of the customary escaped convict. Under another name, Clarke re-establishes himself, is blackmailed by Payton and finally, after he has given his tormentor the severest sort of a beating, voluntarily returns to jail to serve out his time, thereby finding himself—meaning his moral conscience.

In the handling of the story, rather than its theme, the spectator will find a welcome freshness and convincing acting in which Mr. Warwick is ably seconded by Paul McAllister. The fight between these two in the concluding reel is genuine to the point of being thrilling. Arline Pretty, a recent addition to the World Film acting forces, is a pleasing heroine. Instead of using "The Next Day," "A Few Days Later," or "Three Months Later" in sub-titles, the passage of time is conveyed by the falling leaves of a calendar, and every now and then the figure of old Father Time himself passes significantly across the screen. Among substitutes for hackneyed phrases this one is very acceptable and speaks well for the ingenuity of the man who originated it.

"John Redmond, the Evangelist."

Four-Reel Production with a Forcefully Presented Moral, to Be Released by Great Northern Film Company.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT IS very evident that in the making of this production the moral of the story was uppermost in the producer's mind, although there is present no inclination toward the sentimental, and the chief character of the play, John Redmond, has accompanying his grey hair and clerical garb a good sound muscle such as attends a healthy body, and he strikes a blow or two in defense of a would-be convert that hints at a frequent use of the privileges of the gymnasium.

The story of the picture—a story within a story—tells of the wrecking of one young man's career through his obstinacy in refusing to listen to the advice of his elders, and the frequenting of questionable places and mixing familiarly with their people.

The result of it all is that an attachment is formed with one of the women of the place who is afterward shot accidentally by John Redmond's friend, who rushes out and leaves Redmond to shoulder the blame of the murder. Redmond, of course, lands in prison, but is later released through the efforts of the prison chaplain, who, believing his story, sets out to find the real offender.

During the term of his imprisonment the father of John Redmond dies, and upon his being released his mother dies also. The production is filled with the sadness which is attendant on ill-doing, and is therefore of moral use to the spectator. It will also be notitced that every man or woman in the cast or among the supers has either talent or the good sense to follow the lead of the director, for every scene is intensely realistic. Playing the leads are Valdemar Psilander in the role of John Redmond, and Elsie Frollich in the role of the adventuress, both of whom are well-known here as well as in Europe.

The Aylesworth Animal Pictures.

Six Thousand Feet of Film Dealing With Wild Animal Life in the Canadian Wilderness.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

HAVING seen nearly all the important motion pictures of animal life I am prepared to say that we have happily reached a high standard in this branch of kinematography. It is both fair and easy to judge motion pictures of animals by two tests: one is the test of the camera work, the other the test of the way in which the subject is handled. Intelligence and sympathy and a spirit of sportsmanship are essential in the treatment of wild life before the camera. Judged by these two tests I regret to say these pictures do not measure up to a high standard. Everybody appreciates the everlasting difficulty of camera work in the wilderness. The public, however, insists on results, forcing the exhibitor to take very much the same view. We want to see what the animal looks like and what he is doing. Pictures of wild animals flitting rapidly past the camera and swallowed up by a bad focus may be interesting photographic experiments, but their entertainment value is slight. I do not mean to say that there are no close-up views in these films; there are several good ones, notably that of a flock of mountain sheep running down the side of a mountain. There are "close-ups" of splendid specimens of a bullmoose and an elk, a bear and a lynx. Some of the scenes of life in the semi-arctic winter are good. On the whole, however, the photography is poor and the views taken are too far away from the camera.

Poor camera work, however, is not the worst fault of these films. Mr. Aylesworth is evidently an enthusiastic hunter and an expert with the rifle. He not only shows a great number of killings, but he spreads even the most unpleasant details before the camera. We see animals mutilated, skinned and disemboweled. We all love to see a fine set of antlers and Mr. Aylesworth has quite a number of them, but we turn aside hypercritically perhaps from the contemplation of the brutal work that follows the killing. Few of us care to watch men cut the head off a freshly killed mountain goat or a bullmoose or a buffalo. Still less do we care to look at the baiting and torturing of wild animals, even though they may be classed as beasts of prey. To the hunter in the wilderness such feelings no doubt seem squeamish; he looks upon the lynx and the bear as so much "pesky varmint" and a wicked foe to young live stock. The audience in the motion picture theaters do not take this view. They are apt to revolt at the cruel treatment of the bear cubs; the sight of a man killing a trapped lynx with his revolver is scarcely pleasing, all death struggles of animals are distressing spectacles to the average man and woman who support the motion picture theater. Even if the animal is known to be dangerous we cannot view its last convulsions without harrowing pity. Where the animal killed is a noble-looking stag its death throes make a shocking sight.

Mr. Aylesworth had received special permission from the Canadian government to kill four buffaloes out of the only large herd still in existence. These animals are in a semi-wild state and had not been molested for some time before Mr. Aylesworth visited their pastures. We see two killings and one disemboweling. The herd of these animals is a magnificent sight. Indeed the buffalo scenes are among the best in the whole series.

"The Vow."

Marion Leonard Is Starred in Four-Part Picture Handled by the Broadway Film Company.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN "The Vow," S. E. V. Taylor has made a picture dealing with a Kentucky feud that has much to recommend it. Marion Leonard does very well as the woman of the mountains, there is continuous action and the plot offers occasional surprises. The Broadway Film Company will release the film in four parts.

Mr. Taylor's construction of the story is rather odd after the exposition in the first reel, which ends with a tragedy. The husband of the young woman is shot by a rejected suitor and she is left with an infant boy, who is to be spared until he reaches man's estate. Standing over the dead body of her husband she vows vengeance. There is nothing at all unusual in this; but with a lapse of years and the placing of the widow in fashionable New York society, Director Taylor makes a sharp change in the method of developing his story.

The grown boy's inquiries about the place of his birth, his request to visit the Kentucky mountains and his unconscious handling of a gun, stir a chain of thoughts in the mind of the mother, who visualizes with quite extraordinary detail what might happen were they to return. The visions of the feud continued, and the life of her son jeopardized, alternate with scenes of revelry at the entertainment being given in her home. For a climax, we learn that one of the professional dancers is none other than the man who shot her husband. Granting this coincidence it is not unlikely that the vow of vengeance should be accidentally fulfilled. A gun is dropped on the floor, the trigger catches on the fender and the discharged bullet ends the career of the murderer.

In holding the attention, the picture serves its purpose. Settings are attractive and photographically the film is very good.

Five Reels Tell Story of San Francisco in Form of Pageant from Earliest Settlement to Today (Pageant-Alliance).

THIS is an interesting picture taken as history. Without attempting to tell a story with a particular hero or heroine, it sets forth an account of the growth of the western metropolis in dramatic form and as such it holds well, or at least that bigger part of it picturing for us more modern events. The early incidents, dealing with the Indians and Spanish conquistadores, is too much like the many melodramas, and is not so convincing; fails to make us feel that it is really teaching us something valuable. The modern part of it, from the coming of the first gringo to the earthquake, and including the vigilante days and the finding of gold, is or seems to be entertainingly instructive. The print we saw was only fair as to photography; but we were told that it was a poor print.

Views of the present city, after its rising triumphant from earthquake and flame, are given, with some glimpses of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition buildings and grounds. The Golden Gate, parks and playgrounds of the city, Market street and the ferry house are clearly photographed. There are also some scenes taken in the suburbs.

Weiss Back at His Desk.

Back from a ten-day vacation, Harry Weiss of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation is back at his desk trying to lose the nine pounds that he gained on the trip. In New York, he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Selznick, and has spent five days trying to realize how big the firm has grown since he was last in New York in June.

From New York, Mr. Weiss went to Philadelphia, where Mr. George Beihoff of the World Film Corporation of that city and Mr. Stanley Mastbaum were the entertainers. Mr. Weiss does not remember leaving the town, but landed in Washington the next morning. Mr. Ben Drum was the host in Washington. Mr. Drum is the local manager of the World Film branch in that city. From Washington, Mr. Weiss went to Atlanta, Ga., where Mr. Swain, the Southern division manager, showed him the sights of the city. From Atlanta Mr. Weiss went to Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn., returning by way of Evansville, Ind.

As this was Mr. Weiss' first vacation in seven years, he believes that with a little diplomatic sales talk he will be able to enjoy another one without waiting another seven years.

Century Club Addressed by King Baggot.

The Century Club of New York held its most recent meeting at the Hotel Astor. This club is composed of New York society people who devote a fair share of their time to the encouragement of the four fine arts. It has been the custom of the club at these gatherings to listen to interesting papers by representative workers in the arts, and the theater has always been recognized and represented by some well known actor or actress or manager. King Baggot was invited to present the subject of the motion picture.

This being the first paper to be read by a photoplayer, Mr. Baggot was very general in his talk, but nevertheless he put his whole soul into the subject as he always does when addressing an audience in reference to his art. Baggot is such an enthusiastic picture fan that his words always carry conviction, and it is quite certain that many of his hearers at the Hotel Astor who may have neglected the motion picture went away with more respect for it.

"The Room Between."

Two-Reel Empress on United Film Service Program, Featuring Marion Swayne and Joseph Levering.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

TAKING as its subject matter the eternal triangle, and treating it in a somewhat original manner, "The Room Between" has promise of pleasing its audiences. And in the course of the production its director, Joseph Levering, who also plays the leading masculine role, displays considerable artistic ability, grasping well the significance of the theme, and setting its scenes attractively.

The scenario has been written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, and although the arrangement of the story does not display all the hallmarks of experienced work, in many ways it attracts our interest.

Especially appealing is Marion Swayne in her portrayal of the young wife, who, regardless of her husband's wishes, yields herself to the gay life, tampers with fire in the shape of a former rival of her husband's, and finally finds herself on the way to the divorce courts.

The "room between" is located between the separate apartments of husband and wife, and it is here that the majority of the main incidents of the picture take place, such as the suppers, receptions, all of which are more or less hilarious, in which the foolish young wife persists in indulging. Here it is, too, that the husband has the bad fortune to catch a glimpse of his wife in the arms of the rival.

It must not be inferred that the moral element of this production is not good. On the contrary, the moral which is brought prominently forward is a very excellent one. There is a comparison drawn between a poverty stricken home with a little child that is in the way and unappreciated, and the home of the couple rich in worldly goods put with its lack of childish laughter, and its unhappiness and misunderstanding.

Mrs. Wallace Erskine, the beloved "Edison mother," comes from England, from which country she brought her own company not so long ago. In her company was the English actor of the stage, Charles Cherry, who has distinguished himself so since that time. All of Mrs. Erskine's family are prominent in theatricals.

The Life Photo Insures Mary Nash.

The Life Photo Film Corporation has made application for an accident insurance policy in the sum of $25,000 on the life of Mary Nash, late star of the Belasco forces, and now leading woman in "The Unbroken Road," the five-part feature in the course of production at the studio of the Life Photo Company.

The scenario of the photoplay embraces scenes that call for hazardous work on the part of Miss Nash, particularly a scene wherein she is clinging to a spar in mid-ocean, and permits herself to be dashed on rocks projecting out of the ocean, away from any mainland.

"The Unafraid"

A Four Reel Lasky Production Starring House Peters and Rita Jolivet.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS story, somewhat after the fashion of the Anthony Hope novels, deals with the more or less romantic politics of the Balkan states. Instead of mythical kingdoms we have the definite kingdom of Montenegro and Austria Hungary thinly disguised as the "Dual Empire." The theme is based on a romance of Eleanor M. Ingram. The school is that of Hope. Miss Jolivet, who plays the part of the American heiress, has appeared once or twice on the American stage. She is a French woman of striking beauty and of some histrionic talent, but in the part of an "American" heiress she is miscast. A more typically French woman could not be imagined. As "Delight Warren," the American heiress, Miss Jolivet falls in love with a prince of Montenegro, who really does not reciprocate her love but only wants her money. He has received a lot of money to betray his country to an agent of the Dual Empire, splendidly acted by Theodore Roberts. Instead of attending to the betrayal for which he has been paid the prince goes to Paris and squanders his money in such riotous living as a careful board of censors will allow to be shown on the screen. The secret agent is furious when he finds out the carelessness of the prince and gives him a week to either perpetrate the treason or restore the money. As the restoring of the money might hurt his royal standing the prince lures the handsome American actress into accepting him. He has a good brother, who is loyal to Montenegro, and this good brother manages to get both the lady and the money, thus making a very happy ending.

The photography and the realism in this feature are worthy of praise, but there is evidence of a neglect of detail and of an undue haste in speeding the action of the play. In one scene, which is very important for the proper development of the play, a wicked servitor of the bad brother wants to poison the good brother. He resorts to a simple expedient. Just as the waiter brings in the food he pours the poison into the coffee. The waiter never asks a question and places the drugged liquid on the table of his master. This may seem a trifle, but audiences nowadays notice trifles. The atmosphere in "Montenegro" breathed rather the lively and modern spirit of America than the local color of the Balkans.

The picture introduces a very fine looking young girl, "Marjorie Daw," in the minor role of a kinswoman of the prince. She is a charming type of American girlhood and with proper training may develop into a capable and attractive performer. House Peters made the best of a rather poor part. His brother Page gave a good impersonation of the wicked and fiery "Michael Balsic."

The film is revived because of the many calls for its re-appearance.

Paramount Travel Series

"A Hydro-Aeroplane Flight at Palm Beach" Is a Pleasing Film for the First Release.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE first issue in the Paramount Travel Series is a good one in subject matter, of timely interest and artistically pleasing, offering, as it does, a variety of picturesque spots, photographed in Florida and carefully toned and tinted to produce natural color effects. Under the title of "A Hydro-Aeroplane Flight at Palm Beach" this one-reel picture will be released on April 12.

C. L. Chester and his squad of cameramen, bound for South America, stopped for a time at Palm Beach that they might secure comprehensive picture of the famous society resort. The beach scenes are attractive in themselves, and the more interesting for the glimpses offered of fashionable folk lolling about on the sand. There are excellent views of "the largest hotel in the world," of the golf links, of the shaded walks; but best of all is the trip in the hydro-aeroplane that sails over Palm Beach with Mr. Chester aboard. The bird's-eye view was photographed with remarkable clearness in spite of the difficulty of operating a camera from a plane bobbing about several hundred feet above the ground.

Different, but no less interesting, are the pictures of rivers, still navigated by quaint, old-fashioned steamboats. Then there are views of orange groves and colorful sunsets, of nearly everything, in fact, that one would expect to find in Florida. Closing the reel is a first rate comedy cartoon drawn by C. R. McCauley, formerly of the New York World.

"Anna Karenina" (Fox).

THE premier of the first Fox offering with Betty Nansen, the great Danish actress, was given at the American theater in New York on March 30. The picture, Tolstoi's "Anna Karenina," proved worthy of the audience's closest attention, although by remarks behind this reviewer, it was plain that some were losing the quality of Nansen's restrained and remarkably powerful acting. There was some laughter, strange to say, except that perhaps the picture's meaning was over the heads of a few. There were two weak places in the cast, but this did not affect the result of it as a whole. It is a story of passion; but clean, dignified and powerful, a picture eminently fit for contemplation of grown-up human minds.

Metro Has Many Subjects.

The Metro Pictures Corporation, distributing medium for manufacturers, among which are the Popular Plays and Players Company and B. A. Rolfe, now have under contract option and advisement sufficient screen material, original and adaptations, to fill the program until July. The stars already under contract include Orrin Johnson, Adelaide Thurston, Thomas Jefferson, Jane Grey, Olive Wyndham, Helen Case, S. Miller Kent, Edmund Breese, Lionel Barrymore, the eminent star William Faversham and Olga Petrova.

The first release of the Metro Corporation occurred this week when Orrin Johnson in "Satan Sanderson," a B. A. Rolfe production, was given its initial showing in thirty different cities.

Next Monday The Popular Plays and Players Company release "The Shadows of a Great City," with Adelaide Thurston and Thomas Jefferson, and the following Monday Olga Petrova in "The Heart of a Painted Woman" will be sent forth. This constitutes a great variety of subjects and diversity of stars and themes and should more than please the exhibitors who keep calling for variety.

New Series for Pathe.

The Pathe Exchange announces that beginning with April 17 it will release the first of a series of twelve three-reel dramas under the general title of "Who Pays?" These dramas are made by Balboa, and feature Ruth Roland and Henry King.

A new idea is followed out in this series. Each drama is distinct and complete in itself, and each deals with some one vital question of modern life. Though not what could be called problem plays, each is calculated to make one think, to see the error of his or her ways, and to resolve to put the petty, the unworthy and the selfish away forever.

The "Who Pays?" series has been syndicated and hundreds of the best newspapers throughout the country will run the stories which have been novelized by Edwin Bliss.

Vitagraph Gets "Playing Dead."

The Vitagraph Company has acquired from Richard Harding Davis the rights to picturize his story, "Playing Dead," which appeared recently in one of the popular magazines. "Playing Dead" will be made into a Broadway Star Feature that will be from four to five thousand feet in length. The picturization for the screen will be made by Mr. Sidney Drew, who will be seen in the principal character, supported by Mrs. Drew.

The Great Italian Earthquake.

The two reels showing marvelous portrayals of the great Italian earthquake, which recently devastated Central Italy, causing immense loss of life, are booking very strongly in all Italian neighborhoods and drawing big crowds. Dodge family, belong the personality of that terrible criminal known as the "Clutching Hand."

The fourteenth episode of "The Exploits of Elaine" is worth while seeing, even without the other thirteen, for the sake of the remarkably clever work done by Sheldon Lewis, who becomes in the twinkling of an eye a raving maniac, upon realizing that he is at the end of his tether, and that the detective Craig Kennedy has at last gained the upper hand. A sequel to this occurs when, after having sought refuge at the headquarters of his accomplice, Long Sin, he succumbs to the draught given him by that wily personage, which has the power of producing suspended animation. The effort of the lawyer to retain consciousness, and his horror at the knowledge of what is to be his fate, which is cunningly told him by the Chinaman, who further offers him an antidote for the promise of seven-tenths of the several millions of dollars' worth of stolen goods which he has hidden away, is a truly remarkable feat of dramatic pantomime.

The trailer of the picture introduces Edwin Arden, who smilingly bows himself into the Chinese character which he is to impersonate commencing with the fifteenth episode, which marks the beginning of the continuation period of the series. With him will also appear, as previously, Arnold Daly and Pearl White.

Gladys Hulette a Fire Heroine.

Most motion picture actresses have hairbreadth escapes in the many pictures which they help to create and Gladys Hulette recently had a thrilling experience at the Edison Studio. Ashley Miller, the director, has just completed a picture in which a department store fire figured. It was Miss Hulette's job to jump fourteen feet from a piece of scenery on to an awning which collapsed beneath her. She was hit with a piece of timber which propped up the awning and almost knocked unconscious. In the same picture she had the happy privilege of swinging from a rope suspended between two ten-story buildings. The picture will doubtless be an immense success when seen on the screen, as the scenario is from a magazine story by Rupert Hughes. Apart from this, however, Miss Hulette is hoping her next picture will have "business" a little less strenuous and nearer terra-firma.

Ina Claire in "A Wild Goose Chase."

Samuel Goldfish announces on behalf of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company that Miss Ina Claire will make her photodramatic debut under this management in an elaborate screen production entitled "A Wild Goose Chase." This photodrama may be described as a comedy with a strong-romantic interest and is founded on one of the most successful legitimate plays written by William C. De Mille.

Mr. Bernard Loewenthal, the genial and ever active treasurer of the Life Photo Film Corporation, broke his thumb a few weeks ago, but it is all right now. Fortunately it was the thumb of his left hand (since it had to be any thumb at all). What a calamity it would have been were it his right hand, since B. L. is the only member of the Life Photo Company who signs the company's checks.

"When We Were Twenty-One"

The Famous Players Score Another Success With William Elliott in a Picture of Marked Appeal.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHEN WE WERE TWENTY-ONE" is a rarely appealing picture produced with much discrimination by Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford for the Famous Players Film Company. The worth of the story, as written by H. V. Esmond and acted the country over by Nat Goodwin, has long since been tested. It possesses passages of genuine comedy, alternating with moments of mild pathos and always the characters are perfectly human people placed in conceivable positions. The qualities of sincerity and naturalness that gave the play its lasting popularity are preserved with equal force in this finely acted film, presenting William Elliott in the role of Richard Audaine, nicknamed "The Imp;" Charles Waldron as Dick Carew; Arthur Hoops, Charles Coleman and George Backus as the trinity of bachelors; Helen Lutell as Phyllis and Winifred Allen as Peggy. It is a well balanced cast from first to last and under the skillful direction of Messrs. Porter and Ford every scene is made to count in conveying the spirit and the progress of the story.

Much of the humor in the production is offered in the first reel, in which we are introduced to Dick Carew and his trio of bachelor friends as they are about to undertake the care of an orphaned infant. The betrothal of "The Imp" and Phyllis, both lifted from their cribs while their elders conduct the ceremony, is an odd incident cleverly handled to achieve comedy results. Twenty years elapse and we find "The Imp" winning a football game for his college team, with Phyllis and her younger sister, Peggy, among the cheering spectators in the stands. There is a quantity of vim and snap in the depiction of "The Imp's" youthful triumphs while his devoted guardians, middle aged men by this time, pay the bills.

Soon the impetuous boy, not quite twenty-one, falls head-over-heels in love with "The Firefly," a good dancer but a poor wife, and as the affair progresses, even to the point of a secret marriage, there is abundant opportunity to bring out the unselfishness of the four men, who are ready to sacrifice themselves rather than see the "The Imp" ruin his life. Human interest characterizes the situations arising out of the ill-advised marriage and the determination of "The Imp's" guardians to avert its consequences. Bits of pathos that might easily be overdone are presented with true feeling.

Mr. Elliott strikes just the right note in his playing of the high spirited boy, a role admirably adapted to his personality, and shows the requisite intensity in his passionate refusal to believe ill of the woman he loves. Supplementing the virtues of the story and its interpretation, is an artistic production introducing a variety of rich settings.

"The Builder of Bridges" to Be Filmed.

In the forthcoming Frohman Amusement Company production of the Alfred Sutro play, "The Builder of Bridges," in which Kyrle Bellew starred under the management of Charles Frohman, there will be seen G. Aubrey Smith, who is one of the best known English actors appearing in this country. Mr. Smith will appear in the role played originally by Mr. Bellew. Prominently cast in that production there will be seen Marie Wells, who makes her debut with the Frohman forces in this production of "The Builder of Bridges" which will appear on the World Film Corporation schedule of releases in June.

Bigelow Cooper, gentleman farmer, when not an Edison villain, hero, or lover, is eating money these days—yea, verily, is it money and not stage money, either. From his farm he gets three eggs a week. Divide three eggs into $7.50 a week for chicken-laying food and we have one egg at $2.50 per.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE CIPHER KEY" (Lubin).

A very melodramatic and exciting episode of competition between an American firm and a South American firm to secure a big contract to build battleships for the Argentine Republic. The United States Corporation sends a messenger with their bid, who is followed and harrassed by secret agents of the South American Company. Murder is almost committed, but the messenger is rescued and continues his errand. A woman is employed by the spies and she falls in love with the American agent and in the end assists him to place his bid before the commission. In the action of the photoplay there are two sensational chases, one between an automobile and an aeroplane, and later between the airship and a motor boat. Shots are freely exchanged and in the end the South American spies are killed and the United States firm secures the deal. The cast is excellent, including Earl Metcalfe and Kempton Greene, and the chases are very exciting. The story is written by George Terwilliger.

"THE COST" (United-Lariat).

In "The Cost," a two-reel Western photodrama to be released on the United Program under the Lariat brand on April 10, William V. Mong shows the exceptional ability as a scenario writer and an actor which has put him into the position of scenario editor, leading man and assistant director at the Pike's Peak Company in just a few weeks after his arrival at the Garden of the Gods studio. This is the first of a series of Western drama which Mr. Mong has written, in all of which the picturesque background of the Pike's Peak studio will play a prominent part and in all of which will abound the thrilling situations for which Mr. Mong's film plays are famous. The strong roles of Myrtle and Ralph are played by Josephine West and George Gebhardt.

"THE SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW."

The accompanying illustration is a scene from the forthcoming release of the Popular Plays and Players Company's production of Robert Service's great poem classic, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," in which Edmund Breese and Dorothy Riggs are playing the principal roles.

Many of the snow scenes were made at Tahapic, Manitoba, where the snow lays until late in the spring and where the temperature is consistent with the atmosphere desired.

Edmund Breese takes the part of "The Man From the Creek," while Miss Riggs plays the part of "The Lady That's Known as Lou;" an excellent supporting cast has been assembled. The later scenes, many of which are laid in a mining camp, will be taken at "Ajax," a typical gold mining city in the eastern part of Saskatchewan, Can., where types required to carry out the story can be gotten from the very streets.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew" will be in five parts and released on the Metro Program early in May.

"FEMININE WITS" (MinA).

Comedy in a Western camp with real Western "atmosphere" is very well portrayed by the MinA Company in the one-reeler entitled "Feminine Wits," featuring Elaine Ivans.

Two sisters, Amy and May, receive a letter from their Uncle inviting one of them to come West; and in order to decide which one is to go they pull straws and Amy wins. All the men in Camp Big Noise fall in love with Amy and quarrel with each other over her hand. In order to stop all matrimonial disputes in the future, a law is passed to prohibit women from entering the camp. Unfortunately May is on her way to join her sister and Amy is in a panic. She finally, however, smuggles May into town by means of a cowboy outfit. The Sheriff, seeing Amy take this strange person into her Uncle's store, thinks that he is a crook and demands that he be turned over. To maintain the deception Amy shatters a window with a chair and, when the Sheriff bursts in, she points to the broken window; May is, however, safe under the bed. A posse is immediately organized and starts out in pursuit of the imaginary crook. In the meantime a real bad man tries to break open the safe in Uncle's store, but May and Amy turn the trick on him and lock him in the safe. The posse returns in time to capture the robber and, at the same time, discover May's identity; however, because of her bravery they decide to break their newly established law and allow her to stay in town.

The comedy shows care and careful acting throughout and easily lives up to the high reputation that the MinA comedies have made for themselves.

LIFE PHOTO DOUBLES OUTPUT.

A conference was held at the offices of the Life Photo Film Corporation last week, at which most of the exchanges handling the Life Photo productions in the United States were represented, and at which time such exchanges joined in a request that the Life Photo Company increase its output to two five-part features a month, adaptations from stage plays with legitimate stage stars in the lead, upon terms calling for contribution by each exchange in advance of a sum of money, making a total contribution of $49,000, such advance to be returned to the exchanges in four equal monthly payments; the additional production to be released to the exchanges upon the same terms as applies to the present release of the Life Photo Film Corporation.

The exchanges not represented at the conference have been communicated with, setting forth the plans for such increased output, and replies are being received by the Life Photo Company, heartily endorsing the project.

In the event of any exchange or exchanges not joining in the plan, the additional output will be released in the territory through another exchange to be organized for that purpose, or one already organized, but this seems hardly likely.

Work is already under way for the manufacture of such additional feature, the play having already been purchased. The director and cast have not as yet been chosen, this being deferred until the manuscript of the play has been placed in scenario form.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE CAPTIVE."

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. confidently expects that its second Blanche Sweet release—"The Captive"—which is to be given to the public on April 22 will show this internationally famous star to even better advantage than "The Warrens of Virginia," in which she made her initial appearance under the Lasky-Belasco direction.

The character of "Sonia," the Montenegrin peasant girl in "The Captive," is more emotional than the character of sweet "Agatha Warren," and in several instances the young star has ample opportunity to show the truly remarkable emotional power with which she is gifted. Cecil B. De Mille, who wrote the original play of "The Captive" in collaboration with Jeanie

Scene from "The Captive."

MacPherson, produced this piece under his personal direction, and it is evident that he and the new Lasky star are going to work together wonderfully well. Miss Sweet's leading man, as in the case of "The Warrens," is Mr. House Peters, who plays the role of a Turkish noble taken prisoner by the Montenegrin soldiers, and it is obvious that he and Miss Sweet are admirably suited to work together.

In addition to Miss Sweet and Mr. Peters, the cast of "The Captive" includes Gerald Ward, Page Peters, Theodore Roberts, Jeanie MacPherson and Billy Elmer.

"THE POETIC JUSTICE OF OMAR KHAN" (Selig).

"The Poetic Justice of Omar Khan" is a Selig two-reel drama, directed by Edw. J. Le Saint, from the story written by James Oliver Curwood. Guy Oliver, Stella Razeto, Eugenie Besserer and other Selig stars have unusual opportunity to display their talents. This picture play will be released on Monday, April 12.

Phillip Hyde, American attache, and Omar Khan are lifelong friends. Neva, Phillip's wife, is disloyal and Omar Khan, grief-stricken over the sufferings of his friend, vows to avenge him. Amir Pasha, across the desert, offers a purse of gold for a white woman for his harem. Omar Khan and his Nubians seize Neva and her paramour when they are eloping, and transports them to the desert. There the lover is left to die alone in the pitiless heat of the desert sand, while the woman is taken to Amir Pasha's palace, where Omar Khan hands her into the custody of the Pasha. In the years that follow, Phillip Hyde finds happiness in the love of a good woman.

WALTER EDWIN PRODUCING "THE SPENDTHRIFT."

A very strong cast has been engaged for George Kleine's fifth American production, "The Spendthrift." Cyril Keightley and Irene Fenwick, who are playing the lead parts in the "Song of Songs" now running at the Eltinge theater in New York have been engaged to play the leading roles of Richard Ward and Frances Ward in the motion picture production of this successful play by Porter Emerson Browne. Studio work was begun on March 24 under the direction of the well known producer, Walter Edwin, long connected with the Edison Studio forces and well remembered through his association with Miss Mary Fuller, whom he directed in her last two series with Edison, entitled "Who Will Marry Mary" and "Dolly of the Dailies."

Mr. Keightley and Miss Fenwick were especially selected for the leading parts in "The Spendthrift" on account of the fine work they are doing with the "Song of Songs." Mr. Keightley's part of Richard Ward was played in the stage version originally by Edmund Breese. Miss Mattie Ferguson, who created the part of Aunt Gretchen in the stage version, is also playing that part in the photoplay production. She is the only one who has ever played the part with a road company. It has since been played by others in stock, but she is identified as no one else ever was or perhaps will be. A brand new recruit to the movie stage is Malcolm Duncan, who is playing the part of Monty Ward, the spendthrift.

For the past two years Mr. Duncan has been under Harrison Gray Fiskes' management. Until he stepped into the studio last week he had never been in a moving picture establishment of any kind. He seems to be getting on nicely with his work, however, and should make a very good screen actor.

George Kleine has secured the motion picture rights for quite a number of Broadway stage successes which will be produced regularly by Mr. Fitzmaurice or Mr. Edwin, who at present constitute the George Kleine producing staff. "The Spendthrift" is Mr. Edwin's first feature for the Kleine Company.

"U. B. O." BUYS ARC CONTROLLERS.

Even though they are not selling war material, business seems to be good with the Speed Controller Company, Inc., of 256-259 William street, New York. They are the manufacturers of the Arc Controller, which has been mentioned in these columns and in our Projection Department heretofore, as the device that has been in successful operation for a considerable while in some of the best theaters in the country.

That company has recently received from Mr. J. J. Murdock, executive manager of the United Booking Offices, an order for the installation of arc controllers in all of the houses of the Keith-Proctor-Orpheum Circuits that display moving pictures.

In view of the fact that the United Booking Offices control several hundred houses showing pictures that order should keep the Speed Controller Company busy for a while, and is the most conclusive proof that they could show as to the worth of their device. The arc controller is connected to the projection arc lamp and controls the feed of the carbons and does it so accurately that the size of the arc remains always the same.

JACKIE SAUNDERS IN "ILL-STARRED BABBIE."

"Ill-Starred Babbie," with Miss Jackie Saunders in the title role, will be the second Balboa release on the Alliance Program. The film is an adaptation of Will H. Whalen's novel of the same name, which has been one of the best sellers during the past few years and has gone through repeated editions.

Scene from "Ill-Starred Babbie" (Balboa).

The scenes are laid in the rugged coal regions of the Alleghenies, and tells the story of Babbie, a coal miner's daughter, who was born under an unlucky star. In his novel the author added an intensely human creation in the character of Babbie to present day literature and none of the charm and vivacity of the original has been lost in Miss Saunder's screen interpretation. Work on the last reel is nearly completion and in the course of next week the negative will be sent East.

"THE SNOW-BURNER" (Essanay).

The wild and riotous scenes of a North woods lumber camp, with its rough and rugged characters, are found in "The Snow-Burner," a three-reel photoplay taken from the story by Henry Oyen. "Hell Camp" Rievers is the powerful, but brutal boss, who rules his men with a hand of iron. He forces his men to settle all disputes by rough and tumble fights, over which he presides. Besides being brutal to his men, he wrongs a young Indian girl, and plots the ruin of a white girl, a bookkeeper in the camp. In this he is foiled by a wealthy young man who, after long dissipation, had come to the camp to make good. He and "Hell Camp" fight a terrific hand-to-hand battle according to the custom of the camp and "Hell Camp" is beaten. His rival becomes the new boss and wins the hand of the girl. The scenes are exceptionally true to the life of the North woods, one especially beautiful scenic effect being obtained by photographing the actual sluicing of logs through a dam. E. H. Calmet plays the part of "Hell Camp," Dillian Dred that of the girl, while Richard C. Travers is the wealthy youth, who wins the love of the girl. Released April 20.

"MAY BLOSSOM," NEXT FAMOUS PLAYERS RELEASE.

The Famous Players Film Company will release, April 15, a sympathetic and realistic photo-adaptation of David Belasco's great American drama, "May Blossom," which will undoubtedly revive the interest created by the original stage production of this famous play. Its tender romantic qualities and its subdued reference to the great national struggle of a half century ago combine to make this subject one of the most typical and appealing American plays ever produced.

Associated with the fame of this subject is a chain of theatrical history, dramatic in itself. Through an odd coincidence, it was originally produced by Daniel Frohman, when he was manager of Madison Square Theater, New York, and during its engagement Mr. Frohman engaged David Belasco as stage manager of the house. Previously, Mr. Belasco had been successful in San Francisco, and "May Blossom" was the first of his plays to be produced in the East. It was enacted at the Madison Square Theater with what was recorded as a great cast, the leading part being played by the late Georgie Cayvan and the principal male parts by Joseph Wheelock, Ben Maginley and W. H. Crompton. All of the actors in this cast are now dead, with the exception of Forest Robinson, who was then a young man and who has since appeared in venerable roles in productions of the Famous Players. De Wolf Hopper, now famous as a great singing comedian, was also a member of this company, graduating from "May Blossom" into the ranks of comic opera. The play ran at the Madison Square Theater for the entire year—an unprecedented record at that time—and continued on the road for three or four years more.

Scene from "May Blossoms" (Famous Players).

The film adaptation of this notable subject has been effectively produced, and is interpreted by an especially selected Famous Players cast, including Gertrude Robinson, Russell Bassett, Marshall Neilan, Donald Crisp and Gertrude Norman.

Louisville Association

E Pluribus Unum Becomes Motto of Picture Exhibitors Throughout City—Twenty-six of Leading Picture Houses Represented—Association Feels Strong Enough to Fight Flighty Legislation—Will Work in Harmony with League.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT is very interesting to note that the moving picture houses of Louisville have finally decided that the policy "E Pluribus Unum" is the correct course to pursue and twenty-six of the leading houses are now represented in the Louisville Photoplay Association. This makes Louisville one of the strongest association cities of its size in the country and the big exhibitors now feel that the industry is in position to hold up its end of the game in any legislative or other circumstances that may arise. Theaters represented in the association are: The Alamo, Walnut, Parkland, Hilltop, Columbia, Cherokee, Knickerbocker, Broadway, West Broadway, Mary Anderson, Ideal, Baxter, Crown, Preston, Majestic, Star, Novelty, Casino, Orpheum, Olympic, Hippodrome, Crystal, Empire, Clifton, Sun and Norman. There are a number of airdome theater operators who have not been approached on the subject as they will not open much before the latter part of May. The local association threatens to eclipse the state association in point of numbers as well as power, but is considered a branch of the state association and will work along with it as its main or largest branch.

SUES ADAMS EXPRESS.

Pastime Theater Company Asks Damages for Delayed Film.

At Maysville, Ky., Frank O'Donnell, Annetta Ward, Nelson Ward and Annabell Ward, partners doing business as the Pastime Theater company, have filed suit against the Adams Express company, asking damages to the amount of $400, alleging that a package containing films failed to reach their theater from Portsmouth, Ohio, on July 16, 1914.

Portsmouth, Ohio, is only a few miles from Maysville, and is on a direct line by way of the C. & O. railroad. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant knew that the pictures were to be used by them on that very date, but failed to make delivery of the films until it was too late to use them. The plaintiffs further alleged that the same offense occurred on December 25, 1914. The plaintiffs claim that in each instance they were damaged by the defendant's failure to deliver the films on dates mentioned in a great extent, due to loss of patronage, profits and prestige. A sum of $200 is asked for each offense.

SUNDAY CLOSING FIGHT.

Pulpits of City Doing Their Best—Examples of Public Opinion's Blind Eye.

The Sunday closing situation at Lexington, Ky., is becoming more and more interesting. The ministers and church people have lined themselves up to fight the moving picture men, the mayor, the city commissioners and onyone else who wants some form of Sunday amusement. The preachers have gone so far as to hold special services, at which they talked against the open Sunday, and have imported well known Eastern speakers to help convince the public that Sunday should be a tightly closed day. C. L. Williamson, a prominent attorney and churchman, has started a movement to oppose the closed Sunday movement. He has prepared petitions to be circulated among the people of Lexington in an effort to find out what the concensus of opinion is in the matter, and there is also some talk of the newspapers preparing a special ballot by which means the pulse of the public might be taken. The persons now waging war against the moving picture show are the same ones who started a big hurrah when the Lexington Public Library was opened to the public on Sunday, it is said, and added, at that time some persons said the library was desecrating the Sabbath. The public parks of Lexington closed the tennis courts on Sunday and no baseball is allowed.

Mr. Williamson stated that the charge had been made that the main objection to Sunday pictures was the fact that they occasioned so many persons working on the Sabbath. He further stated that this same statement would apply in a far greater degree to the hotel, drug store, country club, newspaper office, cigar stand, dairy, garage and other establishments which would make it hard for everyone. It was stated that few people think it is harmful to attend a public lecture, but condemn the picture show. "That appears to me," he said, "to be a discrimination against the sense of sight in favor of the sense of hearing."

Edward J. Bassett is chairman of a committee of fifteen churchmen who started out six months ago to obtain evidence against the moving picture shows and it has been stated that a part of the committee is in favor of open Sundays at the shows. Mayor Cassidy, of Lexington, recently stated that if the ministers of the city did not stop trying to draw the deadline as to what is or is not a violation of Sunday-closing laws and leave that to the city commissioners, where it properly belongs, the people will rise up this fall and elect a mayor and city board of commissioners who will not only run open moving picture houses, but a wide-open town. Commissioner Pulliam made the prize remark when he stated that if he owned a motion picture house in Lexington he would open his doors on Sunday the same as the churches did. No admission charge would be made, but the hat would be passed around in the same way as it is in the churches on Sunday.

WINCHESTER'S PASTIME OPENS.

The Pastime theater, of Winchester, Ky., has opened its house after the building was overhauled and thoroughly remodeled. The building, as now arranged, is one of the most complete moving picture and vaudeville houses in the eastern part of the state. The auditorium has been extended back twenty-five feet and a stage has been erected with dressing rooms beneath. A small balcony with a seating capacity of twenty-five has been constructed at the front of the house. The theater now has a seating capacity of 450 in all. A gold fibre screen and new chandeliers have been installed. Another motion picture machine has been purchased, as the operator was handicapped with only one machine. Mary Pickford, in the Paramount production of "Such a Little Queen" was shown as the opening subject.

WON'T MEET MUSICIANS' RATES.

Joe Steurle, of the Broadway Theater Enterprizes company, which controls eight theaters in Louisville, recently stated that the strike of union musicians in Louisville for more money would not amount to anything. He stated that the theaters would either do without music or would use electrically-operated instruments, but that they had no intention of paying advanced rates for music under present circumstances and were not giving the matter much thought. Mr. Steurle is also secretary of the Louisville Photoplay Association, which has had several little tilts with the operators and other union workmen.

EXCHANGE MAKING BUSINESS.

The Owl Feature Film company, of Louisville, is using a rather unique system in securing customers for the film exchange. The idea the company pursues is not to scrap with other concerns over customers already in the field, but to go out and start new concerns in the motion picture business. Attention is being paid to the smaller hamlets and villages which are in need of motion picture houses. Names of prospective purchasers, or people who have money or who are interested in the proposition in some way, are secured and a card is mailed to them which lists a flat, net cash price to the customer for a small outfit which is capable of starting either a motion picture show in the home town or a road show. The outfit consists of a picture machine, a gas-making outfit, a curtain, a few reels of film and a few necessities. The card explains that the motion picture business has made more rich men out of poor men than any other known.

HIGHLAND FILM BUYS LAND.

It has been announced that Lagoon Park, at Ludlow, Ky., has been sold by J. J. Weaver and will hereafter be known as Highland Park. It will be owned and operated by the Highland Film company, which, in addition to buying the park, has also purchased 100 acres of land nearby. The company has announced that a studio will be erected on the property and moving picture plays made. T. J. Ford, of the Ford Publishing company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, is one of the men interested in the proposition. Ludlow Lagoon, as it is generally termed, is almost directly across the river from Cincinnati and is an exceptionally pretty little park.

MAY MOVE STUDIO.

A movement is under way whereby the Municipal & Commercial Film Manufacturing company will probably establish new studios in a building formerly used for theatrical purposes at Riverside Park, on the Ohio river. The company located a plant, studios, etc., at Straws' Mills, Ind., several months ago and made a few pictures. Dissension arose among some of the actors and the officers of the company and film manufacturing was suspended for a time. G. P. Balch, president of the organization; A. R. Chouinard, chief of the camera staff, and Albert Deitzman have the new arrangements in hand. The old plant at Straws' Mills, which was an open-air proposition, will probably be retained for special productions.

LOUISVILLE BRIEFS.

The West End Amusement company, of Louisville, has filed articles of incorporation listing its capital stock at $600, divided into sixty shares of the value of $10 and with a debt limit of $400. The concern proposes to operate vaudeville and motion picture shows. The incorporators are Fred A. Vogel, Henry A. J. Puls, Theodore H. Sanders, C. C. McMahan, Alvin Irion, D. Y. Fowler, John Heeb, Ned Dickens, Edward L. Schoen, Fred Winter, Otto P. Hubbuch, Phil C. Dean, C. L. Busk, Henry Wempe, Sidney S. Speir, Al Steble, C. J. Casey, J. J. Scoon, John Sheridan and Joseph Ipser.

The Woman's Club of New Albany, Ind., on April 12 will have a special meeting to discuss "Rights of the Child." The club expects to make a fight against children being seen on the streets or at the moving picture shows at night unaccompanied by their parents or elder persons. Mrs. C. A. Martin, of Louisville, and other social workers will be present at the meeting.

J. W. LAMB TO MANAGE WORLD FILM IN ATLANTA.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

J. WALTER LAMB, who has recently been transferred from the New York office, is now the Atlanta manager for the World Film Corporation. Mr. Lamb is a man of vast film experience, and comes to Atlanta with the reputation of one who has always given the exhibitor strong co-operation wherever he has been located. Mr. Lamb will shortly move his family here and prepare to make Atlanta his home.

VITAGRAPHERS IN SOUTH.

It is rumored that a company of Vitagraph star feature players headed by Ralph Ince and containing Earl Williams, Anita Stewart, Julia Swayne Gordon and other Vita celebrities are headed for the North Georgia mountains from somewhere in North Carolina to stage native scenes for the new Vitagraph production, "The Goddess;" this script calls for mountainous country, and it is hoped no moonshiner will take Ralph Ince for a revenue man.

ALLIANCE TAKES OVER HYBAR.

The Hybar Film Corporation, formerly located in the Forsythe building, has closed its offices and all business handled by them has been taken over by the Alliance Southern Film Exchange. P. T. Barbour, president of the new company, having purchased all of Arthur S. Hyman's interests. The new company will handle the Alliance releases in this section of the South, and will release one feature each week.

ATLANTA BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. J. L. Marentette, manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., has returned from a business trip to Nashville, Tenn.

Congressman S. J. Tribble, of the Eighth Georgia District, is devoting the first two months of his vacation to a tour of his district with a moving picture machine, and at the same time giving a lecture on the operation of the United States through the various departments of the Government.

The recreation committee of the Atlanta Woman's Club have made arrangements with the management of the Grand theater to give every Saturday morning from 9 a. m. to 12:30 p. m. an entertainment of selected and censored motion pictures for the children of Atlanta. The pictures are first to be selected by the management, then submitted to the committee for censorship. The picures selected will then be shown at the Saturday morning performance. The pictures selected will be comedy, fairy stories, pictures of travel, great factories, educational, nature and other pictures of wholesome nature.

Announcement has been made that the Grand theater has just closed for the exclusive exhibition of feature dramas released by William A. Brady, Shubert, Liebler, Blaney, Dyreda and the California studios. This week's program includes Betty Nansen, the noted Danish Star in "The Celebrated Scandal." Close upon this will come the "Birth of a Nation," "The High Hand," "What Happened to Jones" and "The Pageant of San Francisco."

A crowded house at the Grand Opera House gave a warm reception to the moving picture, "Your Girl and Mine." The Atlanta Equal Suffrage Association gave the entertainment and young ladies acted as ushers.

Scenes from the Wren's Nest, the old home of Joel Chandler Harris (Uncle Remus), will soon be seen over the world. Camera men of the Universal Film Company went to the West End this week, and filmed various parts of the house, including outside scenes and the study of Mr. Harris, which has been left just as he lived and worked in it. The pictures are to be used in the Universal Weekly.

Alco Aftermath

Suit Brought by R. M. Watkins of Chattanooga to Recover Money and Have Certain Notes, One Now Matured, Canceled—Bought Contract for Film Territory from Late Alco Film Company but Failed to Receive Number of Pictures Contracted For.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXCHANGEMAN R. M. Watkins, formerly connected with the Majestic theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn., has filed a bill in chancery court against the Metropolitan Bank of New York City, Mrs. Jeane Dunlap and John Dunlap, citizens of the State of New York, and the Hamilton National Bank of Chattanooga, seeking the recovery of $2,500 in cash and the cancellation of a series of notes amounting to $7,500. The bill charges that during the latter part of 1914 the complainant entered into a contract with the Alco Film company, a New York State corporation, whereby he was to be given a certain territory for the exhibition of films produced by that company. As a consideration, the bill states, the complainant agreed to pay the sum of $10,000, $2,500 of the amount was paid in cash and the remaining $7,500 in notes. The complainant alleges that the Alco Film company furnished him but three films and its inability to furnish him the number of films called for in the contract caused him to make a trip to New York and demand the return of the cash paid and the notes. He charges that the Alco Film company at that time was tottering on the brink of bankrupcy, and at a later date did go into the hands of a receiver. The bill charges that the defendant, John D. Dunlap, was one of the principal stockholders in the defunct film company and is now in possession of the notes. Mrs. Jeane Dunlap, who is named as a defendant, is alleged to be in possession of notes, but her possession is attacked and fraud is charged. The Hamilton National Bank of Chattanooga, holder of one of the notes that has matured, was enjoined from surrendering the note to the New York bank. W. B. Miller represents the complainant.

TENNESSEE BRIEFS.

A unique as well as interesting open air show was held in Chattanooga recently on election night. Commercial films showing Chattanooga industries were shown along with several reels of Keystone comedy. The moving pictures were displayed between groups of election returns. A film had been prepared especially by the Chattanooga Motion Picture company and comprised a number of short scenarios emphasizing "Buy in Chattanooga," and was made through the efforts of the Retail Merchants' Association to boost local made goods during the spring opening week. The pictures were thrown from the Jo Anderson building.

Through the efforts of several very earnest ladies and the courtesy of Miss Amy Cox, the Imperial theater, on Bellevue Boulevard, in Memphis, was secured on March 23 for the benefit of an organ fund for the new Jewish Temple. A very attractive program was presented, which included a number of the favorite "movie stars."

"The Black Pearl," a two-reel Imp feature, with a cast of all stars, accompanied by Keystone comedy, was a good drawing card at the Crystal theater, of Nashville. The Keystone funmakers generally draw good attendances at this popular playhouse.

The Hon. Richard W. Austin, congressman from the Second District of Tennessee, is arranging to use moving pictures in a new way in an effort to get closer to his adherents in the Second Congressional District. "Dick Austin in the Movies," will be an attraction throughout ten counties in the Second District next summer and autumn, according to Mr. Austin. The film will be two reels in length with the hero of the show as the lecturer.

The management of the Unique theater, of Memphis, Tenn., on March 19, opened the theater with motion pictures, showing the "Seats of the Mighty," the six-reel feature production of the World Film Corporation. This was the initial moving picture show to be shown in the theater, but arrangements have been made to show a number of the World features.

TOPEKA PICTURES READY.

Special to Moving Picture World by Kansas City News Service.

H. N. WAGNER, manager of the Topeka Movies, displayed his new films exacted at Topeka, Kan., at the Auditorium theater there. The pictures did not show up as well as he expected them to and he placed them on exhibition the following weeks at the Gem. The pictures showed with remarkable clearness there and the Topeka actors and actresses could easily be idenified.

KANSAS SHORTER NOTES.

J. H. Blawitz, who owns the Victor Moving Picture theater at Kansas City, Kan., reported to the police recently that the safe at his theater had been robbed and nearly $200 had been taken.

"Officer 666" scored a big hit at the De Luxe theater at Hutchinson, Kan., recently.

The Orpheum theater at Atchinson, Kan., is running the big Zudora episode.

A deal has been consummated by Young & Werhahn whereby the moving picture show owned by George Moore on Forest avenue, at Great Bend, Kan., has been traded to a Hayes City, Kan., man for land. It is stated that the new proprietor is a leader of an excellent orchestra and intends to open the show in the near future.

The pictures taken of school children and many other views of North Topeka were shown at the Princess theater at Topeka recently.

The Elite theater at Great Bend, Kan., has been giving away a grafonola. Coupons attached to the tickets are numbered and the lucky number gets the machine.

The High School at Galena, Kan., recently installed one of the best moving picture machines made. At the tryout it proved very satisfactory. The High School has an enrollment of about 400 pupils. The machine will be used for entertainments.

A student union movie benefit was given at the Bowersock theater at Lawrence, Kan., recently. The show was well attended and the student union profited by this.

The Star Motion Picture Company, which has been exhibiting pictures at the Opera House at Pineville, Ark., has been drawing good audiences. It has produced the best moving picture programs that have been shown there for some time and has decided to remain a week longer than they expected.

Col. Frank S. Morse of Nebraska City has reentered the photoplay field. He has purchased the Empress theater and will manage it himself. Robert Booth, who sold, will take charge of an Eastern territory for the Mutual Film Company.

Robert A. Tausing of New York is manager and Maxwell Cohn of New York assistant manager of the new American theater in Omaha which is now under lease to Francis G. Porter of New York for five years.

Exchanges in Missouri

Several Kansas City Film Exchange Managers Are Transferred—United Film Service Opens Local Offices—Will Have Program Offerings—C. S. Edwards Praises Kansas League as Best Exhibitors' Association That He Is Acquainted With.

Special to Moving Picture World by Kansas City News Service.

THERE have been several changes in the management of the local film exchanges in the last week. The reason for this is probably that the home office likes to change their managers from one territory to another every year. It is said that this is the policy of some of the companies. N. H. Spitzer, formerly manager of the Fox Film corporation's branch office here, recently went to St. Louis to meet General Manager Sheehan, of the home office. Mr. Spitzer accepted Mr. Sheehan's invitation to come to New York and he will leave Kansas City for the home office some time soon. Charles W. Hartman is now managing the Kansas City office of the Fox company.

The United Film Service, which recently purchased the business of the Wagner Feature Film Service, has opened their office in the Gloyd building. The office is the same one that the Wagner Company occupies and as soon as the purchase was made F. L. Kiltz took charge of the office for the United Film Service. Richard Roderick, who was manager of the Wagner company's office here, is now in Detroit, Mich. Mr. Kiltz says that the business has been increasing from day to day since he took charge here. The company is releasing a regular program instead of the feature business. Mr. Kiltz says that the new releases are now coming in at about twelve a week. He says that the company has planned to gradually increase this to twenty-eight reels a week. At present the new service has no traveling representatives booking their pictures in the territory for them.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., district manager of the Pathe Exchange, attended the Kansas City State Exhibitors' Convention at Emporia, Kan., March 15 and 16. Mr. Edwards says that the Kansas League is one of the best exhibitors' associations that he has ever come in contact with. He was well pleased at meeting many of his old friends in the business in Kansas and making many new ones. Mr. Edwards says that those were the first days that he has had away from the office for nearly as long as he can remember. "Remember what a good time you used to have when you played hookey from school?" he asked. "Well, that is just the way that I felt at the convention." Mr. Edwards is sometimes spoken of as the "Boy manager." But, he says, "maybe I am fooling them."

Joe Levi, formerly of the World Film Corporation, is now traveling Kansas territory for the Fox Film corporation. Mr. Levi attended the Kansas Exhibitors' Convention and carried in seven new contracts with him, which speaks well for his booking ability. It is said that it is possible that he will have charge of the Omaha office of the Fox company.

MISSOURI BRIEFS.

The new American theater at Omaha, Neb., has contracted for the Fox company's service. It is the latest theater to be built there and is up to date in every detail.

J. C. Grahn, general manager of the United Film Service, is expected to visit Kansas City in the immediate future. Mr. Grahn is at present inspecting several of the new offices of the company.

"The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine" have been enjoying good bookings all through Kansas and Missouri.

"Marty" Williams, manager of the Mutual here, attended the Kansas Exhibitors' Convention and took with him "The Quest," which he exhibited for the first time before them. It is the first of the Mutual master pictures and the men who reviewed it pronounced it a splendid picture. Mr. Williams released it for its first engagement in Kansas City at the Willis Wood theater the week of March 21. The picture will run a full week there. Joseph Gilday, manager of the Willis Wood theater, says that the picture is one of the best that he has ever witnessed.

The Pathe company has booked the "Life of Our Savior" for two months in advance. The picture has caused much applause from church people and bear their stamp of approval wherever it has been shown.

Field & Johnson, managers of the Trio photoplay theater at Chillicothe, Mo., have received their new Simplex machine.

The People's theater, on College street, near Campbell street, at Springfield, Mo., has been sold by Gus Bennert to D. E. Lowe, of Bryant, Mo. Mr. Lowe is now in possession of the theater and is operating.

The Crystal theater, at Lathrop, Mo., is being remodeled. The front is being changed and the old balcony taken out and a better and larger one substituted. Manager Baker says that his house is going to be up to date and complying with every law of the underwriters and the public.

The W. C. T. U. secured the film "John Barleycorn" and displayed it at the Star theater at Hannibal, Mo. The women there are becoming more and more active in fighting the saloon evil and they are now employing the aid of the moving pictures to do it.

"The Long Way" and "My Lady High and Mighty" furnished a remarkably good program at the Lona theater at Sedalia, Mo., recently.

Marie Doro, in "The Morals of Marcus," was the recent attraction at the Jefferson theater at Springfield, Mo., that attracted a great deal of attention.

PICTURES A POWER.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DURING discussion before the Boardman Farmers' Club, at Youngstown recently, H. P. Miller, Portage county agricultural agent, in dealing with the subject, "Rural Life Needs," asserted that the influence of the moving picture theater is more powerful in a community than a school, church or Sabbath school. He insisted that he held these views in spite of the fact that he is a member of the church and a teacher in the Sunday school.

NEW PRODUCING COMPANY AND NEW EXCHANGE.

Recent incorporations registered with the secretary of state at Columbus include two Cleveland film enterprises. The National Amusement Company, with capital stock of $20,000. The officers and directors include Wiliam I. Leitch, Benjamin J. Reutenik, E. A. Lehman, William F. Kees and G. A. Laubacher. The company will make minor film productions and probably become interested in theater propositions. The Empire Feature Film Company, with $5,000 capital. Henry Weinberger, Abe Potiker, Freida Potiker, Ruth Weinberger and Herman Potiker are directors. The company has maintained an exchange in the Columbia building for some months, with Abe Potiker in charge.

SHORTER OHIO ITEMS.

As the Strand (the Lyceum theater), Dayton, not only changed its policy and name, but blossomed forth in a brand new dress. Its opening, for the exhibition of feature plays, was as interesting for the alterations and improvements as for the entertainment.

John J. Murray, manager of the Opera House, Warren, has installed a new mirror screen in addition to new projecting machines and general alterations. Twenty-seven balcony seats were removed to rearrange the operators' booth.

Tiffin, Ohio, is showing extreme interest in the recent feature release, "The Conspiracy," featuring John Emerson—in real life Clifford Paden, a former resident of the city. The film was presented at two Tiffin picture houses, playing to capacity at each show.

The management of the Coliseum theater, Bellevue, has changed the policy to include feature photoplays. It was originally intended to open with stock attractions, but further consideration prompted a change to pictures.

Clark & Son, managers of the Opera House, Ashland, suffered $800 loss recently when the projecting machine and three reels of film were destroyed by fire in the operating booth. The pictures were owned by the American Feature Film company, Cleveland. John Gadd, the operator, fought the blaze until it was evident he would be unable to save the films.

L. H. Becht, owner and proprietor of the Mall theater, Superior avenue, Cleveland, has engaged Paul R. Sullivan, former assistant secretary of the Elks as house manager. Mr. Sullivan has given the moving picture business considerable thought, and, co-operating with Mr. Becht, is developing a new policy at this popular playhouse.

The Cleveland Leader, co-operating with the Universal Film Mfg. Co., is conducting the "most popular girl in Ohio" contest. Announcement of the conditions were made simultaneously with similar announcements in newspapers in every other state of the union. The Universal planned this contest as a means of winning widespread attention to Universal City, in connection with the present national advertising campaign.

"Cabiria" is helping the city of Alliance establish a public park. Lemotto Smith, manager of the Columbia theater in that city donated a large percentage of the receipts of the production to the women's clubs for investment in property and completion of a public park.

Churchmen of Wauseon, Ohio, starting a Sunday closing movement, have struck a snag in the management of the Princess theater and word has gone out that if the playhouse is compelled to remain dark on Sundays every cigar store, news stand and other enterprise will have to do likewise.

The Luna, Fostoria, is giving $2 worth of trading stamps with each matinee ticket. Fostoria housewives are finding them a great help in filling out their stamp books.

Charles G. Williams, Coshocton, Ohio, attorney, has been appointed a member of the state board of motion picture censors to succeed Harry E. Vestal, of Ada, who resigned. Bert B. Buckley, of Dayton, declined appointment when it was offered him by the state industrial commission. Buckley is a member of the Republican state executive committee from the third district and two years ago was the party's candidate for congress.

Fire in the establishment of the Wyandotte Film Supply company, North High street, Columbus, recently, entailed a loss of $2,500. As Harry Deidrick, night clerk at the exchange, was leaving a large steel vault in which nearly 100 films were stored, he saw a blaze in the film rack outside. His presence of mind in closing the vault door saved the pictures inside, but the slight delay endangered his own life, for the blaze had obtained headway which menaced escape by the stairway. Deidrick ran down a fire escape and turned in an alarm.

Charles Hoffman, who recently leased the Opera House at Carrollton, has ordered a projecting machine and will set the theater in operation as soon as improvements now under way are completed. Feature film productions will be used.

IN DETROIT.

The Atlas Motion Picture company, Inc., 600 Liggett building, Detroit, has decided to use the trade mark, "Made in U. S. A.," for which the Detroit Board of Commerce gave $500 in cash, having conducted a contest in which thousands of trade-mark designs were submitted. The Atlas company on March 8 wrote a letter to the board stating that they had just completed a weekly release, and that the "Made in U. S. A." trade-mark would appear on it. The film company intends to use this mark on its films in the future.

When the writer dropped into the office of the Fox Film Corporation he met Mr. Abe Siegel, special representative of that concern, who recently became associated with them. Mr. Siegel is one of the most popular boys in the film rental world east of Chicago, and the acquisition of Mr. Siegel indicates that the Fox people are looking for the best men available to look after their various departments. Mr. Siegel has had seven years of experience in the rental business, and is probably best known in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, New Jersey and New England. He recently promoted a successful venture in the Poem-O-Graph, a novel talking picture. As special representative for the Fox Film Corporation he is anxious to do all he can for exhibitors, and those who may desire to get in touch with him at any time can do so by writing him in care of the Detroit office, or to the New York office.

The Garden theater, also a Kunsky theater, is being renovated and redecorated throughout, new carpets being laid, new uniforms being ordered for the ushers and new stage settings being designed. A dimmer system will also be installed.

NEW THEATERS TO OPEN SOON.

If all the theaters in course of erection and those being planned are completed this year, Detroit's investment in moving picture buildings will be increased by over a million dollars. Here is a partial list of the larger houses, some of which will shortly open:

The Majestic, Woodward and Willis avenues, costing $150,000, open April 1, seating nearly 2,000.

The Knickerbocker, seating 1,000, Jefferson avenue and the Belle Isle bridge approach, costing $100,000, opens middle of April.

The new Broadway-Strand, seating 1,500, after $25,000 having been spent for alterations and improvements, will open April 11.

The Norwood, at Woodward and the Boulevard, seating 1,000, will open during the summer.

The Dix avenue, at Ferdinand and Dix avenues, costing $75,000, seating 1,200, opens late in the year.

John H. Kunsky will erect a theater seating 1,500, costing $150,000, at Grand River and Fourteenth streets, and may also erect a theater costing $250,000, seating 2,500, on Broadway, a stone's throw from Woodward avenue.

Frank Drew will build this summer a theater costing $50,000 in the rear of 254 Woodward avenue, to seat 600; the new Scenic to be erected at Chene and Warren avenues costing $350,000, including stores, to seat over a thousand.

The Emma Lancaster theater, in Delray, costing $50,000, seating over 600; the proposed Regent to be erected on Woodward avenue, north of the boulevard, by William F. Klatt, and the new Duplex theater, costing $100,000, to be erected by the Grand Boulevard Theater Co., on the east boulevard, near Woodward avenue. In addition to the above mentioned houses there are at least a dozen smaller houses to be erected, all of them being devoted to motion pictures exclusively. That too many theaters are being built, there cannot be the least doubt. It will be truly remarkable if all of the new houses operate on a profitable basis. There are already about 150 theaters in Detroit.

New Exchanges in Detroit

New Henry Smith Building at Griswold and State Streets Now Houses Three Film Distributors (Fox Film Corporation, Standard Film Service Company and Pathe Exchanges, Inc.)—Interesting Notes on the New Managers

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THREE film exchanges have invaded the Henry Smith building, at Griswold and State streets, Detroit, and have opened offices there since March 1. All are on the fourth floor. The Smith building is comparatively new, is modern throughout and is equipped with automatic sprinklers on all floors.

Probably the largest office is that of the Fox Film Corporation, who occupy suite No. 407-408. The office is under the management of Mayer B. Schlesinger, formerly manager of the Academy theater in Buffalo, and recently acting as special representative in New York for the Mark-Brock Amusement Company. Mr. Schlesinger will make his future home in Detroit, and will represent the Fox Film Corporation in Michigan. He ranks as one of the "old guard" in the film industry, having been allied with the business from its infancy. With his brother, Morris S. Schlesinger, he was one of the first to exploit the traveling moving picture show some sixteen years ago, at that time taking out the "Passion Play," which is about the same time that Lyman T. Howe started in business with his travel talks. The Schlesinger family is a progressive one in the moving picture business. His brother, Morris S. Schlesinger, owns and operates the Orpheum theater in Newark, N. J.; Gus Schlesinger, another brother, formerly manager for George M. Cohan, of Cohan & Harris, theatrical producers, is now located in Buffalo as manager of the Regent theater for the Mark-Brock Amusement company. Leon, also a brother, is likewise connected with the Mark-Brock Amusement company, as manager of the Strand theater in Toronto. Mr. Mayer B. Schlesinger told a representative of the Moving Picture World that he is about to establish a publicity department on a large scale in order that exhibitors may get full value of the big features that the Fox Film corporation is about to release. Mr. Schlesinger has arranged for first-run films with the new Broadway-Strand, which will open on April 11.

The Standard Film Service Co., whose executive offices are in New York City, have opened at 411-412 Henry Smith building. Bert Deiner is the Detroit manager. He was the first booking agent in Michigan for moving picture films, starting in ten years ago. Previous to his returning to Detroit a few weeks ago, Mr. Deiner managed the Toledo office for Warner's features. Mr. Deiner has already sixty-two features in stock, all of which are new copies. He states that he will release four features a week.

The Pathe Freres company has opened an office on the fourth floor which is under the management of John R. Lakin, as previously recorded.

ARRANGES STAGE FOR EACH BIG FEATURE.

Special attention is being given to unique and novel stage settings at all of the John H. Kunsky theaters in Detroit. Mr. Kunsky believes that a proper stage setting, designed and arranged in accordance with the screen productions, enhances the interest of the theater patrons and makes them realize that the moving picture industry is more than simply a photographic process. Mr. Kunsky contends that too few theaters showing pictures pay attention to the artistic possibilities. The first big attempt to bring about the proper atmosphere was at the Washington theater, the week of March 21, when the feature film, "The Eagle's Nest," was shown. On the stage was a huge back drop showing mountains, the rocky trail, emigrant wagons, etc. The stage proper was an exact replica of the prairie days of 1849. As the fireproof curtain was taken up, two live figures, a settler and his wife, were seen on the stage to still further give realism to the effect. Of course there was special music. Special decorations were made in the lobby and foyer of the theater. The high ceilings were completely festooned with smilax, tree branches, while on each side were tree trunks. Programs for the week were passed out by real Indian girl ushers, who were dressed in real Indian costumes. Mr. Kunsky has received many letters of praise from patrons who were very much impressed with the special and artistic touches given this production.

MID-WEST SPECIAL FILM CO.

The Mid-West Special Film Co. has opened a branch office in the Goebel building, Detroit, under the management of I. Schlank. He was formerly with the company's main office in Minneapolis. The Mid-West company is owned by John Gallagher. The Detroit office will book features in Michigan and Indiana.

PLANS OF SCENIC THEATER CO.

Erection of a theater seating 2,000, on the southwest corner of Warren avenue and Chene street, Detroit, is planned by the Scenic Theater Company, of which Messrs. Connell, Hupp and Thomas are managers. The cost of the building and site is estimated at $350,000. Plans for the structure have been prepared by Mildner & Eisen, architects. The building is to be fireproof, of steel and concrete construction. The exterior will be faced with white terra cotta and an illuminated marquise will extend around the walls. The principal front will face Warren avenue. The lot is 110 by 303 feet in size. The theater is designed for the presentation of vaudeville and photoplays. Besides the theater the building will contain eight stores. It will be three stories high.

DETROIT BRIEFS.

The Saginaw Hippodrome Amusement company has opened an office at 1234 Dime Bank building, Detroit. This firm will start May 1 on the construction of a large theater in Saginaw, to be completed within five months.

A. W. Blankmeyer, of the Grand Circus theater, Detroit, was in New York the last week in April on business connected with his own theater, and that of the Michigan Theaters Corporation, an organization comprising moving picture theater exhibitors who plan to buy feature films direct from the producers, as fully explained in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World.

The Addison Amusement company, operating the Addison theater at Woodward and Charlotte avenues, Detroit, has incorporated for $15,000. The principal stockholders are Christopher E. Pudrith, Wilhelmina Pudrith and F. L. Pudrith.

Edward T. Butcher, formerly of New York, has been appointed manager of the Broadway-Strand theater, which is to open on April 11 with "The Christian," according to an announcement officially made by Harry I. Garson, general manager.

August Thiel, 1459 West Fort street, Detroit, is having plans prepared for a theater and store building to cost $8,000. It will be two stories high, 25 by 50 feet, of brick veneer and stone.

Bishop Favors Censoring

Bishop McCord Tells Diocesan Holy Name Society of Philadelphia at Recent Meeting That Even Under Present Censorship There Is Too Much Laxity in Films—Believes Laws Governing Pictures Should Be Even More Drastic.

Special to Moving Picture World by Philadelphia News Service.

AT the quarterly meeting of the Diocesan Holy Name Union, of Philadelphia, recently held in the Annunciation Church hall, Tenth and Dickinson streets, Bishop McCort asserted that the censorship of moving pictures in this state should not be abolished.

Two hundred and forty-six delegates, representing eighty-two churches and 50,000 members of the union and fifty priests were in attendance and listened with interest while Bishop McCort discussed the activities of the union. Concerning moving picture censorship, he said:

"Even under the present censorship there is too much laxity, but we must support the law, in fact, lend our influence in making the law more drastic."

He urged the union to bar low grade moving pictures and asserted that if the censorship was removed the minds of children would be laid open to debauchery and demoralization by vulgar, obscene and indecent pictures.

State Senator Farley, the next speaker, said that pictures that had been barred by Chief Censor Breitinger were exhibited to members of the legislature and that they were so vulgar and vile that no man should be given the right to exhibit them. The union passed resolutions opposing any change in the censor laws.

JUSTINA HUFF MARRIED.

Dr. John Patrick Chapman Wins Heart and Hand of Lubin Star.

As the result of an introduction at a dance some twelve months ago, which introduction was immediately followed by a most ardent courtship, Dr. John Patrick Chapman, an instructor of anatomy at the University of Pennsylvania, married Miss Mary Justina Huff, on Friday evening, March 19. Miss Huff, who is a delightful Southern girl, has been playing leading ingenue roles with the Lubin company. Some of Miss Huff's most remarkable work was accomplished in "Love of Women" and "Men of the Mountains."

Justina Huff.

Doctor Chapman first met his bride, who resides at the Powelton apartments, 36th and Powelton avenue, at a dance given by members of the Merion Cricket club, at Haverford. Following an ardent courtship Miss Huff finally agreed to the marriage upon the condition that she will continue to appear in the Pictures as she does not wish to give up her career before the camera. Dr. Chapman is twenty-seven years of age and resides at 1700 Pine street. Miss Ruth Bryan, of Washington, and Dr. Leo Bernard acted as maid of honor and best man, respectively.

PLAINFIELD—PICTURE CITY.

Breaks Loose from Broadway and Has Feature Theater of Its Own.

Judging from the interest of the good citizens of Plainfield, N. J., the opening of the United States Astor theater, on West Front street, under the management of the United States Theater Company of New Jersey, and under the personal direction of the president of the company, Frank G. Hall, savored of the importance of a first night of opera in a large city.

Naturally theater-goers in Plainfield and its vicinity are very much interested over the prospect of having the chance of seeing the leading Broadway productions presented in their city at the same time that the people of New York are enjoying them. In consequence of this interest Mr. Hall is prepared for large audiences at his theater every day and has provided a system of booking whereby special feature attractions will be shown two days in succession, thus enabling everyone to see these wonderful attractions.

ADORNING LEADER THEATER.

Plans were recently formulated to make the Leader theater, 41st St. and Lancaster avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., the most beautiful theater in this city. Mr. Effinger spent the early part of last week in New York in consultation with architects and decorators who were active in beautifying the million-dollar Strand theater, the handsomest photoplay house on Broadway. Several new ideas and innovations are to be installed soon at the Leader that will introduce highly artistical effects in protoplay production.

INSTRUCTIVE MOVING PICTURES.

Moving pictures recently at the Child Federation's Baby Saving Show showed concrete, which has come more and more widely into use because of its highly sanitary qualities. In the recent earthquake at Avezzano, Italy, in January of this year, thousands of houses built of stone were destroyed and their occupants killed, while the concrete structures largely withstood the attack. Modern methods of reinforceemnt have greatly increased the strength of concrete buildings, but this is of secondary interest when the sanitary uses of the material are considered. The number of uses to which concrete may be put are amusing.

A few nights later modern methods of preparing antitoxin were shown in moving pictures. These meetings have been largely attended and it is declared by those in charge that the moving pictures have been a great factor in drawing the interest and attention of the people.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

The management of the State Street theater, Trenton, N. J., is giving the patrons of the house United Profit-Sharing Coupons.

"The Greyhound" was recently shown at the Stroud theater, East Stroudsburg, and the proceeds of the entertainment were given to the Ladies' Auxiliary of the General Hospital. Two shows were given and the regular prices of admission were charged.

Michael J. Comaty, assistant operator at the Garden theater, Trenton, N. J., has been identified with pictures for a number of years and has made remarkable progress in this line of endeavor. He inaugurated his career at the Majestic theter, on South Broad street. Until his appointment at the Garden theater he had worked in almost every theater in the city.

Albert Fine, the Elizabeth, N. J., moving picture organist, who has been temporarily employed at the Astor theater, expects to return to the United States Garden theater some time in the near future.

The photo-dramatic version of "St. Elmo" was recently presented at the Trenton Y. M. C. A. and drew large audiences. It has been the policy of the management of the Y. M. C. A. to exhibit motion pictures on each Friday and Saturday night in the week throughout the winter season.

Many exhibitors throughout the state will welcome Lubin's entry into the independent special feature field. That this is a step in the right direction and an opportunity that most exhibitors have waited for, and has been proved a success by the instant popularity of "The Eagle's Nest," which has been booked far in advance. As Mr. Lubin—generally known as "Pop"—is universally recognized as the pioneer in the moving picture business, there is little doubt that this new step will be followed by other large producers such as the Vitagraph and others.

EXCHANGES COMBINED.

Two Pittsburgh Branches of General Film Service Now Under Same Head.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE most important happening in the Pittsburgh Film Row during the past few weeks is the consolidation of the two branches of the General Film company, the Calcium branch at 121 Fourth avenue and the Duquesne branch at 436 Fourth avenue, and the resignation of Walter T. Kinson, the manager of the Calcium branch. His resignation hit his friends with a big surprise, as he has had charge of this branch for the past few years. Mr Kinson is undecided as to his future business activities.

The General Film company are now making their headquarters in the George building, 436 Fourth avenue, the past home of the Duquesne branch. The entire third floor and about half of the second is being used, but this arrangement is only temporary, as they have several propositions in view, providing for the erection of a fireproof building, to be occupied about November.

Special representative, J. E. Hennessy, of the General Film Company, has been in the city, superintending the matter of consolidation and negotiating for various deals in the way of a building to be erected for the exclusive use of his company.

It is understood that Mr. Nichols will have charge of the combined branches and P. Qualtrough will have charge of the poster department.

JOHN P. DONOVAN DINNER.

The employes of the Regent theater, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa., gave a banquet last Saturday in honor of their manager, John P. Donovan, who was appointed general manager for the Clark & Rowland interests last week. There were plenty of good things to satisfy the inner man. Speeches were made by men who know the film business from A to Z. During the evening an organization was formed, the "R. R. R." (Regent Red Rose), the purpose of the club being to obtain the highest point of efficiency in all departments of the Clark & Rowland theaters.

COL. KEENAN TO BUILD THEATER.

Col. T. J. Keenan, the Pittsburgh newspaper man and capitalist, has announced that he will have work started in a few days on a fine large theater block covering his lots on the southeast corner of Merchant and Fifth streets, Ambridge, Pa. While the details of the construction of the building cannot be given at this time, it is known that the building will cover the whole of Col. Keenan's lot-holding at this point, which consists of four lots, an area of 88x100 feet.

The new theater will be one of the finest between Pittsburgh and Cleveland. It will have seating capacity for more than 800 persons and in modern construction and architectural design it will be the last word. Besides the commodious theater a couple of splendid business rooms, suitable for mercantile purposes, will be included in the new block. When built the theater will be placed in charge of an experienced and efficient manager.

The J. Frank Hatch Film company has finally secured a feature film, "The Iron Hand," made by Gaumont, which was seized and held by the courts pending litigation which lasted over two years.

Mr. Hatch, over two years ago, bought the film in Europe and brought it to Pittsburgh, where he found it to be the same as a feature released in this country under the name of "The International Conspiracy." It was sold in this section to the Imperial Feature Film company, conducted at that time by Messrs. Schwalm & Rothleder. Mr. Rothleder notified the Gaumont company in New York and then seized Hatch's film on a writ of replevin.

Mr. Hatch won the case on first and subsequent hearings until the Gaumont people failed to carry it further and the films now revert to the owner. It is thought the Gaumont company paid the costs of litigation.

ARGUE COLOR LINE IN HIGHER COURT.

The right of a moving picture theater owner to set aside certain seats for the exclusive use of negroes and compel them to occupy them was argued before the state superior court, sitting in Harrisburg, Pa., in the appeal of Athens George, proprietor of a Harrisburg theater, against the decision handed down by the Dauphin county court in favor of Frank Robinson, colored. Robinson was awarded $50 against George as a result of being required to sit in a "Black Crow" seat in George's theater. The suit is a test case.

ROCHESTER, PA., NEW LICENSE RULE.

The Rochester borough council held their regular semi-monthly meeting last week and during the session Councilman Darling called the attention to a portion of an ordinance, regulating the license fee for nickelodeons, theaters, etc. The ordinance provides that all nickelodeons or other inside exhibitions, charging not over five cents admission, shall pay a license fee of $25 per year.

Darling stated that all of the nickelodeons in the borough are charging over five cents for some of their shows, and, therefore, should pay a license fee of $50 per year, as required by ordinance. The ordinance will be enforced and nickelodeons which run an occasional ten-cent show will be required to pay $50 instead of $25 license per year.

DAVIS TO MANAGE THE BUTLER.

Prof. E. Otto Davis, of East Cunningham street, Butler, Pa., for many years connected with the management of theaters, has assumed charge of the Orpheum of Pittsburgh. One of the first things which was done by the new manager was to change the name to "The Butler," by which name the house will be known in the future. Mr. Davis will make a number of extensive improvements to the house during the late spring months, when an addition of sixty feet will be placed at the rear of the theater, which will allow a large stage and increase the seating capacity by 300, giving the house a seating capacity of over 600. The new manager is no stranger to the film people or Butlerites, having resided here for a number of years, though for the past decade he had been a resident of Sharon, Pa., where he was connected with local theaters, having had charge of the Thomas for three years and was the most successful manager that house ever had, bringing it up from an almost "has been" to the leading theater in the Schenango valley.

NEW PENN AVENUE HOUSE.

The moving picture theater to be erected on the property of the Nicola Land Company, on Penn avenue, near Frankstown avenue, East End, Pittsburg, Pa., is to be completed by October 1, as ground will be broken for it around May 1. Plans of the building are being hurried to completion by H. E. Kennedy & Company and call for a seating capacity of 1,550. The building will front 100 feet on Penn avenue and will have a depth of 171 feet, making it the largest motion picture theater in the city, and with its numerous unique features, its owners mean to also make it one of the most attractive in the country. There will be no storerooms connected with it, which omission will give the building a most imposing appearance, and will allow a much handsomer front than would be possible if there were stores alongside the entrance.

CHARLEROI HOUSE TO OPEN.

Work is rapidly nearing completion on the new Majestic theater in Charleroi, Pa., which is being erected by H. C. Hepler and C. J. Matthews. It is expected to have it completed about April 1. J. H. Megown, a well known Pittsburgh film man and a former exhibitor, will manage this house. It will have a capacity of 500. The building is two stories. The order for equipment has been placed with the Feature Film & Calcium Light company, which included two Powers 6-A motor-driven machines and a mirroroide screen.

PITTSBURGH BRIEFS.

An application for a Pennsylvania State charter of incorporation will be made by Max W. Harring, James Milholland and Frank P. Cheeseman for an intended corporation to be called the "Kriterion Film Service of Pittsburgh," the character and object of which is manufacturing and dealing in motion and talking picture machines, supplies and accessories, motion and talking picture films and records, and using, operating and exhibiting the same.

A Pennsylvania State charter of incorporation has been granted the Quality Amusement Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., with a capital of $5,000. The incorporators are: William G. Watt, A. W. Henderson and Louis F. Adelman of Pittsburgh.

It is reported the Kaufman Realty company of Pittsburgh, Pa., has been interviewing prominent film men as to the feasibility of erecting a fireproof building for the exclusive use of film companies in this city.

Leo Wertheimer, of Buffalo, who will build a new theater in State street, between Ninth and Tenth streets, Erie, Pa., this spring, last week took over the Wilkay theater on Parade street. Mr. Wertheimer will introduce a new line of "movie" stars to patrons on the East Side. An orchestra will also be added in the near future.

Department of public safety officials of Pittsburgh, Pa., are arranging to have "Walk-rite" campaign motion pictures show in theaters to educate pedestrians to the new traffic regulations.

John G. Long, well known among the motion picture interests in Pittsburgh, and who has been a silent partner in the Grelle Feature Film company, at 212 Fourth avenue, has plunged into the feature film line under the name of Enterprise Film Exchange, and is dividing office space with Mr. Grelle.

Mr. Grelle will continue under the old name and at the same location.

Representative Cromer, of Allegheny county, presented a bill to the House of Representatives at Harrisburg, Pa., Thursday, March 18, which provides that moving picture machinery shall be inspected by the department of public safety inspectors and calls for the appointment of inspectors and assistants.

A fine new vaudeville and moving picture theater has just been opened by Messrs. Shaheen & Thomas in Clairton, Pa. This is a fireproof building with a seating capacity of 420, large, roomy and well ventilated.

M. Feitler and A. J. Wall have contracted for the erection of an up-to-date moving picture theater at 709 Greenfield avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. It will have a capacity of 300 and will be completed about the 1st of May.

While in New York recently Harry F. Grelle, of the Grelle Feature Film company, bought the Eastern Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights to "The Volunteer Organist."

CORUNNA FOR SUNDAY SHOWS.

By Midwest Special, Moving Picture World.

SUNDAY shows are indirectly an issue in the spring election at Corunna. Sentiment for seven-day shows seems to be with D. R. Salisbury, an exhibitor. The city attorney has been instructed to draw an anti-Sunday show ordinance. Enough changes in membership in the Council will take place at the polls to make it possible that the new ordinance will be repealed even if it is passed by the present body. Meanwhile Salisbury will not force the issue.

PONTIAC WANTS CENSORSHIP.

Pontiac is the latest to hear the cry for a local censorship. Commissioner George A. Brown has asked the city attorney to draft an ordinance to that effect.

COULDN'T ASK THE MOTHERS' ADVICE.

"How do the mothers feel about the Sunday picture show." This was what the City Council at Ann Arbor wanted to know but found, to its regret, that it could not spend money to have ballots printed for this purpose even if the vote was only advisory. It was voted to submit to the male voters at the regular election the Sunday question, but the vote was not to be binding on the Council.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

The Essanay release, "Sparks of Fate," featuring Francis X. Bushman, was almost a local production for the Orpheum at Grand Rapids, as the Chicago company spent a day in and around the city working on this picture.

A moving picture show has been opened in the opera house at Bronson.

H. H. Flanagan has opened the Empress theater at Bellaire.

Manager Sullivan of the Royal at Escanaba announces hereafter all seats at all performances will be five cents.

C. F. Groves has bought the Family theater at Greenville.

The Bijou at Bay City is trying the "pay night" stunt.

Thomas Tyrell has old the Princess theater at Ithaca to Gilbert Genesta of Shepherd, who has renamed it the Genesta theater.

New Fillmore Theater

San Francisco's New Picture House Formally Opens on March 18—Seats a Thousand Persons and Is One of the Finest Theaters on Pacific Coast—Short Account of Up-to-Date, Fireproof Structure and Its Adornment.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE New Fillmore theater, one of the finest structures ever erected on the Pacific Coast for moving pictures, was formally opened on the evening of March 18 before a brilliant gathering of city officials, prominent business men, exchange managers, members of improvement clubs and leading residents of the Fillmore street district. The building was erected by J. R. Hanify for the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit and represents the very latest ideas in theater construction, nothing having been omitted that could add to its beauty or utility. It is located at Eddy and Fillmore streets, the auditorium running parallel with the former street, but reached through a spacious lobby from the latter thoroughfare. The theater is a unit of a large structure, the rest of which is devoted to stores, but in reality it is a separate building, being of absolutely fireproof construction and separated from the buildings around it by an alley on each side reached by many exits, enabling the house to be emptied in a very short space of time.

The entrance lobby is finished in marble, while the foyer is paneled in gray oak. The main auditorium is beautifully decorated in Parisian ivory, with gold trimmings, and is furnished with roomy opera chairs upholstered in leather. The hangings are of gold and the foyer and aisles are carpeted with a floor covering in red that is a delight to tread upon. The walls are unusually high for a theater of this kind and this has made possible the installation of an unusually effective system of indirect lighting upon which much care has been bestowed. A costly feature never seen by the public, but nevertheless appreciated by patrons, is a system of heating and ventilating whereby the temperature of the house is maintained at a fixed standard and the air is changed once every three minutes. Not only that, it is filtered by a water process making it pure and sweet. Music is furnished by a $10,000 player installed by the American Photoplayer Company of Berkeley and is the first of its type Fifty instrument to be installed anywhere.

The operating room is declared by experts to be the finest ever fitted up. It is almost as large as some of the moving picture houses in this district six or eight years ago, extending almost the full width of the theater. It is equipped with three Powers Cameragraphs No. 6A and every device made for the proper handling of reels. Adjoining this room on one side is the motor-generator room, while on the other is the private office of Manager Joseph E. Levin. The management is so proud of this part of the theater that the interested public has been invited to inspect it daily from 2 to 4 o'clock p. m.

The opening attraction was entirely in keeping with the beautiful house and the brilliant occasion, being Mrs. Leslie Carter in "Du Barry," the George Kleine masterpiece, with a Charles Chaplin comedy thrown in for good measure. The opening was in charge of the Fillmore Street Improvement Association and the receipts for this night were given to this organization. Manager Levin in a few apt words set forth the aims and policies of the house and then presented the secretary of the Improvement Club. The latter was followed by Edward Rainey, representing Mayor Rolph. He cited the new theater as another example of "the many things that are being done right in San Francisco," comparing it in this respect with the new City Hall, now nearing completion, and the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, which is attracting the attention of the world. He then introduced Congressman Julius Kahn, who paid a tribute to those responsible for the building of the theater.

Later in the evening a levee of exchange men and theater owners, with their wives, was held in the private office and operating room, and some choice vintage was uncorked by the management in celebration of the occasion. Practically every exchange in the city was represented and the floral offerings almost filled the foyer and lobby.

The opening of this new house, which has a seating capacity of 1,000, gives the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit four large houses in the Fillmore street district, all being located with a strip of business district five blocks long. The others are the Progress theater, the All Star Photoplay House and Hausler's theater, and in addition this concern has the Idle Hour theater at 2550 Mission street.

TIVOLI CHANGES TWICE A WEEK.

The Tivoli theater has inaugurated the new policy of two complete changes of program every week, the changes to be made on Sunday and Wednesday. Since taking over this house a year ago Turner & Dahnken have adhered up to the present time of changing programs but once a week.

NEW MANAGER FOR UNITED FILM.

George J. Ekre, formerly of New York, has been placed in charge of the San Francisco office of the United Film Service, succeeding J. L. Warner. He arrived recently to take up his new duties.

PLAN NEW PRODUCING CONCERN.

J. L. Warner, who recently formed the Standard Film Company and opened offices in the Mechanics' Building on Market street, is completing arrangements for engaging in the manufacture of feature productions, a specialty to be made of plays from famous books. It is planned to make the Standard Film Company the renting part of the organization.

INVESTIGATING THE PICTURES.

The City Club of Berkeley, Cal., is making a close range survey of the moving picture situation in that city, and as a means of obtaining the impressions gained by children of the films shown there has arranged with the school authorities to have the children of the sixth, seventh and eighth grades write on the subject, "What I Like Best in Motion Pictures."

CALIFORNIA BRIEFS.

The Porter estate at Woodland, Cal., is building a new theater on the property at the corner of Main and First streets, Woodland, with a seating capacity of 600. It will be ready for occupancy May 15 and the lessee is Harry J. Leland; the lease is for ten years. Mr. Leland has contracted for Paramount films and also the World. The theater is equipped with a stage and combinations can be played if the lessee so desires.

M. Calmy, representing the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., has returned from a trip through the coast counties. He reports that many small houses that have been giving shows but two or three times a week are now aranging for a full time service.

To comply with State regulations on the subject of business concerns, Walter L. McGinn and P. A. Paxton have filed a statement indicating that they are engaged in business as the Macograph Motion Picture Company.

The San Francisco Police Commission has granted a kinetoscope keeper permit to Edward A. Homan, 1125 Market street, and an exhibitor's license to Emanuel B. Mayer, secretary of the Alcazar theater.

The Electric on Union street, near the Exposition grounds, has been sold to Mr. Davis, formerly of Salinas, Cal.

The American on Market street, which opened a week ago, has enjoyed a good business since that time, it being reported that 8,000 attended the show on the opening day.

G. A. Metcalfe has been apopinted distributor for Simplex machines in the territory north of the Tehachipi Mountains, comprising Northern and Central California.

Francis X. Bushman, the well-known star, is in San Francisco visiting the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

F. Hewitt, who conducts three moving picture road shows in the Northwest, is here with his daughters to spend a few weeks at the Exposition.

The Howard Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. Samuel Quickmire pastor, has purchased a Motiograph machine and is showing moving pictures regularly.

The California Kriterion Film Exchange opened for business on March 15 at 111 Golden Gate avenue, under the direction of David Bershon. Splendid quarters have been fitted up and regular releases are now being made. An exhibition room is being equipped in the basement where regular showings of film will be made.

The business of the Pacific Mutual Film Corporation is now being conducted as the Mutual Film Corporation, the change having been made to avoid any misunderstanding that might arise. The work of enlarging the Turk street offices has been completed and X. K. Stout has been installed as assistant to manager J. R. Crone. Two large feature attractions are now being released weekly by this concern and the initial bookings have been very satisfactory.

John Henry Magoon, manager of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Ltd., of Honolulu, T. H., is here with his wife for a few weeks' stay and is making a careful study of the Exposition.

J. E. Smith, who conducts the Buckley at Tonopah, Nev., is also here arranging for service and visiting the Exposition.

The Blazon Film Co. of Berkeley, Cal., has purchased a Powers Cameragraph No. 6A to be used in connection with its laboratory.

A new Simplex machine has been added to the equipment of Brown's Opera House at Salinas, Cal.

The Buck theater has been opened at Crockett, Cal., by Connors & Witt, with vaudeville and moving pictures.

The Lyric at Chico, Cal., has been sold by D. B. Dovel to E. S. Thompson of Kennett. Mr. Thompson conducts the Gem at the latter place and will operate both of them.

The Best theater at San Leandro, Cal., has been purchased from Frank Holiday by Harry Arvidson of Berkeley, Cal., who retains an interest in the Rex at the latter place.

D. S. Taylor, who recently purchased property at Tulare, Cal., on which to erect a moving picture house, has disposed of this, but is planning to build on another site.

The West End Improvement Association of Santa Ana, Cal., will erect a one-story moving picture house at an estimated cost of $25,000. J. Flood Walker is the architect.

The tragic death of Lincoln Beachey, which occurred on March 14, cast a pall of gloom among local moving picture men, with whom he was a prime favorite, and many attended the funeral held three days later. The San Francisco office of George Kleine was closed on March 17 between the hours of one and two p. m. out of respect to the memory of the popular aviator, who was a personal friend of branch manager Tom North.

REEVE MAKES A SUCCESS.

Eighteenth Street Theater, St. Louis, Prospering—Had Stumped Others.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE history of the Eighteenth Street theater, on 18th street, between Geyer and Lafayette avenues, shows the result that the study of a neighborhood will give to build up the patronage of a theater. This house had ten managers before it was taken charge of by its present proprietor, William O. Reeve, who is the only one to make anything like a lasting success of the place. Reeve studied the people in the neighborhood of the theater, found out what they liked and gave it to them. He has been filling the house comfortably on three nights a week and packing and jamming it to the doors on the other nights. Reeve runs three serials a week. "The Exploits of Elaine" on Monday, "Runaway June" on Thursday, and "The Master Key" on Saturday. He runs a good feature on Sunday, and an evenly balanced program on the other nights. The neighborhood is densely populated and it is no trouble to fill the house almost every night of the week with this program. Another thing Reeve does is to give the theater his personal attention. He is in the house all the time; every man, woman and child in the neighborhood knows him; he is at the door as people come in, and stands at the exit as they go out; he stops this one and that one and asks if they liked the show and what pictures they would like to see on the program, and he acts on the suggestions. He does not depend on slides alone for announcements, but makes little personal talks to his audience about whatever he has planned for the theater. Reeve has been in control of the 18th Street theater for a year now, and has pulled it up from a money-loser to a highly prosperous condition.

BREAKING 'EM IN TO DIMES.

J. Rathheim, proprietor of the Hudson theater, 11th street and Park avenue, will not be able to operate the Hudson airdome on Hickory street, where he has heretofore moved his program at the beginning of hot weather. The digging of the great Mill Creek sewer, which passes near the airdome, has undermined the ground in the vicinity of the place till it is no longer safe. Mr. Rathheim is remodeling the Hudson, however, in a manner that will make it as good, if not better, than an airdome, since it can be used on rainy as well as clear nights. A huge skylight will be cut in the ceiling that can be kept open when the weather is fine and closed over on short notice. In addition to this seven large openings will be made in the wall and a special air cooling system installed. Mr. Rathheim, who is one of the most persistent advocates of higher admission prices, is gradually trying to get the admission of his theater up to ten cents. He has Sunday night firmly established, and the audience used to paying a dime, and last week he added Thursday to the ten-cent list and as soon as that is established he will add another, till the Hudson is a ten-cent house for every night in the week.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL MANAGE PICTURE SHOW.

The Parent-Teacher Association of the Rock Hill school, in conjunction with the Rock Hill Presbyterian church, on Manchester road, are giving the people in the neighborhood a moving picture show of four or five reels twice a week in the Church Hall. The Parent-Teacher Association are in active management of the program and the films are censored by a committee with a view of making them educational. Performances are given on Tuesdays and Fridays, and the price of admission is just enough to cover expenses.

Weathering the War

Prosperity of Motion Picture Houses in Ottawa Under the Stress of War and Its Necessary Special Taxes and General Retrenching Is Gratifying—Legitimate Houses Hard Hit—Films Showing Canadian Troops Strong Attraction.

By Carl Ketchem, Ottawa Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE surprising adaptability of the moving picture industry to unfavorable circumstances has never been better exemplified than in the prosperity which continues to crown the efforts of Canadian picture house proprietors to entertain the public, despite the fact that war is raging. As a country which is itself actually in a state of war and not a neutral, like the United States, it might have been expected that the box office receipts might have shown a woeful diminution. This has indeed been the case with the legitimate theaters in nearly every part of Canada, but it has not been true of the photoplay houses. Rather has the moving picture industry risen phoenix-like from the ashes of war and war's destructive effects on the spending power of the public. In nearly every city in the Dominion the standard theaters have either been dark practically all season or have been running stock, or, again, have followed the trend of the times and gone in for moving pictures.

Far otherwise has it been with the photoplay managers. Instead of allowing the war to depress business they have made capital out of it. Special war pictures are a feature in nearly all the better class motion picture houses and to a people whose own sons or brothers or fathers or husbands are participating in the present world struggle such attractions are of vital interest. The Russell theater, the home of the "legit" in the Capital, has at different times shown war series which have always proved a splendid drawing card. Such pictures are now regular features of the program in the different vaudeville houses.

It might be expected that such public interest would spur the picture companies to their best efforts to obtain material in connection with the training and departure from Canada of the different Canadian contingents. As regards the former some very good pictures have been shown of the training of the first Canadian expeditionary force at Valcartier camp in Quebec, but the strict precaution taken by the military authorities have prevented the picture men from availing themselves of much material which would have proven very valuable indeed. It is hoped that the precautions will be somewhat more intelligently relaxed before the departure of the second Canadian contingent this spring.

WAR TAX, MILL ON DOLLAR.

Moving picture proprietors will have to pay their share of the war tax now being imposed by the Ontario government. A tax of one mill on the dollar on all taxable property in the province was recently put into force as the result of the introduction of a war tax bill by the provincial treasurer. Picture men do not quite like the idea of being included and will reluctantly pay up at the end of the year.

ACCEPT CENSORSHIP RULINGS.

A recent visit of the Ontario chief inspector of moving picture houses to this city resulted in his report to the government authorities that "the moving picture houses in Ottawa are all right." The department had received charges that the local shows were "putting it over" the inspectors and were running uncensored pictures freely. The inspector, however, was perfectly satisfied with the way in which the managers were doing business here, and although they had good opportunity to smuggle uncensored reels in from Quebec for Saturday night shows, it was by no means a practice. In short he did not question the methods of the local men.

SUGARMAN BUILDING THEATER.

Among other moving picture houses going up is one to be completed and opened to the public by the 15th of the month under proprietorship of Isadore Sugarman. The building is situated on Rideau street, at the corner of Dalhousie, and in one of the most central spots in the city. Mr. Sugarman will personally manage the house and will run a series of high-class pictures, using five-reelers for features. The building is equipped with a most complete system of ventilation and is very attractive both in the interior and outside.

OTTAWA BRIEFS.

The Flower theater here, one of the most popular of the high-class houses in the city, although only recently opened, has been fortunate in securing the sole rights in Ottawa for the World Film Company's productions. The capable management by Mr. A. H. Cooper, formerly of New York, has resulted in it meeting with remarkable success since its opening only a few months ago.

The Conness-Till company of Toronto is active among the Canadian film corporations out for pictures of the troops in training throughout the Dominion. Excellent pictures of recent reviews of the Toronto troops by H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, governor-general, and by Sir Robert Borden, prime minister, are now running in Toronto theaters and are expected in Ottawa in a few weeks.

ST. LOUIS SHORTER ITEMS.

The Echo Amusement and Building Company have purchased seventy-five feet of ground adjoining their theater at the corner of Lillian and East Arlington avenues, which will be used as an airdome during the coming summer season. A bill of moving pictures and vaudeville will be maintained.

G. A. Hay, manager of the Merry Widow theater, 1457 Chouteau avenue, has raised the price of admission from five to ten cents on Friday night by giving a large feature on that night. Ten cents has been the regular Sunday admission for some time.

Paul Steffen, manager of the Mackland theater, at 5414 Arsenal street, has raised the price of admission to his theater to ten cents on Thursday, Friday and Sunday nights. Five reels are shown on ten-cent nights, and four reels on other nights.

The Lafayette theater, at Lafayette and Jefferson avenues, which has maintained a program of pictures, dramatic stock, vaudeville, and musical comedy, with pictures in the minority, has replaced spoken performances on four nights a week with large moving picture features. Manager Warner says he will gradually work the house into an all-picture program. The Lafayette is one of the better class neighborhood theaters, and opened up as an all-picture house more than five years ago.

Charles F. Monnette, who recently assumed proprietorship of the Hickory theater, Hickory street and Jefferson avenue, has just completed alterations of his theater, which have added much to the appearance of the place and increased the capacity of the house by one hundred.

Will Enforce Fire Rules

Building Commissioner Rendigs, of Cincinnati, Is Strenuously Enforcing Code Against Such Theaters as Take Fire Risks—Says Few Exhibitors Are Lax, But That There Must Be None—No Permits Are Being Given for Shows in Hotels and Schools.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE stringency of the regulations which will be enforced in Cincinnati by Building Commissioner Rendigs, with reference to the elimination, as far as possible, of the fire risk in connection wtih moving pictures, has been illustrated recently in at least two different ways. In one case, a few days ago, the commissioner ordered the condemnation of a projecting machine in a Fifth street house. He was on a tour of the downtown houses for the purpose of ascertaining whether the regulations of his department were being complied with, and found this particular machine, which he stated was in such a dilapidated condition that it was held together only by strings. This is the first time that such action as the condemnation of a machine has been taken, but the commissioner declares that he is going to make it warm for such exhibitors as see fit to take chances with fire. There are very few in this class, but he is determined that there shall be none. On the other hand, exhibitors and the public alike are to be protected by the withholding of permission for the holding of moving picture exhibitions in places never intended for that purpose. This was demonstrated when the Hotel Sinton, one of the largest and finest hotels in the city, made application to the city authorities for permission to hold a moving-picture exhibition in connection with some gathering there. The hotel was notified, as were all others in the city, that no such exhibitions may be held unless the regulation fireproof booth for the projecting machine is provided, or non-combustible films are used. The Board of Education, which has charge of the schools, was also notified that a similar rule must be enforced as to the schools. Exhibitions have been held on a number of occasions, both in the hotels and in the schools, in which neither of these precautions against fire has been observed, and it is only by the merest good fortune that a disastrous blaze has not occurred in consequence.

FILMS FOR SUMMER SHOWS.

Plans are already crystallizing for the usual summer campaign of moving pictures in the downtown theaters, which was so successful last year. The Grand opera house, the city's leading theater, has been leased for the summer season, it is announced, by Charles Weigel, owner of the Alhambra and president of the Exhibitors' and Managers' Association of Cincinnati, and L. W. Foster, of the Arcade theater. The house will be opened for pictures at the close of the regular season, which will be some time in May. As a matter of course, nothing in the way of improvements will be required, except that a handsome orchestrion will be installed to take care of the musical end of the program. As last year, only high-class features will be shown, at ten cents all over the house; and as the Grand is known to be as comfortable during the hot weather as any house in the city, Messrs. Weigel and Foster are virtually certain of a prosperous season. Paul Hillman, treasurer of the Lyric theater, Cincinnati's other first-class legitimate house, is planning for a summer season of moving pictures, as he has control of the house for the warm months, although the date of the opening has not yet been determined. The Walnut will doubtless show pictures during the summer, as well, but it is understood that it will not join the other Anderson & Ziegler houses as a permanent photoplay house. With these three, besides the Strand, the Lubin, the Alhambra, the Colonial, the Family and the smaller downtown houses, and the numerous suburban houses, such as the ever-popular Orpheum, the Nordland Plaza, and others of that class, Cincinnati will certainly be well provided with moving pictures during the summer.

EVANGELIST FILMED UNAWARE.

That the enterprise of the moving picture photographer in search of live material frequently, like that of his colleague the newspaper photographer, takes no account of personal prejudices as to being snapped, is shown by the fact that there were recently exhibited in Youngstown, O., moving pictures of the celebrated Billy Sunday's evangelistic party, seemingly posed very accommodatingly. A personal inquiry addressed to the evangelist by a curious Youngstown man, however, elicited the reply—through the former baseball player's secretary—that Mr. Sunday "has steadfastly refused to allow moving pictures to be taken of his work," and that any photographs taken of his assistants, either in the tabernacle at Philadelphia or elsewhere, must have been taken "positively without Mr. Sunday's knowledge and against his strict orders not to allow it."

CINCINNATI SHORTER ITEMS.

Benjamin W. Strader has purchased the house known as Mars and the Airdome, on Montgomery road, near Hewitt avenue, acquiring title to the equipment, under a lease arrangement which gives him an option to purchase the realty as well later on. The property belonged to Charles Marqua, who is credited with having erected the first airdome in Cincinnati.

The publicity campaign arranged by the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce for the purpose of informing the people of the cit yof the points of strength and interest about their own community is now under full way, as far as the moving picture houses are concerned. The Chamber announces that nearly thirty houses are showing slides daily, which are designed to hammer in the facts about Cincinnati for the information of Cincinnati people, and more are being added steadily.

The Strand theater, of Dayton, after a period of redecoration incidental to its change to a moving-picture house, opened its doors to the public recently, with "Satan Sanderson" and "Love Everlasting" as its initial offering, showing the kind of stuff it intends to offer to its patrons. It has a new lighting system, flowers and palms throughout, bright and tasteful decorations, and a handsome permanent stage setting, representing an old-fashioned garden.

The management of the Columbia, at Portsmouth, which recently regaled its patrons with "Tillie's Punctured Romance," showed its good sense and its courage by raising its prices to 20 cents for adults and 10 cents for children for the evening performances.

FEATURES IN ILLINOIS CHURCH.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

AFTER conducting a picture show of short releases since last fall the Central Presbyterian church at Rock Island will experiment with feature films. The first of the more pretentious subjects was, "When Rome Ruled." A fee of ten cents was charged for the Saturday night show and five cents for the children at the Saturday matinee. Programs in the past included an educational, a comedy and generally a Pathe weekly. Children who had been on time at Sunday school the previous Sunday had free tickets; if they had been tardy they paid five cents.

The editor of the Rock Island Union believes the work has been successful. "The main thing is that the pictures have done what it was expected they would do—give the children of the church an opportunity to see good pictures under moral conditions and in good surroundings," he says. "It has assisted the parents in keeping their children from persistently seeking to go 'downtown' to the picture houses."

"TOMMY'S BIRTH CERTIFICATE."

"In furtherance of the effort to encourage the recording of births in the state," said Dr. St. Clair Drake of Springfield, secretary of the Illinois State Board of Health, in a special bulletin issued March 24, "the board is conducting an educational propaganda, an effective feature of which is the employment of moving pictures. To impress upon the public mind the importance and necessity of recording a child's birth, the secretary of the board has written and produced a motion picture story in which is set forth the embarrassments and misfortunes which may beset any individual whose birth has not been recorded.

"This film is now going the rounds of the counties of the state, and is being shown under the auspices of the respective local county medical societies in practically every town having a motion picture theater.

"The title of this film story is, "Tommy's Birth Certificate," or "Why Births Should Be Recorded."

SNAPSHOTS AT PROGRAMS.

Illinois managers are keeping the programs from "going to seed" in various ways. The Family at Dixon did it with local scenes. Home talent put on a "School Days" act at the Lyric in Belleville. The Drexel at Joliet admitted free teachers, who brought classes to the special matinee of the Williamson submarine pictures. Grand Army men of Monmouth filled the Princess many times at their benefit. Poultry fanciers in Carbondale have an ambition to make that city the poultry center of Southern Illinois and half a night's receipts at the Amuse-U made the plan nearer realization. Free tickets to members and prospective Wood men were furnished for the lodge film at the Grand in Aledo. The Orpheum at Quincy had an Eagles' benefit. The Yale at Carbondale showed slides of the local Shriners' parade. Chris Taylor of Dreamland at Kewanee has been making arrangements for a 1,000-foot film of Kewanee at its best. Nearly everybody has heard of the proprietor of the small clothing store, who was distracted by the big sale banners of his larger competitors on either side until he put a sign over his own door, "Main Entrance." The Princess at Springfield followed a similar idea. A local paper arranges its theater ads in stair-steps style. The Princess simply capped each step with its own announcement—each a zinc etching of the ad man's handwriting. The Vaudette at Sterling gave 500 packages of popcorn confection to the first 500 children at its Saturday matinee. The "Snapshots-of-you" idea worked wonders for the Lyric at Rock Falls. A few minutes before fire department's benefit at the Lyric in Gibson City the apparatus was taken for an exhibition run. Edison's "The Lesson of the Flames" was featured. The Lyric even paid the expenses. An Evanston store gave a ticket to the Star with every fifty cent purchase for a week. The Fox at Aurora offered $30 in money and 150 tickets to the persons who could tag a mysterious man and say properly, "You are the Raffles of the Movies. I want the order for the money."

The Washington at Belleville advertised: "Our shows are always clean. That is why men, women and children are always admitted to every performance. Burr Swan dug up his Pittsfield fall celebration pictures and along with some films of the estate of Frank A. Vanderlip (the financier) showed them one afternoon at the K. of P. opera house in Pittsfield without charging. Mr. Vanderlip came from that section of the country. The K. theater at Clinton co-operated with a florist and gave floral favors and potted plants at matinees. The Majestic in Rock Island had a "Mary Pickford Week," using "Hearts Adrift," "Caprice" and "Cinderella." The Opera House at Batavia is paving the way for a home-made romance with a voting contest to select a hero and heroine. Dreamland at Galena announced its "spring opening" with the newest styles in Paramount pictures. Tuesday night has been set aside by Dreamland at Ipava for redeeming coupons issued by eleven local merchants.

CLUB WOMEN AND PICTURES.

More Illinois club women are following the constructive policy in solving the moving picture problem. A committee from the Women's Clubs of Evanston selected the following program for a Saturday show at the Main street theater; Biograph's "The Cricket on the Hearth," Pathe's "Rope Making," etc., Selig's "Jimmy Hays and Muriel," and Essanay's "The Fable of the Syndicate Lover." Mrs. Medill McCormick, the author, will present the film "Your Girl and Mine" to the meeting of the Twentieth District of Federation of Woman's Clubs at Pittsfield, May 11. The Ladies' Social Union of Hale Memorial M. E. church had charge of the picture show at the Apollo in Peoria for a week, adding musical numbers. The Euterpean Club at Carthage presented "The Christian" at the opera house and plans other shows. Manager Burnstine of the Star booked "Martha of the Lowlands" at the request of the Woman's Club of that city.

ILLINOIS SHORTER ITEMS.

In order not to curtail the attendance at prayer meetings the picture show at Warren will not operate on Monday and Thursday nights.

Superintendent of Schools Gayler at Canton complained to the police that the operator of an air-calliope, advertising a white-slave film at a Canton theater, stopped in front of the high school and gave a ragtime recital that stopped study.

Operators and musicians in all the moving picture houses in Morgan county, including Jacksonville, are reported to have been organized by John Caldwell of Springfield.

Rev. F. B. Dickman of Rutland is operating a picture show. He uses Universal service on Tuesdays, Mutual on Saturdays and on special occasions gives Famous Player features.

As a feature of the St. Patrick's Day bill at the Yale in Carbondale, "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary" was sung by Max Laudermilk in Irish costume, the management averring that the rendition by a German could not be considered a breach of neutrality.

B. F. Howard of Chicago is now manager of the Rich theater at Fifth avenue and Lake street in Maywood.

The Star brought "Neptune's Daughter" back to Lincoln.

Boy Scouts of the Christian church in Lincoln showed the film "Faust and Marguerite" at the church.

Arthur Bruer, operator at the Crystal Stairs theater in Joliet until it burned and connected wtih Joliet picture houses for the last five or six years, has bought the Ruby theater at 303 Ruby street in that city. The show will operate Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday nights and Sunday matinees. Bruer plans to remodel the interior.

The old Main Street theater in Edwardsville has been opened as the Gem. Many changes were made in the interior and equipment.

Measles in profusion led the board of health at Petersburg to close the picture shows.

The Duchess Theater Company of Peoria has been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000 to do a theater and amusement business. The incorporators are H. B. Francis, H. J. Weisbruch and George K. Beasley.

A Marked Contrast

Nebraska Furnishes Example of Best and Worst in Picture Houses—Film Shows Disgraced by Vulgar Vaudeville Are Fortunately Growing Scarce—Modern Trend Is Shown by Such Houses as the Empress at Tremont—They Are Among a City's Best Assets.

By Frank H. Madison, Nebraska Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CERTAIN moving picture houses in Omaha—using vaudeville—are hit in a report submitted to the city commission by members of the Ministerial union. The report of the investigators included with its list of disorderly saloons and immoral resorts the following:

"Feb. 27, 1915. Visited the Palm picture show. Witnessed vulgar vaudeville.

"Feb. 27, 1915. Visited the Elite picture show. Witnessed vulgar vaudeville.

"March 13, 1915. Visited Elite picture show. Saw vulgar vaudeville."

The report states: "There is furthermore an urgent need and a manifest desire for the proper supervision of places of amusement. It is intolerable that there should be places attended by the youth of both sexes where the admission fee is the lowest in price, which are schools of vulgarity and obscenity and most vitiating upon the public morals."

In contrast to this picture is an account that comes from Tremont of the opening of a real picture house. A civic ceremony surrounded the initial performance at the new $40,000 Empress at Tremont. The first 1,000 persons to get into the distinctive photoplay house heard Mayor Herre and George Wolz of the Commercial Club tell what such a theater, conducted with the well-known Johnson policy, meant to the community. These encouraging addresses were followed by an act significant of the broadminded spirit that governs the Fremont photoplay field—the presentation of a large floral horseshoe from Wall Brothers of the Wall theater and a greeting from Manager Glenn of the Lyric. Attorney George Loomis, responding for Nels Johnson, builder of the house, reaffirmed the intention to operate only a high-class theater. Emil Johnson will be manager and Ben Johnson assistant manager. Not a single thing is lacking in equipment and the decorations are an achievement in artistic simplicity. Paramount pictures will be shown at ten cents, with 150 seats reserved daily at 20 cents.

"NEBRASKA IN MOTION."

Dr. G. E. Gondra's Nebraska Educational Film Part of "University Week."

Moving pictures are among the attractions of the state's traveling "University Week"—a veritable three-ring educational circus. Ninety entertainers from the state school at Lincoln visited three towns—Seward, David City and Osceola—spring vacation week. They had a band of twenty-five pieces, gave a drama, "The Man from Home," vaudeville specialties, glee club numbers, a slide-illustrated lecture on "The School as a Social Center," and Dr. George E. Condra of the State Conservation Commission showed his films, "Nebraska in Motion."

Dr. Condra's picture-taking is to play a big part in the development of the state. S. Arion Lewis recently gave a free lecture at the Temple theater in Lincoln on "Back to the Land," which was illustrated by Dr. Condra's films. The state board of agriculture is behind this work. The latest achievement of the doctor is to secure films of the Nebraska house of representatives and senate at work. They were first shown at the banquet of the Nebraska Legislative League in Lincoln.

IF FOUND HE'LL BE BARRED.

Three hundred and seventy-four inmates of the state penitentiary at Lincoln are looking for one man who abused a privilege and spit tobacco juice on the floor at the first picture show given inside the prison walls. If found he will be barred from future shows. It was the first time in the history of the institution all of the men were out of their cells after "locking up time." The management is satisfied the innovation is to prove valuable.

ASK VOTE ON SUNDAY SHOWS.

Petitions asking for a referendum vote on the question of Sunday shows are being circulated in Lincoln. Signatures of fifteen per cent. of the voters at the last election are required to get the proposition on the ballot.

NEBRASKA BRIEFS.

Electric light companies are doing general publicity work for moving picture houses. An Omaha utility company advertises with a picture of a photoplay theater: "Trade Travels Toward the Light."

Manager Tausig of the American at Omaha entertained more than a thousand youngsters, members of boys and girls' clubs, at a special show of "The Fairy and the Waif." Chief Probation Officer Miller, who organized the party, was invited to bring them again. The film was pronounced the most wholesome for children he had seen by Police Superintendent Kugel, assigned to guard duty over his own youngsters. The probation officer sponsored another party of the members of the Park Forest Boys' Club and the George Washington Boys' Club at the Elite No. 2 theater, where Manager Harry Cowderoy was a gracious host.

A moving picture show has been opened in the Farmers' Exchange building at Homer.

The Oliver theater at Lincoln, being short of theatrical attractions and not ready for stock, booked four of the George Kleine attractions to fill in two weeks. "Du Barry" and "Stop Thief" were the first.

William Nelson and Chris Christensen have bought a moving picture show at Minden.

The opera house at Broken Bow, owned by Joseph Moore of Anselmo, was destroyed by fire.

The Isis theater and a number of merchants at Kearney are conducting a voting contest to give a Shetland pony to some child. A series of free Thursday afternoon shows at the Isis is a phase of the stunt.

The Majestic at Fairbury has installed a new pipe organ.

F. J. Ely has sold the Cozy theater at Seward to George Adams of Omaha.

The American at Omaha, under the management of Robert Tausig, is reserving seats for photoplay shows. A novelty at the opening of this house was a film showing a jumbled assortment of letters which finally danced into alignment and spelled "American theater."

J. P. Theis of Ogalalla bought the Joy theater at Florence.

F. W. Corkrell of O'Neill has purchased a moving picture theater in Omaha.

Ingles & Ingles have purchased the Palm theater at Cozad from Harry Dennis.

Elmer Straight has purchased the Peoples' theater at Anselmo.

Scarlet fever cases forced the closing of theaters at Ainsworth.

H. A. Chappell, who has been associated with J. Oliver Timpe at the Empress, has gone on the road with a travelog.

Airdomes in Washington

Picture Parks in National Capital Are Getting Their Spring Coat of Paint—Numerous Changes in Fire, Electrical and Sanitary Regulations—A Hint to Exhibitors Who Contemplate Running the Popular Open Air Shows This Summer.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ALTHOUGH the weather during the past week or ten days has been far from pleasant, exhibitors possessing airdomes have placed contracts for the necessary renovations and already there is the smell of green paint in the air. A more thoughtful exhibitor has called the attention of the World correspondent to the fact that there have been numerous changes in the fire, electrical and sanitary regulations with which it might be well for those who are well acquainted with them to look into the matter before commencing the season. The placing of toilets and drinking facilities in the parks should be looked to and then there is the matter of the war tax. It would prove quite disconcerting if some of the exhibitors found, after the season was well on the way, that they must discontinue their exhibitions while water and sewage pipes are being laid, or because they had failed to comply with what might perhaps appear to be a trivial violation of some of the almost unheard of regulations. Time so lost is hard to make up, to say nothing of the difficulty in again getting the patrons accustomed to visit the airdome.

Airdomitis is a disease that is very prevalent in Washington just at this time, and it is expected that far greater numbers will get into this part of the business during the coming season than ever before. Those who have had previous experience will be very careful in selecting a site and there will be a number of parks that were closed a greater part of last season that will remain unopened. The "To Let" sign has been hanging in front of the large park on Ninth street, known as Central Park, and nothing is heard of its being opened this year. Within the next fortnight, weather conditions permitting, the Apollo Park, Washington Park, and the Maycroft, will be opened.

PATHE WEEKLY BY MAIL.

The Pathe Company seems to have solved another of the transportation difficulties for Manager Herbert Osborn, of the local exchange of that company, reports the receipt of a shipment of films by mail. This will be particularly advantageous in getting in the Pathe News Weekly from the factory. It seems that the Weekly is now being printed on non-inflammable stock and that in the near future the entire output of this concern will be so printed. All such films are admitted to the United States mails and the Pathe Company seems to be the first to enter the film business on a "Safety First" basis. Mr. Osborn states that he will now be able to serve exhibitors located on branch lines of the railroads with greater facility, as usually there are more mails to such places than there are expresses. Considerable complaint has been heard of late from a number of the exchanges with respect to late deliveries in towns in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North and South Carolina, all of which states are included in this territory.

These films are kept soft by the use of eucalyptus oil, a quantity of waste being so saturated and placed in the humidor. Breaks and damaged parts are repaired with the use of a special kind of cement which is handled by all of the Pathe exchanges, and which is procurable at the same price as other kinds.

VICTOR ABBEY WITH MUTUAL.

Victor L. Abbey, who for some time has been in charge of the bookkeeping department of the local branch of the United Film Service Company, has severed his connection with that concern and has associated himself with the special department of the Mutual Film Company, with a view to handling the new Mutual screen novel, "Diamond in the Sky." Inasmuch as the plot of this novel is laid in Virginia, Mr. Abbey looks for great successes in that state. He will also cover the District of Columbia, Maryland and West Virginia. Mr. Abbey was connected with the New York and Boston offices of Warner's Features, Inc., for several years.

SINGING PICTURES.

Treble-Cleft Musical Movies are said to have made a big hit at Moore's Strand theater last week, and to such an extent that they have been transferred to the Garden. The World correspondent witnessed the exhibition of reels to which "Chinatown, My Chinatown," was sung by Harry Chick. Just prior to the showing of this picture the drop curtain was used and when it was again raised the singer was in the costume of a coolie and lying on a bunk in true Chinese fashion. The pictures and song were well presented and Mr. Chick received considerable applause. These musical pictures are being taken up by a large number of theaters in this territory, and this is reviving the demand for good singers. It is a novelty appreciated by the people. The phonograph arrangement seems to have died out as it is not in use in this city.

DELAYING FEATURE SERVICE.

Exchangemen taking features and other pictures out of their regular service for the purpose of exhibiting them for week-long runs at the legitimate theaters are liable to find themselves in ill repute with their exhibitor customers if this practice continues. There has been considerable talk along Ninth street of late concerning this subject, and the opinion has been expressed that the exchangemen would do well to stick closer to their own end of the game. There are other practices, it is said, in connection with the handling of features that are also objectionable. This subject will be fully aired at a future meeting of the league and protest will be made to the proper authorities.

CUTS COUNTRY STORE SHOWS.

There will be no "Country Stores" at the Apollo this year, according to the statement of Harry P. Moorehead, the new manager, who declares himself to be not in favor of any such schemes as this to draw patronage. Mr. Moorehead is strong for ten-cent shows every day in the week, without any rebates to the patrons. This house is running two ten-cent nights and sometimes three, every week, but is giving its patrons' moneys worth.

PEOPLE LIKE HIGHER PRICE.

Talking of the ten-cent proposition, the Hippodrome recently raised its admission to that price and since that time has enjoyed a better business, not only from the point of additional income, but as Mr. LaMotte sees it, the people believe that the ten-cent shows more nearly approximate the vaudeville houses as to character, and his attendance has greatly increased. In charging ten cents he has been able to give a better class of pictures and this is greatly appreciated.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

W. T. Craal, who was a visitor here last week, reports business to be improving in Petersburg and Newport News, Va., but that conditions in Norfolk are not so satisfactory.

It is reported that H. L. Rockhill, who operates the Victoria theater in Roanoke, Va., is about to open a house in Lynchburg, Va.

The fixtures and equipment of the Niagara theater, 719 Ninth street, Northwest, were recently sold at public auction and as a result the house is again dark.

B. Russo is now operating the Lyric theater, in Petersburg, Va., showing vaudeville in addition to moving pictures.

The Regent theater in Richmond, Va., has been reopened. T. R. Thomas is managing the house.

IOWA NEWS LETTER.

The nameless photoplay, with the alluring offer of $50 for a title, was a good opening attraction for the new Palace theater at Burlington.

The Knights of Pythias at Grundy Center sponsored the production of "Damon and Pythias" at the New Gem theater.

The Times-Tribune of Waterloo sent its local film, "The Million Dollar Touchdown" to the Crystal theater at Boscobel, Wis. Miss Fern Way, the heroine of the Waterloo film, once resided in Boscobel.

Ted Lane, who has taken over the Drake avenue theater in Centerville, will play big features at ten cents. However, he opened the house with "The Christian" at ten and twenty cents.

Will Stewart has purchased from Manager Reaser the Magic theater in Algona.

Ernest Krabbenhoft has sold the Lyric theater at Preston to L. A. and W. J. Whaley of Butte, Mont.

N. Samish of Des Moines, who purchased the Comet theater in Creston, reopened it as the Willard, playing such features as "Her Triumph," "The Goose Girl," "Young Romance," "Mrs. Black is Back," "Where the Trail Divides," "Marta of the Lowlands," "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch" and "Buckshot John." He plans a new front and general remodeling.

Bert Porter of Montezuma has purchased a picture show in Cedar Falls. Garry and Al Thorpe, Jr., who purchased the Lyric at Manchester, will use some vaudeville, it is announced.

The Family theater in Davenport will not take the regular output of any exchange hereafter, but announces that it will book its features from the open market.

The Beardsley theater at Red Oak had a free fashion show film matinee for ladies.

Patrons at the opening of J. A. Nelson's new Grand theater on Commercial street in Waterloo were presented with boxes of candy. Mutual service will be used.

W. L. Hester has sold his show at Ida Grove to Edward Meents.

Fred Matthiessen has rented the opera house at Hopkinton.

George Habenicht of Fort Dodge has sold the opera house block in Rolfe to Day & Waples of Castana.

Benjamin Kinseth sold the Scenic theater at Bode to Kinseth & Ries.

Lou King has sold the Riverside theater at Cascade to John Lambert.

Varal Anderson of Jefferson, who is connected with the Pathe Company at Omaha, Neb., will move to Lincoln, Neb., and make that city his headquarters.

The Beh opera house at Lake Park, has installed an engine to furnish power for its picture show.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Keith of Worthington, Minn., who purchased the Colonial at Marshalltown, from D. Hoes, gave cigar and carnation souvenirs at their re-opening.

The advance ticket sale for "Damon and Pythias," at the Englert, outstripped that of any show ever given in Iowa City.

C. S. Schne of Sigourney, who bought the Grand theater at Lamoni, closed it for about two weeks for remodeling.

D. B. Harrington of Morningside, has sold his moving picture show at Peters Park to Fred Phipps.

The Lyric, at Preston, gave a free Saturday matinee to all the children of the country and city schools. The Lyric is now operating on Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday nights. Despite a limited schedule, it uses such features as "Home, Sweet Home." It has been running serials "Perils of Pauline" and "The Million Dollar Mystery."

Isis patrons, at Cedar Rapids, wanted "The Goose Girl" back.

ITEMS FROM SOUTHWEST.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

THE local option plan for settling the question of Sunday theaters will not prevail in Texas. The Parks Amusement bill which proposed to give this power to cities was killed in the lower house of the state legislature.

W. F. Sonneman has opened "The Nickel," a new moving picture house at 405 Austin street in Waco, Tex., using General Film company service.

Manager Hoyt Kirkpatrick of the Princess theater at Fort Smith, Ark., has taken over the Empress. The Princess show has been moved to the Empress, which is now known as the Princess, playing high-class pictures.

The Broadway Star feature, "The Tangle," made at Galveston with the aid of United States soldiers was almost as good an attraction as a local film at the Rex in Greenville, Tex.

The "safety first" films of the Santa Fe railroad were shown at the high school auditorium in Albuquerque, N. M.

S. S. Sternberg and L. Rosenthal purchased the Gem theater at Blytheville, Okla., at administrator's sale.

The Metro Picture Corporation of Texas with headquarters at Dallas has been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are D. B. Reed, Albert Russell and N. I. Lindsley.

ANOTHER SOUTHLAND STUDIO.

Special to Moving Picture World from Trades Press, New Orleans.

IT is reported that D. W. McKinney, of Chicago, and Captain L. A. Boening, general manager for the United States Cinematograph Company, conferred with the Commercial Club, of Biloxi, Miss., last week, with reference to a moving picture producing plant which it is proposed to establish near Biloxi. Messrs. McKinney and Boening are the active organizers of the company, and they are being given every assistance by the Biloxi commercial body. They have secured the old Popp estate on the Tchouticabouffa river for the location of the proposed studio. They express themselves as very well pleased with the place and the surrounding country from a moving picture standpoint and will, it is stated, rush the matter into shape and get the plant going without delay.

PATHE OFFICE TRANSFERS.

B. S. Bryan, formerly of the Atlanta office of Pathe, has succeeded J. A. Nicoll as manager of Pathe's New Orleans exchange, Mr. Nicoll being transferred East. George R. Allison, Southern manager for Pathe, was in New Orleans for a few days last week seeing to the establishment of his new manager, B. S. Bryan, at the New Orleans branch. He is enthusiastic over the general outlook and says that everything is rosy. His headquarters are in Atlanta.

MUTUAL OFFICE CHANGES.

Edward Auger, formerly of the New York office of the Mutual, has succeeded A. L. Smith as New Orleans manager of the Mutual, Mr. Smith being transferred to Dallas, where he has many friends, having been with the Consolidated in that city previous to his assignment to the New Orleans managership. Mr. Augur has been in the film game for a number of years, was at one time manager of branches for Pathe, and brings a thorough knowledge of the business to his new post.

GULF STATES BRIEFS.

The Dixie theater, Jackson, Miss., is now being operated under the management of Earl C. Childs. Mr. Childs, together with S. P. Kimball, formerly controlled the house jointly and the settlement was a bit stormy. The weapons used were all entirely legal, writs of replevin, and such things, so no one was hurt. The outcome was in doubt for some hours, but Mr. Childs is a lawyer, and New Orleans exchange managers were receiving bulletins from the front right along, just like a regular battle. Their neutral rights were in doubt for a time but the final settlement is said to have been satisfactory to all concerned.

Franklinton, La., is to have a new and up-to-date theater, according to recent announcement by W. L. Burris, who will add the picture exhibition business to his other activities. Mr. Burris is cashier of the Bank of Franklinton.

A new airdome is being erected at Iberville and Galvez streets, New Orleans, by A. J. Smith, a well known baker.

The Regina theater, Esplanade avenue and Robertson street, New Orleans, is being remodelled and put into first-class shape for its announced Easter opening.

The Galety theater, Ursuline and Royal streets, New Orleans, has reopened with a high class program; business is reported big from the start.

The Prytania theater, Prytania and Leontine streets, New Orleans, recently signed for the Paramount Program, adding this to the already high class bill. M. H. Jacobs and G. R. Landry, the proprietors, are enthusiastic over the general outlook. The house is new, having been opened for only a few months, and is paying well, one of the best suburban houses in the city. The fact that the purchasers of the property on which the house stands intended to build a picture house there, in this excellent residential neighborhood, was not advertised, some objection being anticipated. It was rushed through very neatly and now no one hears any protest against the presence of the house; on the other hand, the manner in which it is conducted, and the character of pictures shown have brought it to be considered a real addition to the neighborhood, and the proprietors, though modest, are proud of this achievement.

Pass Christian, Miss., the "Southern Newport," the chief resort of the stretch of Gulf coast that is coming to be known as the American Riviera, distinguished recently as the summer residence of President Wilson, and at present honored by the sojourn of Champ Clark, was filmed last week for the Mississippi exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition. The entire beach drive, one of the most beautiful in the world, was included.

Fichtenberg's "Picto," one of the enterprising Canal street houses, will, it is learned, be remodeled and brought up to the last minute of picture house modernity, work to begin at an early date. This comes on top of the recent announcement of the Pearce interests, noted in the World, that they would build a superpicture house in Canal street. It is also stated that the Pearce interests have acquired a lease, effective some months from this date, on one of the older Canal street houses, with a view to remodelling it into a house of the first class.

The Audubon theater, Vic Perez house, has instituted the "open all night" policy. It is reported to be proving highly profitable. The Plaza (Fichtenberg), was the first to put this policy into effect in New Orleans. The Audubon is a little further out, nearer "all night town," and is prospering in its small hours' business accordingly.

The Acme Film Co., producing advertising pictures, recently completed a film showing the home life of the Louisiana oyster. The picture was made in co-operation with the R. J. Younger Co., exploiters of the charms of these native Louisianians, and will be shown by the Younger Company far and wide over the nation with a view to further convincing all and sundry of the loveliness of the Louisiana branch of the oyster family.

The pictures are most intimate, showing the subjects just being taken out of their beds and in various states of undress, even to the nude. No opposition to the showing of these pictures in Louisiana is anticipated, the state being perhaps a little careless about the proprieties, but some fear is expressed lest in more careful sections it will be insisted that the oysters appear in at least a half shell.

Pearce is doing considerable advertising in Lake Charles, the advertising and reading matter in the dailies going somewhere around three columns as a rule. The Arcade is showing big features; "The Christian," in eight reels, was a recent and successful offering. The high class—high price—policy is likely to be continued as a regular thing at the Arcade. The Dreamland and the Iris, Pearce's other two Lake Charles houses, report business good.

A complete change of policy for Fichtenberg's "Isis," Houston, has been announced, effective immediately, and Harry Van de Marc, well known in the legitimate theatrical world, will be the new manager, succeeding Barney Mulligan, who has been transferred to the management of the Picto and Dreamworld, two of Fichtenberg's New Orleans houses. W. H. Gueringer, general manager for the Fichtenberg enterprises, makes the announcement, and states that he has closed with the Metro, Universal and William Fox companies for big features to be shown at the big prices, the house being converted into an all feature, and big price house. "The Heart of Maryland," featuring Mrs. Leslie Carter, will open the new policy.

Messrs. O. K. Bourgeois and Maurice Barr, traveling representatives of the World Film Corporation out of New Orleans, were erroneously noted in the World of March 27 as representing the United out of New Orleans. J. J. Fabacher is the representative that is covering the territory for the United.

Studio in Providence

Eastern Film Corporation to Open Its Picture Making Plant in Rhode Island Capital City About Middle of This Month—Substantial Brewery Buildings Have Been Bought—Indoor and Outdoor Stages—Who New Officers Are.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Eastern Film Corporation will open its new studio for the production of moving picture plays in Providence, R. I., about April 15. This company, which was incorporated in January, has been financed entirely by New England capital and is entirely independent of any New York or California interests.

The Company has taken over the buildings and a large tract of land, formerly held by the Park Brewing Company, on the southerly side of Roger Williams Park, about three miles distant from the centre of the city of Providence. The buildings are in the best of condition, having been erected in 1904 at a great expense. They were found to be exceptionally well fitted for adaptation to the uses of studios and laboratories. The work of reconstruction and remodelling has been under way for about three months.

The new concern will begin with well equipped indoor and outdoor stages, and with exceptionally large laboratory equipment. The location of the studio is ideal. It is surrounded by Roger Williams Park, one of the finest in the country. It is within easy reach of city, country and seashore resorts.

The officers of the corporation are Frederick S. Peck, president; Benjamin L. Cook, vice-president; Walter Young, treasurer, and Elwood F. Bostwick, director general. M. Joseph Shiels is in charge of the photographic work and George Hoffman has been appointed technical director.

President Peck is well known in the city of Providence through his extensive real estate and corporation holdings. Treasurer Young is associated in business with Mr. Peck and is equally well known. Vice-president Cook is the manager of the brokerage office of Hornblower & Weeks.

Director General Bostwick has been prominent in theatrical circles for a number of years. He has played with E. H. Sothern, and has been starred in Belasco productions. For the past six years, he has been affiliated with the Shubert enterprises as a producing manager.

Mr. Shiels, who comes from New York, is well known in the photographic world. He will have charge of all the camera work for this new producing company.

The work of George Hoffman as a technical director, needs no explanation. He was superintendent of construction of all the scenery used in the production of "Under Cover," a play which broke records in all parts of the country. He has also built the largest outdoor ever produced, which represented a street in Paris in the photoplay "The War of Wars."

PATHESCOPE FILM HEARING.

The House judiciary committee of the Rhode Island Legislature granted a public hearing on the bill proposing the exemption of non-combustible films from the regulations now prescribed for moving picture machines in which combustible films are used.

Claude L. Allen, counsel for the Pathescope Company of New England, appeared in favor of the bill. He said that in the case of the machine used by the firm he represented, the two elements of danger, namely, the arc light and the combustible film, had been removed by the substitution of a small electric bulb and a non-combustible film. He claimed that the machine is not sufficiently powerful for use in moving picture theaters. It is for use in schools and for educational purposes, he contended, and, because all the elements of danger have been removed, he did not believe that it should be subject to the restructions place upon buildings in which the regulation moving picture machine is used.

Mr. Allen showed one of the machines referred to in the bill, placing it on a table for the inspection of the members of the committee. He also read endorsements from bodies in other states. He claimed that out of 10,000 machines in use, there had never been an accident recorded. W. H. Cummings, of Providence, favored the bill. He thought that the boys and girls of the community would be benefitted by the use of the machine. The committee took the bill under advisement.

CAMBRIDGE'S NEW THEATERS.

Cambridge, Mass., the seat of Harvard University, will not be lacking in moving picture theaters by next fall, because at the present time four new playhouse enterprises are in progress. As announced in the last issue of the World, the recently chartered $7,000,000 corporation, The Olympia Theatres, Inc., will erect a $200,000 house, with a seating capacity of 2,500, in Central Square.

Work is already under way for a new house on Woodbridge street, North Cambridge. This project is owned by Max Keezer, a Cambridge clothier. A permit has been taken out for the proposed O'Leary's theater in Inman Square.

The fourth enterprise has not as yet been settled. It is planned, however, to erect a theater in Central Square, almost directly opposite the site where the new Olympia theater is to be located. The culmination of this plan depends entirely upon whether the prospective purchasers and the owners of the property can come to an agreement.

CHILDREN'S SHOWS POPULAR.

The children's moving picture shows, which are run in Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., under the auspices of the children's players department of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, are proving to be a great success. The experiment was started in December and at that time prices ranged from ten to twenty-five cents. The shows have been so well patronized and enjoyed so much by the children that the prices are now reduced to five, ten and fifteen cents.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

In a special message, which Governor David I. Walsh submitted to the Massachusetts Legislature in connection with a proposed university extension system, moving pictures of the educational sort were named as one of the features.

Samuel Auerbach, proprietor of the Owl theater, Lowell, Mass., visited Manager Samuel Bernfield, of the New England Pathe Exchange and reported that the Pathe serial, "The Exploits of Elaine," is making a tremendous hit with his patrons.

"The Passion Play" was the feature of the Holy Week bill, which was offered by Manager Al Somerbee, of the Bowdoin Square theater. Souvenirs were also presented to all patrons of the playhouse during the week. For many years this has been a springtime custom of Manager Somerbee.

The Pathe feature, "The Life of Our Saviour," was the attraction at Tremont temple, Boston, during Holy Week. The pictures were accompanied on the organ by E. Russell Sanborn. A program of sacred music was also rendered by the Lotus and Pilgrim quartets.

Manager Fred J. McAloon, of the Royal theater, Worcester, is one of the first showmen in his city to secure the new Mutual master pictures.

John Collerton has been appointed manager of the Mutual office at No. 179 Dwight street, Springfield, Mass. He succeeds V. P. Naulty, who has been in charge of the office since William V. Hart resigned to accept an offer from the General Film Company.

Lou Straffin, formerly manager of the Comique theater, New Bedford, Mass., has been added to the New England sales force of the United Film Service by Manager Fred B. Murphy. He has been assigned to the Rhode Island territory.

Frank Boschetti and S. Jenelli, proprietors of the Majestic theater at Haverhill, Mass., have purchased the Star theater at Lawrence, Mass., which was formerly owned by Frank Woods.

Carl Michelfelder has closed his Lyric theater, Fall River, Mass. He is remodelling and enlarging the Star theater in the same city and intends to offer vaudeville acts to his patrons.

The Mother's Club of Charlestown, has arranged with Manager Edward J. Farrell, of the General Film Company, for the use of his service at their moving picture exhibitions, which are given in the Charlestown High School.

Assistant General Manager Louis J. Reichert, of the General Film Company, was in Boston, last week, for the second time within a month. It is understood that he is negotiating for a new location of the company's New England office, and that plans for the proposed new structure are already in the hands of an architect.

New England exhibitors are making many inquiries of Manager Samuel Bernfield of the Pathe Exchange, regarding the new Balboa serial, "Who Pays," which is to be released through his office. The stories of this film are to be published in the Boston Traveller.

A letter of congratulation has been received by Manager Fred B. Murphy, of the United Film Service, from D. R. Mahaffey, of the Proctor, Vermont, Y. M. C. A., complimenting him on the quality of the educational reels released through his office.

DEMAND NEW ORDINANCE.

Flighty Citizen of Portland Gets Signatures on Petition for Theater Ruling.

By John P. Flannagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AN interesting public hearing on the petition asking for an ordinance governing theaters, was held in Portland city hall last week. The petition was signed by James McGrath and about 200 others, and calls for regulations providing seats for all persons paying admission to all theaters in Portland, prohibiting the use as a theater of the second floor of buildings occupied on the ground floor as a garage or as a place for storage for explosives or gasoline, and providing that all passageways in all theaters be kept clear of all people in order that theaters may be emptied in emergencies.

Mr McGrath, the only person appearing for the petition, stated that some conditions now existing in some local theaters are a menace to the public, especially referring to the danger in allowing a theater to operate in the same building with a garage or other places where explosives or gasoline is stored. He said that the petition has been taken up by the members of the Civic Club and that they are in favor of some such legislation as provided by the petition.

Managers Reeves, of the Strand theater, and Blumenberg, of the Portland theater, were present with their attorney, William A. Connellan, and the interests of Manager Greely, of Greely's theater, were taken care of by Ruggles S. Higgins. Manager Reeves stated that all precautions necessary for the safety and comfort of the public are observed at the Strand theater. The rear passage in the theater is 20 feet wide and but few people are allowed to stand here while the show is in progress. The theater has been inspected by the fire department six times during the year and is equipped with all necessary safety devices. Two officers and a fireman are on duty at all times and the theater can be emptied of more than 1,500 people in less than seven minutes through nine exits. All decorations are of asbestos and fireproof and the operating booth is of the latest and most approved pattern. There is a foot and a half of concrete between the theater and the garage below and it would be impossible for fire to be communicated to the theater from the garage.

Manager Blumenberg stated that the safety and the comfort of his patrons is the first consideration of the management of the New Portland theater. He said that all necessary precautions are observed and that it is customary to keep the overflow attendance in the lobby of the theater until a sufficient number of seats have been vacated to allow the seating of all. There has never been a complaint regarding his theater and that if any person does not care to wait for a seat his money is refunded.

R. S. Higgins asked a few pertinent questions relative to the petition as it might relate to the Greely theater, and made a brief statement as to the safety of the theater.

Howard Chandler addressed the committee briefly relative to the safety of the Strand theater on the second floor of the building which he occupied on the ground floor as a garage. Mr. Chandler explained that storage tanks of the latest types are used by the garage company and that all necessary precautions are taken.

THOMAS R. TIGHT DIES.

Currency, bank books and diamonds to the value of nearly $25,000, were found at St. Johnsbury, Vt., last week, on the clothing of Thomas R. Tight, 53, a former resident and moving picture theater manager of Maine, who is believed to have been located at Rumford Falls at one time, when his body was prepared for shipment to Boston for burial. It is understood that Tight was little known in St. Johnsbury, having come there about six months ago from Barton, and had been employed in a motion picture theater. He claimed to be a native of Charlestown, Mass., and a former resident of Maine.

Tight died in a room in the Merchant's Block, where he had lived alone since coming to this place. The search of his clothing revealed $4,300 in money, diamonds valued at $700, and bank books showing a balance of between $15,000 and $20,000. His divorced wife arrived in St. Johnsbury, Vt., from Boston. He had a brother, whose present whereabouts are unknown.

MAINE SHORTER ITEMS.

A bad fire occurred in the Pastime theater at Brunswick, on March 28, but fortunately not while a show was going on. Mr. Gould, the proprietor, estimates his loss at $10,000, with no insurance. One of the moving picture films burned was that of the "Master Key," valued at $1,000. Mr. Gould will probably not rebuild.

As usual, the Jefferson theater, at Portland, was dark during Holy Week. The theater was thoroughly cleaned and the stage mechanics were busy getting their productions and theater in readiness for the opening on April 5.

ELKHART'S OPEN SUNDAY.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THE Elkhart, Ind., theaters were all open the last Sunday in March following the victory of Clifford Cole in court. Cole opened his theater on Sunday and was promptly arrested on an affidavit filed by a pastor of one of the local churches. He asked for a trial by jury, and the jurors who acquitted him included two bankers, four grocers, two dry goods merchants, two public utility superintendents and a clerk in a sporting goods store.

Cole was backed by the other theater owners in town, and fought the case with the best legal talent obtainable. The argument made for Cole was that the kind of shows he gave, with a portion of the receipts going to charity, was not a violation of the spirit of the so-called Sunday law. The jurors took ten ballots before finally agreeing on an acquittal.

Ogden's Alhambra Opens

New Picture Theater in Utah Gives Formal Reception Performance on March 17 —Controlled by Same Company as the American at Salt Lake City—Seats 2,056 Persons and Cost $150,000 to Build—Its Program.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

THE new Alhambra theater in Ogden, Utah, which has been under construction many months, received a formal opening on the night of March 17. Practically every motion picture man of importance in the intermountain region, as well as critics and editors of the prominent newspapers were present to assist in the opening or as guests of the management.

The gorgeous house, which cost $150,000, exclusive of the site and rivals in magnificence the American theater in Salt Lake, is owned by Albert Scowcroft, H. A. Simms and Charles Ziemer, who, with associates, are the owners of the American. H. E. Skinner is manager of the Alhambra.

The new theater seats 2,056 persons and every chair was occupied on the opening night. Important features of construction and equipment of the new theater are the stage, which is large enough to handle the largest road shows; operating box concealed in the front of the balcony and a large Kimball pipe organ which cost $20,000.

The opening date of the house was generously given to the Ogden tabernacle choir, second in size only to the immense "Mormon" tabernacle choir of Salt Lake. The proceeds of the concert, after the theater's expenses were paid, went to swell the fund which will pay the way of the choir to the exposition at San Francisco. A large symphony orchestra under direction of Prof. J. J. McClellan, organist and director at the American in Salt Lake, accompanied the choir and soloists.

The World Film corporation's big production, "Salambo," was the opening film attraction at the Alhambra. This has been followed by feature productions of the Paramount and Fox corporations. The Alhambra, as well as its sister theaters, the American and Liberty in Salt Lake, was included in the deal recently completed with the Notable Feature Film company by which the Paramount pictures were transferred from the Broadway in Salt Lake and the Peery theater in Ogden to the three Scowcroft-Skinner-Ziemer houses.

A. J. DAVIS GOES TO SOUTH AMERICA.

A. J. Davis has severed connection with the Broadway theater in Salt Lake, of which he was manager for about one year after leaving the Rex, and has gone to New York. From New York, Mr. Davis will sail for South America, where he intends to spend several months looking over the field with an eye to establishing film exchanges for the distribution of productions of American companies. According to Mr. Davis, the South American republics, which patronized exclusively the European manufacturers, have been cut off from their base of supply since the opening of hostilities and there is room for enterprising Americans.

Dr. A. Gideon's motion picture travelogues on the European war are drawing large houses at the Salt Lake theater. At the Liberty, Roberson's travelogues, given under auspices of a local newspaper, are proving popular.

Bosworth's production, "Hypocrites," which broke all records last week in Ogden, is booked for the latter part of the week at the Liberty. "Salambo," the World Film corporation production, showed this week at the American to immense crowds and recalled somewhat the great impression made here by the showing of the "Cabiria" production last year at the Utah theater.

OVERCROWDING IN THEATERS.

Jacob H. Hilkene, city building inspector of Indianapolis, reported to the board of safety that the theaters of the city were violating the city building ordinance. Seats, it was stated, were being sold beyond the seating capacity, and the result was crowded exits and aisles.

Hilkene did not specify where these conditions were in existence, but has promised to furnish the chief of police with the names and addresses of the prosperity hit houses.

The building inspector also makes the statement that a number of houses are using vaudeville attractions, contrary to the license law. It is also charged that a number of the houses are not equipped with doors which readily unlock to pressure exerted from the inside.

Henry K. Burton, manager of the Lyric and Isis theaters, was quick to follow the announcement with a public statement to the effect that his houses were properly equipped. The Alhambra theater, also made a public statement of the same character.

PLEASES ARTISTIC SENSE.

Phil Brown, manager of the Lyceum, is claiming that he has added distinction to his show. A pretentious background has been arranged for the films, showing a Japanese exterior, elaborately executed and complete with apple buds and real shrubbery. When the pictures are to be shown, two black velvet curtains draw apart, the Japanese lanterns grow dim and dimmer, and the pictures are thrown on the screen to the music of the orchestra, which is completely hidden by the shrubbery.

The Lyceum, through the winter season, puts on popular priced melodrama. In addition to pictures, there will be singing and a little vaudeville, all for a dime. The pictures will be all first run and changed three times a week.

INDIANA BRIEF NOTES.

Walter Pritchard Eaton, lecturing in Indianapolis, said that the masses should be encouraged to turn from the picture shows to the drama. Being a deadhead, Walter does not appreciate that it is a long way from a jitney to two bucks. The picture men should worry about the encouragement.

The Isis, Indianapolis, is now putting on a daily change of program. Manager Burton said that the ability to say "always a new show," was the best advertising for his house that he could have.

Motion pictures portraying the life of the negro in the South are making a big hit in Indianapolis, where there is about 20,000 colored population in one neighborhood.

Jimmy Alcorn, proprietor of the Lyric theater, Greensburg, Ind., has bought out the holdings of Clyde Willard in Greensburg, and is now the moving picture magnate of the town. Willard owned the North and South Side theaters and the Airdome. Willard, who deserted the clothing business to take up the picture shows, has returned to his first love.

Lawrence Browning and Gilbert Scobee, Greencastle, have leased a vacant downtown corner and are erecting an open air theater.

DIFFICULTIES OF COLLECTING TAX ON EACH THEATER TICKET

City Government of Montreal Wondering How to Levy New Tax.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE City Council will decide what method the city is to adopt for the collection of the one-cent charity tax on all amusement tickets, following a visit paid recently by about fifty representatives of local theatrical interests to the legislation committee in the City Hall.

Several suggestions were put forward by delegates, but none on which many present seemed to agree. Some managers declared they were ready to adopt any workable method. When delegates had expressed their views, the chairman invited them to put their opinions in writing that the committee may be assisted in solving the problem and drafting a by-law.

H. W. Conover, of the Imperial theater, thought the city might sell tickets to each theater at $8 for 2,000, the two per cent. discount going to the theater for its trouble in the matter. The ticket inspector at the door of the theater might be sworn in the city's service, and he could cancel each ticket with a chopper so that none would be sold twice. There were many protests at this suggestion, and S. W. Jacobs, K. C., took up the debate. He voiced the objection of several theaters to becoming the city's tax collectors, and said that the theaters were not obliged legally to collect.

A. Casgrain, for His Majesty's, thought a special coupon might be attached to tickets and placed in a special box as the user passed into the show. Leon Yarmeau, K. C., favored selling tickets at central points in the city. A. C. Wright, manager of the Princess, thought stamps might be sold to the public, who would attach them to the theater tickets on entering amusement places. W. Northey, of the Montreal Jockey Club, thought that the tax might be collected on the strength of chartered accountants' statements regarding returns at the theaters, while J. Davidson, representing Windsor Hall, wanted it clearly understood that the law did not place on the amusement houses the onus of the producing tax.

In the meantime, a general meeting of exhibitors has been called for eleven o'clock on Tuesday evening, March 30, at the Strand. The charity tax will be discussed as well as other matters relating to the industry. We hope that it will result in a strong organization. It is badly needed.

MONTREAL BRIEF NOTES.

It is whispered in official circles that an army of exhibitors is being recruited to take Universal City by storm. Big, genial H. W. McCullun, booking manager of the local "U" office, is beseiged with constant inquiries about the reel city.

Moving pictures are to be enlisted as an aid to a big campaign for more recruits in the Canadian Overseas forces.

Recent features at local houses were: Paramount's "Buckshot John," New Grand; Biograph's "Colomba," Fairyland; World Film's "M'Liss," Trivoli; Universal's "The Five Pound Note," Mount Royal; Paramount's "After Five," London; Essanay's "The Champion," Imperial; World Film's "The Pet," Casino.

The friends of Harry Kaufman, of the Famous Players, will regret to hear that he has undergone an operation and will be indisposed for some time. We wish him a speedy recovery.

Glenn Kerr just got back from Ontario the other day, where he had been successfully booking "Runaway June." He claims it is a great success and that it is booked solid for some months to come.

Eddie English and D. McRae have gone down to St. Johns, N. B., to open offices for the World Film Corporation. Mr. English was former manager of the Tivoli, and Mr. McRae was till recently manager of the Casino.

Phil Kaufman, general manager for Eastern Canada of the Famous Players Film Service, was in town recently on business. He expressed himself as pleased with conditions.

"The Exploits of Elaine" were ushered into this city Easter Week by the local Pathe office and the serial should meet with success because of the extensive advertising campaign indulged in. A synopsis of each episode is published in the Saturday Herald-Telegraph. It has first run at the Strand.

Mr. Darwin, manager of the London, reports very good business. He is breaking all records with "The Black Box," and gets good results from two Paramount features a week.

Sam Bernstein, formerly with the United Film Service local office, is now connected with the Montreal branch of the Famous Players Film Service.

"The Spoilers" played for an entire week recently at the Midway. The first three shows saw packed houses, the doorman informing us that three thousand people paid admission to the theater, which seats one thousand.

SPOKANE EXHIBITOR MAKES A COMIC FILM.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER WILLIAM CUTTS of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Wash., operated by the Liberty Amusement Company, has entered the field of the producer, having taken advantage of the "Jitney Bus" epidemic and produced a slap stick type of comedy which he termed "Jitneyed." He portrayed this in the Liberty theater, with the result that it created more amusement than any of the big feature reels he had run in the house since opening it in January.

The picture depicts Louis M. Post, who was here at the time imitating Charles Chaplin—and a picture of his compared with a poster of Chaplin proved to be almost identical, it requiring an expert to distinguish the difference—taking the leading part, which includes falling over the back of a "Jitney" into a baby carriage.

It also portrays a Chinese laundryman, the part taken by Adelbert Bartlett, placing his basket of laundry on the front of an automobile and with the colored woman, the Chinese laundryman, a real local society girl, Miss Annabelle Moore, daughter of Judge Moore, and a couple of others in the, for the time being, designated "Jitney" the car starts for the city. Losing the baby carriage and Post also the laundry are features.

Part of the pictures are run backwards, which calls forth much laughter. This shows street cars, automobiles, pedestrians and beer wagons drawn by horses all going backwards in walking, running and crossing streets.

Mr. Cutts sent the film to the American theater, Butte, in which he is also interested, he being connected wtih the Montana Amusement Company, and reports received are that it is making a big hit. He intends to run local films occasionally of town topics and is running this week films of a $20,000 fire in the Empire Hotel and the Spokane Press office showing narrow escapes, the sinking of an ice boat, made for carrying mail in Alaska while on a trial run on the ice on Newman Lake, where it breaks through the ice, the operator, I. S. McGregor, escaping by jumping to stronger ice and leaving his boat and pictures of the Mose Oppenheimer funeral. Mr. Oppenheimer was interested in the local Marcus Loew theater and had been engaged in theatrical, insurance and other business here for years.

M. B. Martin, a local photographer, has also been making motion pictures recently and contemplates getting all events from this time on and selling the films when events are of sufficient interest to sell them outside of the city.

FLORIDA EXCHANGE AND PICTURE CO.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville Correspondent for the Moving Picture World.

THE Florida Theatrical Exchange and Motion Picture Producing Co., a newly organized concern, now has a suite in the St. James building here. The company is organized for the purpose of carrying on a general theatrical exchange business, and to conduct a school of motion picture acting, and to produce photoplays.

Mr. G. Harry Hamilton, general manager, a well known theatrical man, is the organizer of the company. Mr. Hamilton is recently from Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, California. He was the originator of the concession "Fair Japan," at the St. Louis exposition.

The force at present engaged includes Mr. Glen Lambert, who will serve as conductor and director. He was at one time with the Ellaner Company. Miss Georgia Heikens, who is a graduate of the conservatory of music at Atlanta, Ga., will have charge of the cabaret department. Miss Pearl Gaddis, who is well known to readers of "Photoplay" and "Motion Picture Magazine," as a representative and writer, will be in charge of the scenario department. Miss Maud Bellue will be in charge of the office. Mr. Victor Gordon will take the photographic end and the outside work will be in charge of him.

STUDIO NOTES.

Mr. Wilmuth Merkyl has arrived from New York City, to appear in a Kalem three-reel picture. Mr. Merkyl has appeared in Famous Players productions, one of which was "Gretna Greene," with Marguerite Clark. He has also appeared in Wm. Fox productions. Some of Mr. Merkyl's recent appearances on the speaking stage include, "Sari," "Adele," and this season, with Miss Hazel Dawn, in "The Debutante." Mr. Merkyl will be here about three weeks.

Mr. Guy Coombs is busy these days with Kalem Civil War scenes. Assisting him is Mr. Fred Haynes and others. Mr. Jere Austin, of Mr. Buel's dramatic company, was with Mr. Coombs, but he will now continue with the dramatic company.

Miss Fania Marinoff, who came down from New York City to work in a three-reel dramatic picture, under the direction of Mr. Kenean Buel, has finished in the picture, "The Secretary," in which she is featured. One of the big scenes, which depict a wreck at sea, and the subsequent happenings to her as one of the survivors, called for Miss Marinoff to swim the cold waters of the St. John's at night. She went through the ordeal successfully, but was a bit chilly after the scene was finished. She has returned to New York City.

Director Robert G. Vignola has finished the "Sixth Commandment," and is now finishing up "The Older Sister."

Director Arthur D. Hotaling, of the Lubin Company, has returned from Philadelphia with a comedy company, headed by the well known comedian of the speaking stage, Billy Reeves. Work began immediately after arrival of the company and some excellent comedies are forthcoming.

The Lubin dramatic company, under the direction of Mr. Geo. Terwilliger, which has been working in St. Augustine for the last few weeks, leaves for Philadelphia March 28th. Members of the company include Miss Ormi Hawley, Miss Hazel Hubbard, Mr. Earl Metcalf, Mr. Kemp Green, Mr. Herb. Fortier, Mr. Peter Volkman, and Mr. George Casper.

The company has finished a number of pictures, including "The Man of God," "The Greatest Thing in the World," "Destiny's Skein," "The Telegrapher's Peril," and "The Last Rebel."

Director J. Searle Dawley, of the Dryeda Features Company, is taking some scenes in St. Augustine. Mr. Al Clarendon is with the company.

The E. K. Lincoln Players were in St. Augustine for a few days, and have now gone further down the East coast to take other scenes.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent of Moving Picture World, 229 Oxford Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

DURING Holy Week the Majestic theater, Buffalo, dispensed with its usual program of dramatic or musical comedy productions and instead showed the Chicago Tribune's moving pictures of the European war. Good houses were the result. Manager Laughlin of the Majestic was the first to offer George Kleine's "Quo Vadis" to Buffalonians, nearly two years ago. His efforts in this line have always proved successful.

Harold Edel, general director of the Palace theater, Buffalo, has large billboards containing the sign, "Everybody Headed for the Palace." The sign is illuminated at night and is effective. The action of the Buffalo board of assessors in placing an assessment of more than $100,000 on the Palace property is being opposed by those interested in the site and building. A recent attraction at the Palace was Vivian Martin in "The Arrival of Perpetua." Mr. Edel, who also manages the Strand, recently showed there moving pictures of the Vanderbilt cup races at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Walter C. Moon, manager of the Happy Hour theater, Buffalo, is distributing cards which advertise his house and contain a list of parks, public buildings and other places of importance to visitors. Mr. Moon's slogan is, "Spend a happy hour at the Happy Hour."

Manager Carr of Shea's theater, Buffalo, will give up his theater on the evening of Sunday, April 11, for the Buffalo Press Club's show. Shea's Hippodrome recently showed "The Christian," "Satan Sanderson" and "The Avalanche." Henry Marcus, manager of the Hippodrome, who was ill for some time, is at his office again. His assistant is Isidore Moses.

Manager Sherry of the Family theater, Buffalo, recently showed moving pictures of a St. Patrick's Day parade held in that city. The feature was well advertised and many paraders went to the Family to see themselves in the pictures.

Manager Payton of the Lyric theater, Buffalo, gives his patrons plays by a stock company and moving pictures.

Manager Michaels of the Academy theater, Buffalo, invited his patrons to contribute vegetables for the poor of that city. The contributions received at the theater were beyond expectations and, as a result, many families were aided.

Recent attractions in Buffalo moving picture theaters: Elmwood theater, students' matinee, "Washington at Valley Forge;" Keith's, "The Great Silence;" Allendale, "She Stoops to Conquer."

The Garden theater, Buffalo, which has played vaudeville, burlesque and moving pictures at various times, has been leased by the Buffalo Social Club and will be used to stage professional boxing contests. George Rider is manager and Ben Bliven matchmaker.

The stage of the Lyceum theater of Elmira, N. Y., was recently damaged by fire. The house will be repaired and opened in the fall.

Work is progressing on the new theater being built in Utica, N. Y., by the American Motion Picture Co.

The Niagara Film Co. is planning to build a plant at North East, Pa.

George and Charles Hauf have been considering a plan to build a moving picture theater in West Utica, N. Y.

The Yonkers Sunday School Association has strongly protested against the opening of moving pictures in that city on Sunday.

According to a New York State report, fire recently did $1,200 damage at the Casino, Oneonta.

W. H. Hampton and his son, Glenn, have bought a moving picture theater at Duboise, Pa.

The Lockport, N. Y., Amusement Co., which will build moving picture theaters, has been incorporated with a capital of $150,000.

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS NOTES.

By Pacific Special Moving Picture World News Service.

HAWAIIANS are showing concern as to the conduct of picture shows. In the House of Representatives at Honolulu the Sunday labor bill was beaten on a tie vote. Representative E. K. Fernandez, who is interested in picture shows in the territory, offered an amendment that the photoplay houses be exempted, but the change was defeated. Fernandez also introduced a measure to license public shows. The fee for each performance would be $1 with the exception of moving picture and theatrical performances, which would be $5 for one performance or $100 a year. Worthy benefits or shows not for profit would not be taxed. The laws and order committee of the Civic Federation at Honolulu reported that "The Escape" was hard to judge on its merits. Protests against "The Typhoon" were made to the newspapers on behalf of the "high-minded Japanese people of the islands."

A striking feature of the exhibition of "Neptune's Daughter" in Honolulu was that at one time there were more than a hundred automobiles standing in front of Ye Liberty theater. A free matinee of this show was given at Hale Hooni in Lihue for the school children of Hanamaulu, Lihue, the German school and the Kauai High school. More return dates of the picture were played at Koloa, Waimea, Eleele and Kealia.

The present site of Hale Hooni (motion hall) in Lihue is suggested as the site for a modern theater.

Novelty in made-at-home pictures was offered by the Bijou at Honolulu, which had lights rigged up and the camera man film 500 persons crowded on the stage. This house had a big business with the films of the recent Mid-Pacific carnival in Honolulu.

NEW MICHIGAN FILM COMPANY.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

THE Patridge-Durkee Films Company, 1422 Plainfield avenue, has been formed at Grand Rapids to film events in that city. William Olsen, manager of the Calumet theater at Calumet, who also is a commercial photographer, and W. H. Foster, a newsdealer of that city, have entered the lists of the camera men and will photograph big meetings and scenery in the copper country.

HOW THE CHURCHES CAN HELP.

Support of theaters which showed discrimination in the selection of pictures was urged by Rev. Frederick Spence before the meeting of the Civic League at Saginaw. He advocated censorship by a volunteer, impartial and qualified body.

POULTRY RAISING PICTURES.

The federal government's poultry-raising methods films were shown at the Temple theater in Caro in connection with a meeting of the Tuscola County Poultry Association.

James Julius Nufer, president of the Dramatic Club, announced that construction of a new opera house at Whitehall would start about April 1.

The Gem theater at Hillsdale, operated by Floyd Gardner, was destroyed by fire.

Otto C. Gype has leased the Majestic at Hudson, succeeding Ed E. Burton as manager.

J. H. and W. E. Merson sold the Princess at Marshall to H. Brown.

Manager Thompson of the Alseum theater at Northville has opened a new show in the Chamberlin building at Northville.

The Queen theater at Battle Creek has been closed and the building is being razed.

When "Wildflower" was shown at the opera house in Marquette almost the whole first floor was reserved for a theater party by Masons.

WISCONSIN HAS SUNDAY BILL.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

A BILL legalizing moving picture shows and other amusements on Sunday was recommended for passage by the Committee on State Affairs of the lower house of the Wisconsin Legislature.

MADISON LICENSES OPERATORS.

The Madison City Council has passed the Alvord ordinance demanding skilled operators and licenses issued by the city electrical inspector.

WILL LEND FILMS FOR A WEEK.

The University of Wisconsin will revise its motion picture library plan before next year so that a set of films will remain in a community a week. William H. Dudley, chief of the Visual Instruction Bureau of the Extension Department, has found that it is impossible to furnish all the rural communities direct. The films will be sent to some township or county center and some high school or normal or small college will see that exhibitions are given in the outlying districts.

WILL BOOK FILM SERMONS.

Announcement comes from Watertown that H. I. Davis of that ctiy will be identified with a plan to book for churches sermons illustrated by moving pictures and synchronized with the phonograph. Prominent clergymen will select the sermons and in order to give the "releases" a popular appeal, especial efforts will be made to avoid doctrinal objections.

"It's San Francisco!"

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to Hold Fifth Annual Convention in SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA!

JULY 13th TO 16th, INCLUSIVE!

Exhibitors and Manufacturers Overwhelmingly Favor Selection of the Coast City!

Conditions Concerning Selection of San Francisco Best Set Forth in the Following Letter from National President Pearce:

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

President
MARION S. PEARCE, Baltimore, Md.

First Vice-President
T. P. FINNEGAN, Dallas, Tex.

Second Vice-President
MARK E. CORY, San Francisco, Cal.

Secretary
W. R. WILSON, Columbus, Ohio

Treasurer
PETER J. JEUP, Detroit, Mich.

Office of the National President, Baltimore, Md.
March 30th, 1915.

TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY OF AMERICA.

Gentlemen:

In December last, I sent a communication to the Manufacturers, asking their opinion as to the city in which the next Annual Convention should be held. They were almost unanimous in their choice of San Francisco!

Being equally anxious to hear from the Exhibitors, to get their views on the same point, a coupon was recently published in the various Trade Journals, giving each Exhibitor an opportunity to name his choice of a city for the Convention.

Except for the smallest number imaginable, they voted for San Francisco, and I want to express the sincere appreciation of the M. P. E. L. of A. to both Exhibitors and Manufacturers for their promptness in making known their choice.

I had hoped to make a personal reply to each and every one from whom we heard on the point, but when the replies increased, till they got into the thousands, this was simply a physical impossibility, and I am taking this means to attain the same end.

Full and complete arrangements for the convenience and comfort of every Exhibitor attending will be made in due time. This entire matter will be in the hands of a Committee from the San Francisco League, of which Mr. M. E. Cory, the Second National Vice-President, will be the Chairman.

Pending the time when more detailed arrangements can be made, let each man at least make up his mind to be present at this Convention, unquestionably the most enjoyable and really beneficial the League has ever held.

Very truly yours,
MARION S. PEARCE,
Nat'l Pres. M. P. E. L. of A.

Building Permanently—

That is what the Biograph organization has been doing for the past twenty years, and that is what we were doing when we added the TWO REEL BIOGRAPH every Tuesday to our program of regular releases.

When we added the fifth Biograph release every Friday, we continued to build permanently—always on the bed-rock of quality—and, as a result, to-day THE FIVE BIOGRAPHS are not only established, but firmly rooted in the programs of the better class of theaters everywhere.

Are they included in yours?

The Inside Story of a Big Film

Just about a year ago, I went to Mexico to see General Villa about the moving pictures of the Mexican War, at which all the world marvelled. Some of the best camera men and two of the greatest directors in the United States were with me. Quite accidentally we stumbled upon a tragic story of Villa's own early life. Of how, in seeking revenge for the death of his two unprotected sisters, at the hands of officers of the Mexican Army, he was thrown into prison,—escaped with the aid of an Indian half-breed whom he had earlier befriended, became an outlaw,—and,—finally was made Chief of the band that formed the nucleus of the Mexican Rebel Army.

Here was a tremendous epic of real life,—a theme big with every human emotion—ready to hand. Here was almost the very scene of the tragedy; here were thousands of restless Mexicans—as there had been when only a few years before Villa was living the story we had just heard. Then the telegraph wires began to hum. Well-known actors and actresses came—learned the story—lived the life—and then re-lived the Story before the Camera.

The result is a wonderful picture,—doubly intense because of its reality. The battle scenes are tremendous; hundreds of the actors in them were actual Mexican soldiers,—members of the old rebel band. A few scenes are pictures of real battles "cut" into the story.

Frankly, this film wasn't made as a Mutual Master-Picture. It was made to go out alone as one of the big motion picture accomplishments of the decade. Thrilling—intense—overpowering, yet full of trembling sunshine and tremendous spaces—where the horizon is miles away and the foreground frighteningly near,—it is truly the great melodrama of the blood-red dawn of a new republic.

I am sending it out now—big as it is—as a fitting companion to the four Mutual Master-Pictures which have already appeared.

You'll be glad you saw it—and ten years from now—your children will be glad you took them with you.

I have called this picture

THE OUTLAW'S REVENGE
In the Dawn of a New Republic.

The tears would come—I couldn't help it—and I'm not ashamed.

I wonder if there's a school-boy who hasn't had all he could do to keep them back when he read Enoch Arden? Yet was a sweeter story ever told than in Lord Tennyson's poem? How simple and direct and wonderful it all is. And how very, very beautiful.

With me, when I saw the film at the Majestic Studios today, were half a dozen picture-hardened men, and two no less practiced women. It is not unnatural that we talk over the pictures as they are shown. There's a running comment always. But somehow—as scene followed scene in Enoch Arden—the room became very still. The click of the machine was lost in the booming of breakers on far-off beaches. Long-forgotten lines of smooth-running verse came back to us all, I think—and the old New England fishing village seemed like the brightening of some dim recollection.

For nearly an hour no one had spoken; then one of the women sniffled,—the lights came on,—and both my cheeks were wet.

Go to see ENOCH ARDEN.

Some good theatre near you should show it soon.

You will enjoy every minute of it—and so will your mother and your sister—and your sweetheart. So, too, will your son if he's red-blooded and the right sort.

And if—at the very end—your eyes fill up and there's a tightening in your throat—it's a good sign.

Meantime—while you think of it—

Say at the box office of the theatre you attend: "I want to see

THE GIRL AND THE BACHELOR (Special—Two Parts—April 12).—Mrs. Blandon's dearest wish is to have her son George marry. George, however, is a woman-hater and frustrates all his mother's match-making efforts. The arrival of Jean, a distant relative, gives Mrs. Blandon the opportunity she wants. Jean is an orphan and the Blandon's are the only relatives she has in the world. The morning after her arrival, Jean, about to take her place at the table, is ordered by Mrs. Blandon to wait until the family have finished their meal. Taken completely aback, Jean rushes to her room humiliated and heartbroken.

His mother's cruelty fills George with amazement. Although he had vowed to shun Jean, George rises from the table and hastens after her. In his desire to soothe the girl, he informs her that his mother occasionally experiences irrational spells. Mrs. Blandon's attitude towards Jean during the ensuing week leaves George bewildered. His sympathy towards Jean deepens into love and when the girl finally declares her inability to endure Mrs. Blandon's eccentricities another day, George urges her to become his wife.

Mrs. Blandon overhears the proposal and the next instant Jean finds herself half-smothered in the woman's embrace. George's mother then confesses that her conduct towards Jean had been part of her plan to make her son take an interest in the girl. Jean and George, sheepishly admitting that the scheme has worked to perfection, name their wedding day.

THE "POLLYWOGS'" PICNIC (April 13).—Five minutes after General Information hangs his uniform out to air, Ham and Bud have it in their possession and are speeding towards the horizon. When safe from pursuit, Ham gets into the uniform. The gallant general was to have been the guest of honor at a picnic given by the Ancient Order of United Pollywogs. Although the members of the organization know the man by reputation, they have never seen him. Consequently, when Ham appears at the picnic grounds, they give him the grand salaam.

A series of contests have been arranged for the edification of the guest of honor. The first is a tug-of-war. Ham, however, breaks this up when he accidentally sets fire to the rope. When the pie-eating contest is announced, Ham and Bud enter. Ham wins by the simple expedient of tucking the pies inside his shirt when no one is looking. Bud, however, almost queers matters, when he playfully hits Ham on the chest. A prize of $100 tempts Ham and his army to enter the greased pig contest. Although the chase leads over hill and dale and through houses, Ham finally captures the porker. He has just been awarded the prize when the real General Information, mad as a hornet, appears upon the scene. With one accord, Ham and Bud turn and flee with the speed of frightened jack rabbits.

THE VOICE FROM THE TAXI (Episode No. 12 of "The Girl Detective" Series—April 14).—A cry for help which comes from a passing taxi, causes Jean, the Girl Detective, and her assistant, Warrington, to investigate. The taxi stops in front of a handsome cottage. Before Jean can interfere, two men leap from the machine and carry a girl into the building. With a request to Warrington that he break into the place if she fails to return within twenty minutes, Jean enters the cottage. An instant later, the Girl Detective is seized and dragged into a secret room. While her captors are binding her to a chair Jean discovers the girl she had seen carried into the house, in a similar predicament.

The other captive is Emily Wharton, an heiress. She has been kidnapped as the result of her guardian's plot to steal her fortune. This man, Jordan, compels Emily to affix her signature to a document which he places before her. Leaving the two girls securely bound, Jordan and his accomplice, Thompson, depart. Shortly afterwards Warrington and a number of policemen break into the house. Guided by Jean's voice, they locate the secret room and liberate the girls. Emily declares that unless Jordan can be prevented from presenting the document she had signed to the trustees of her estate by three o'clock, the scoundrel would obtain possession of her fortune.

Warrington and Jean hasten to the address mentioned by Emily. They arrive just as Jordan places the document before the trustees. While Jean denounces the man, Warrington engages him in a struggle. It ends when Jordan, rather than face imprisonment, leaps through the window to his death. Thompson is captured by Jean and carted to prison.

THE THIRD COMMANDMENT (Special—Three Parts—April 16).—Nell, Roth, Fane, Holly and Cornwall reside in the same boarding house. Roth, madly in love with Nell, learns that she is to marry Holly. He secretly plans to put his rival out of the way. Roth succeeds in getting Holly and Fane to quarrel. In his anger, Holly threatens to kill the latter. Later, Fane is found dead outside a saloon. Holly is arrested for the crime. In his testimony at Holly's trial, Roth takes the solemn oath that he had seen Holly kill Fane. On the strength of this evidence, the accused man is convicted and sentenced to death. Roth now feels the way clear to win Nell. The girl, however, shows her hatred toward him.

Hess, the murdered man's cousin, appears to learn the details surrounding Fane's death. Struck by the likness which Hess bears to his cousin, Cornwall conceives the idea of frightening Roth into a confession. Hess dresses in Fane's clothes and confronts Roth at every turn. The latter is frightened. His conscience troubles him and drives him forth to seek peace. Encountering Hess on the street, Roth assaults him. In his effort to escape, the perjurer seeks refuge in a dive. There he meets "Dope," a tough character and Fane's real slayer. A fight ensues in which Roth mortally wounds the man. The police enter in time to capture Roth. Dying, "Dope" makes a confession exonerating Holly.

THE GIRL ENGINEER (Episode No. 23 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—April 17). The interests which own the smelter offer to purchase Williams' mine, provided it assays a higher grade of ore than that produced by Walker's mine. The rival mine owners thereupon load a couple of cars with ore and consign them to the assayer. Knowing that Walker's mine produces a richer ore, Williams endeavors to hold up his rival's shipment. Several of his men attack the engineer of the freight and lay him low. Helen, the operator at Lone Point, sees the attack. While the train crew gives battle to the desperadoes, she dons overalls, climbs into the engine cab and pulls the throttle wide open.

Williams, waiting at the assayer's office, receives a 'phone message from his foreman telling him how Helen has frustrated the plot. Undismayed, the scoundrel succeeds in changing the billing cards on the cars containing his ore and Walker's ore. Walker, confident of success, is dumbfounded when the assayer informs him that the cars bearing the less Williams cards contain the better grade of ore. Helen suspects something wrong and makes an investigation. As the result, Williams' contemptible trick is revealed. Frustrated, the scoundrel endeavors to escape, but Helen again interferes and Williams is placed under arrest.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES, No. 5—Mr. Jarr's Magnetic Friend (April 12).—On one of the Jarr's quiet Sundays, Fritz, the shipping clerk, calls on Jarr and tells him that his sister, the sentimental fat lady, has fallen in love with Dinkston, the poet, adding that the lady has determined to die, for Dinkston evinces little affection for her. Jarr feels it is none of his business, but his wife induces him to do something. Jarr visits Fatima with Fritz and finds her lying on the folding bed which completely blockades the entrance. While they are begging her to get up so they may enter, Vera Grimm, the lady reformer, calls and learns the whole sad story. She decides Dinkston is to blame, and starts out on his trail. She catches him, snaps a pair of handcuffs on his wrists and hustles him to Fritz's home. While struggling with the bed, first Jarr, an officer, and then Hogan, who is Dinkston's rival, are pinned beneath it. Dinkston spies Fatima coming for him and "beats it." After a chase, he takes refuge in a powerhouse and hides underneath a big dynamo. Hogan, with a fiendish desire for revenge, sneaks to the switchboard and starts the machine running. The chief engineer stops it, but too late; it is found that the poor fellow has been magnetized. Nobody can touch him. Fatima arrives, and Dinkston, with malice aforethought, embraces her. The electric shock knocks her into Hogan's arms, and snatching a pair of rubber gloves, Dinkston escapes to Jarr's home. There he takes off his gloves and attracts all the bric-a-brac in the house to himself. The police finally nab him, with the aid of a rope. At the last, Fritz is seen reducing the folding bed to kindling wood, while Jarr, with a sigh of intense relief, complacently lights a cigar and blames Cora, his wife, for all the rumpus.

BETWEEN THE TWO OF THEM (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Special—April 13). While competing for the ten thousand dollar prize play, George Gray, an author, will not permit his wife, Marjorie, who is really very talented, to assist him or make any suggestions. Realizing that he is not doing the plot justice, Marjorie interviews a dramatic critic and enlists his aid. A couple of "charitable" neighbors see her enter the critic's home alone, and, scenting a scandal, consider it their duty to warn Gray. Thinking the anonymous warning preposterous, George tears it up, but later, finding an apparently compromising letter, is greatly disturbed. Doubts creep into his mind, and he engages the services of Steele, a detective, to watch Marjorie. That night she goes to the critic with the play finished according to her own ideas. Delighted with its great improvement, they talk enthusiastically over it and the detective, watching them, misconstrues the situation. Gray completes his play and sends it off, after which he receives the detective's report. He goes to Marjorie's room, where he bitterly denounces her and goes out of the house, without giving her a chance to defend herself. Several days afterwards Gray receives word from the publishers that they have accepted the "corrected version" of his play! He does not know what to make of it, as he knows nothing of any other version than his own. Gradually it dawns on him his wife must have something to do with it, and when he receives his check with his wife's manuscript, containing his name as author, he knows the truth. He now feels keenly their estrangement and becomes remorseful. On the opening night of the play, it proves a hit, and unable to stand the applause and congratulations, he does the only honorable thing. He publicly announces that credit for the authorship is entirely due his wife. Marjorie leaves the theater and hurries home, locking herself in her room. On Gray's humble return, she tells him—through the locked door—just what she thinks of him, then when he is thoroughly penitent, she permits him to enter.

HIS PHANTOM SWEETHEART (April 14).—After dining at his club, Jack Courtney, a young man of independent means, is about to leave for the opera with some friends, when he receives a message from a business associate, asking him to wait at the club for him. In a big easy chair, Courtney falls fast asleep and dreams that he goes to the opera and while seated in a box, becomes infatuated with a beautiful girl. He cannot keep his eyes from her. She does not see him until the end of the second act, then she happens to encounter his direct gaze. After a moment of suspense, to his delight, she bestows a dazzling smile upon him. At the end of the performance, Jack sees the girl in the lobby looking about in evident helpless confusion, and upon inquiry, learns she has lost her escort in the crowd. He at once offers her his arm, and takes her home. There he is about to bid her good-night, but she invites him in. No sooner is he in the house when his passion overpowers him, and he seizes the girl in his arms, telling her of his love. To his surprise she yields to his embrace, and shyly admits her love for him. Placing her arms about his neck, she begs him never to leave her. He promises, but begins to feel a little queer about the suddenness and warmth of the girl's affection. She excuses herself for a few moments, and while awaiting her return, he is unable to shake off a strange, uncanny fear. Suddenly he hears an unearthly shriek, springs to the door and there, in a blaze of light, stands the girl. Her hair down, a wild look in her eyes, she seems transformed into a wild beast. Then, without warning, she rushes at Jack and grabs him by the throat in a maniacal clutch. He struggles, but cannot break her hold, and just as he feels himself being slowly strangled to death—he awakes to find himself back in the club, just where he had fallen asleep.

STRENGTH (April 15).—Kindly of face and big of heart, with a powerful physique, Jim Vaughn, keeps steadily at work on his gold claim, despite the petulant complaints and expressions of his young wife that he will "never strike it." As the days go on, she becomes more and more dissatisfied, until Franton, a young prospector, meets with an accident near their home, in which he is nursed back to health by the Vaughns. Mrs. Vaughn becomes infatuated with him and his tales of life in the cities. Jim interrupts them in one of their tete-a-tetes, but apparently takes no notice. While Franton nervously watches him, Jim pulls himself up to a rafter with one hand, takes the exploding caps he had come after and then easily bends a thick iron bar double. His exhibition of strength is meant for Franton's benefit, and it has its effect. After he has gone, the badly scared prospector tells Jim's wife he fears her husband is aware of their friendship, and abruptly leaves. Jim returns, and, finding a note left for his wife by Franton, is furious. Buckling on his revolver, he stalks grimly after the prospector. His wife finds the note page torn out of the book, and, realizing her husband has found it, takes a pistol and hurries after Jim. She finds Jim bending over the cowering prospector, forcing the ingrate to pan gold, telling him, "The one who strikes the first nugget, wins the girl; the loser"—and Jim points significantly at his revolver, must make short work of himself!" Franton finds no nugget, and while Jim is washing his pan, Franton grabs the pistol and is about to shoot Jim, when Beatrice shatters his wrist with a bullet. Jim finds a nugget and commands Franton to carry out the pact, but Beatrice intercedes and Jim, thoroughly disgusted, turns away. Beatrice drives Franton away from the place, then goes to her husband. She has had her lesson, and Jim, knowing she is thoroughly repentant, gladly forgives her.

THE LOVE WHIP (April 16).—For a time after their honeymoon, Jack Wright continues ardently sentimental, but when business cares and responsibilities begin to bear down upon him, he becomes less demonstrative, although his love remains unchanged. Alice, his wife, gets all upset, consults her married sister and is advised to try the "love whip" of coolness and jealousy. When Jack—whose big deal has turned out successfully—returns home lightheartedly, he meets with an icy reception and his wife insists he kiss her only on the forehead. He is puzzled at first, then worried. Finally he consults his business partner, who advises him to try a little coolness himself. To this end, Jack has his stenographer address him a fancy perfumed envelope, which is sent to his home. Alice's suspicions are aroused by the missive, and she resolves upon bitter retaliation. "Dolling up" with rouge and scenting her hair with tobacco smoke, she starts a desperate flirtation with a neighbor. The plan works, and Jack, raging with jealousy, pretends to flirt with the maid; permitting himself to be caught by Alice. The mix-up grows in intensity. Jack employs a detective agency to track his wife and she, in turn, employs another detective agency to watch him! Each make an appointment with the sleuth employed by the other's agency. To secure evidence, the young gentleman sleuth takes Alice for a taxi ride, but when he attempts to kiss her, she sails into him like a tigress. Meanwhile, the fair young lady detective, for the same reason, goes to a cafe with Jack, where she attempts to caress him. He repulses her, saying that he had flirted simply to make his wife jealous. The next day, when the reports from their detective agencies arrive, Alice and Jack learn of each other's innocence and soon misunderstandings give way to repentance and rehabilitated love and happiness.

ELSA'S BROTHER (Special—Two Parts—April 17).—After his daughter's death, Andre Hoffer, an old Swiss watchmaker, cares for his grandchildren, John and Elsa Smardon. The girl is sweet and lovable, but John is wild, dissipated and selfish. Tom Hickey, his chum, writes John from the west that there is an opportunity to come out there and learn the mining business. After a sad farewell (largely indifferent on his part), he goes west, where he falls in with a wild crew of miners and hangers-on. He and Phil Lessing, a clean-living young engineer at Hammonds' mine, become bitter enemies. In a quarrel, John is shot and Phil's employer advises him to skip, which he does. John partially recovers and is sent to an old miner's hut in the mountains to regain his health. John sends word to Elsa that the doctor has told him that his death is only a matter of weeks. John, however, does not die and in his loneliness, forms a resolve to make a man of himself. He leaves the hut suddenly without telling anyone his destination, and in another country, regains perfect health and, keeping his good resolutions, prospers. Elsa mourns him as dead, and devotes herself to deeds of charity and kindness. By chance, Phil, one day, meets Elsa, in her grandfather's shop. The two are attracted, fall in love and become engaged. Later he learns, to his horror, that he has killed—as he thinks—the brother of the girl he is to marry. He confesses and Elsa shrinks from him, saying that marriage is impossible. She quickly changes her mind, however, when John writes them saying that he is alive and coming home. On John's return Phil is welcomed as a member of the family, and John is the most eager to receive him.

A DEADLY HATE (An Adaptation of the Play by George Roberts—Special—Three Parts—April 12).—Charles Meredith is jealous of his brother, John, who is the favorite of Lady Constance. When Sir Randolph, father of the young men, on his deathbed, calls the members of the family to him, Charles, who is subject to epileptic fits, is unable to join the sad gathering, as he has just recovered from a violent spasm. Sir Randolph wishes it understood that he wants his son, John, to marry Lady Constance, his ward. When Charles, the dissolute son, hears of this, he swears revenge. Despite the fact that John importunes Charles to take up his residence with him at Fernleigh Grange, Charles will not listen to it. When his money gives out and he is besieged by his many creditors, and the administrator of his father's estate refuses to give him any more money, he decides to go to Fernleigh Grange. While there, he comes in contact with the administrator of the Meredith estate, and after an argument Charles kills him. John appears upon the scene just as Charles is looking fiendishly at the prostrate form before him. Charles is taken to an insane asylum, and is locked up after an examination by alienists.

John and Charles are twins and there is a wonderful resemblance between them. On the night of the dinner in celebration of John's engagement to Lady Constance, Charles escapes from the asylum and enters the Meredith home. After the dinner, Charles attacks John in the hallway after the former has stolen out from behind a suit of armor in which he has been hiding. Charles overcomes his brother, whom he throws out of the window. When Lady Constance and others appear upon the scene, Charles poses as John and because of the marked resemblance, he is not discovered. Lady Constance is shocked at his rudeness, however, and when he handles her roughly, wonders at the transformation. At the asylum where John has been taken by the guards, who found him unconscious outside the Meredith home, he is unable to convince the authorities that he is not Charles.

On the wedding night, when all is ready, Jasert, a guard, who has learned the identity of John through a blemish on his body, goes to Charles and demands money of him for silence. Charles realizes that he is caught, and in a struggle with Jasert, kills him, throwing his body over a cliff. That night, there is a fire at the asylum and John escapes. He hurries to his home and arrives just as Lady Constance is putting on the bridal veil. There is a scene in her room, and at the height of it, Charles is taken with a fit. He is quickly taken away. John explains to the satisfaction of the guests, and the wedding goes on as if nothing had happened.

HIS SAD AWAKENING (April 13).—Halen Hardy is an old man with the weight of years and a wealth of beard on his shoulders, while his son, Nowerk, is a healthy, lazy young man who reads cheap love stories and sends his father to work every morning. On this particular morning the tottering old man starts out with his dinner pail and from all appearances he has almost both feet in the grave and is liable to die from lack of breath at any minute. Nowerk sees him off, and soon the father is at a ditch with his pick and shovel. After he has lifted a few grains of earth by much effort, a policeman reminds him that it is Sunday, and that it is against the law to work on the Sabbath. Poor old father gladly welcomes the interruption and unsteadily walks away.

His son, in the meantime, is enjoying the society of pretty Miss Winthrope, who dropped a package from her automobile and become infatuated with Nowerk when he picked it up and brought it to her. She takes him for a ride in her car and Nowerk is convulsed with joy. He returns to the veranda of the modest little home and is soon absorbed in the lurid pages of some wildly exciting love story with paper covers. Suddenly, Nowerk is seen walking along the street by Miss Winthrope. She calls him and after a ride to the park in her car, she proposes to him, giving him a diamond ring. He kisses the ring and finds it to be alum. Miss Winthrope hustles him to her home where Nowerk tells her parents they must ask his parents for consent to the marriage. Quickly the trip to Nowerk's home is made and when his mother refuses to allow her son to be a rich woman's poodle-dog, Nowerk plans to elope. He leaves a note and runs off with his fiancee. When the Hardys see the note, they rush out to the stable and get their horses (grotesque figures with horses' heads in which the Hardys array themselves) and go in pursuit of the flying automobile. The chase is the funniest thing in forty states. Into the living room in the Winthrope home, goes the "horses" just in time to prevent the marriage. At this juncture, the poor old father comes into the scene with his dinner pail, with which he strikes Nowerk on the head. Mrs. Hardy comes out as Nowerk wakes up from his dream.

THE COOK'S MISTAKE (April 14).—Bridget, the cook, has just finished handing out some of her mistress' food to Fixt Post, a policeman, and the latter prepares to leave via the kitchen door. As he starts to go, he unknowingly drops a letter which Bridget unblushingly picks up and reads after he has gone. It is to the effect that Nora will have his sailor suit ready soon and will send it over that afternoon, so he can have it for the masquerade ball at Finnegan's Hall. The conclusion is an expression of the soul and when Bridget sees the signature "Nora," she goes to the dresser and takes out a brace of revolvers with which she intends to shoot up the ball and her faithless policeman "lover."

Little Tommy stops on his way to Post's house with the bundle containing the sailor suit. A crook sees him lay it down while he joins in a game with some other boys. Tommy turns around in a few minutes and discovers the package is missing. On the other side of the high fence, the crook is opening the package. Inside is a note from Nora to the effect that she will not be at the ball until late. A ticket is enclosed and in the note, Nora mentions that Mrs. McGuire will be at the affair with all of her swell diamonds, which she got with her latest husband. The crook sees a bonanza at the ball, and decides to array himself in the sailor suit and go.

Bridget enters the ball-room looking for the betrayer of her love. Not sighting a sailor suit, she goes to the balcony. Her eye suddenly spots the crook, who is dancing around close to the woman with all the precious stones, and rushing to the edge of the balcony, Bridget drops to the floor below. The sailor sees her and starts to run. Bridget whips out both revolvers and starts to shoot up the place. Out of the hall goes the sailor with Bridget in hot pursuit. Down the street they go, the sailor dodging into a restaurant. He rushes in and turns over tables in his excitement. The diners are frightened and are afraid to remonstrate with what they think is an escaped lunatic. Bridget follows him in and shoots up the restaurant. Pies are thrown about and there is general chaos. The manager calls the police but that doesn't matter. The chase continues up several streets and the sailor finally ends up in a tank on the roof of a building. Bridget follows and soon all, including several policemen, are struggling in the water. Bridget then takes a good look at the sailor and sees her mistake.

ESSANAY.

A JITNEY ELOPEMENT (Special—Two Parts—Chaplin Release—April 1).—Count de Ha Ha aspires to the hand of an heiress and $1,000,000. The father of the beauteous lady pays over the million and tries to deliver the daughter. She, however, has a mind of her own. She drops a note from her balcony, begging to be saved from the cruel fate. Charles Chaplin picks up the note and at once enters the house and announces he is the Count de Ha Ha. He gets a royal welcome. While dining at the house, however, the real count appears. His former negotiations had been carried on by correspondence, but he proves to the satisfaction of the millionaire that he is IT.

In the ensuing battle Chaplin kicks both the count and the irate parent out of the house and flees with the girl. They find a Jitney automomile, and after dropping a nickel in the slot are off, the count, the cruel parent and several policemen in pursuit in another machine. There is a wild race across all kinds of roads, through woods and across small creeks, in which the autos run both backwards and forwards, colliding many times. Chaplin loads his auto with bricks and when the pursuers are too close bombards them. He knocks the policemen out into the mud puddle.

Finally there is a terrific collision and the pursuers' machine is knocked across a dock and plunges several feet into a river, submerging the count and the irate father. Then the happy pair kiss and race for a parson.

A NIGHT IN KENTUCKY (April 12).—Jack Westlake, brother of Tom Westlake, stalled in the Kentucky mountains by a train wreck, walks into town and is cautioned by a pretty girl that "they are after him." He follows her, amused, and is captured by the three Jordan brothers, who bring him before their father, Col. Jordan accuses Jack of having deserted Mary, his daughter, after wedding her. Jack, enraged by an epithet cast on him by one of the brothers, demands an apology. A duel follows in which Jack is slightly wounded. Mary comes on the scene after the first shots and says that Jack is not her husband. Jack then explains that he is Tom's brother and that Tom died suddenly while in a lawyer's office on business, leaving Mary in ignorance of his fate. Jack departs for his train, followed by the love-lit eyes of Kentucky.

THE TURN OF THE WHEEL (Special—Two Parts—April 13).—Ralph Herbert, in love with Helen Vincent, a society beauty, annoys her with his attitude, which is one of protection. He treats Helen as a small child and she resents it, although she really loves him without knowing it. Herbert is the moving spirit of the Iota Mining Company, which must buy an ore railroad to increase its profits.

Jack Deerforth, an unscrupulous but brilliant manipulator, secures the railroad needed by the Iota Company for the purpose of holding up the company. He makes use of Soper, Ralph's secretary, to do this. Helen Sinclair is a frivolous young married woman. Her husband gives her some bonds to put away and she borrows $10,000 from Deerforth on them. This gives Deerforth a hold on her cousin, Helen Vincent. He uses the lever to get Helen Vincent to his house.

Ralph finds her there. Instead of losing faith in her he corners Deerforth, having had advance information from Soper, whom he cought robbing his safe. Deerforth is defeated in a terrible fight between the two men. Helen Sinclair is saved from her folly. Deerforth also is defeated in his plan to hold up Ralph, and Helen Vincent comes to the knowledge of her love for Ralph.

THE FABLE OF THE MEN AT THE WOMAN'S CLUB (April 14).—The club would round up once each week at homes of members to read papers—followed by discussion—after which somebody would pour. It was suspected that Josephine only came to the Brain Barbecue to kill time, but her home had large front rooms that could be thrown together. Therefore Josephine was useful. The club settled on a big show to which the Hes were invited. The men were led in—pulling at the halters—with their ears laid back. Some husbands or brothers got rear seats or stood along the wall so as to execute a quiet sneak if things got too literary. Josephine discovered that not more than 60 per cent. of the men were en rapport about woman's destiny—and did not like to have prominent business men of the town dying of leg cramp—or thirst—or anything like that. She left the discussion and started life saving. In two minutes, of the men left in the front room, one was asleep and the other was penned in. They clustered around Josephine and sang songs about baby and chickens and razors. Josephine was dropped from the club but right now is the most popular woman in town.

THE BOUQUET (April 15).—The girl gets a beautiful bouquet of flowers from her fiance, who wants her to enjoy the fragrance because these flowers will be in their new home when they are married. The girl puts them in a vase and uses them for a table decoration. There is to be a party at her home that day and they are a very welcome ornament. Sweedie, the maid, also loves flowers, and when she sees them on the table, decides to put some greens in with them. She goes into the woods and picks nettles and puts them in with the flowers. When the guests arrive they all admire and smell the flowers. By the time they are ready to partake of the refreshments, their skin is stinging from contact with nettles. The fiance comes and he gets it too. The girl's mother finds out Sweedie is responsible and calls the police. The policemen also get it and when last seen they are all running to try to get away from it.

THE RETURN OF RICHARD NEAL (Special—Three Parts—April 17).—Gideon Hall, a reckless young man in love with Doris Blake, is saved from suicide by "Count" Nikola, a clever criminal with an original method. Nikola lends him money enough to cover a heavy gambling debt and in return asks that Hall introduce him into society. Hall agrees and in the course of time, Nikola is introduced into the Blake home. Doris feels a strange attraction for the man and feels she must go to him. It is the influence of Nikola's mesmeric mind oer her will.

Nikola hypnotizes Doris and tells her that at 3.13 she will get out of bed, go to her father's art gallery and steal the famous painting by Muse and will drop it out of the window. Doris obeys and at 3.13 the family is aroused by a scream and they find Doris unconscious on the floor murmuring "3.13." A doctor is called, realizes that she is under the control of another mind and calls Richard Neal, psychological expert. Nikola sets her at another task, that of bringing a large sum of money to his house at a certain time.

Blake learns the secret from Hall, who is also under Nikola's influence, and sets a trap for him. The trap works, the two minds clash and Neal's stronger will wins. The girl is awakened, Nikola is exposed and discredited and Doris restored to her family.

BIOGRAPH.

THE END OF THE PLAY (April 5).—Seeking inspiration, the playwright comes to the farmhouse where the actress is already established. She recognizes him, but he has never seen her before and accepts her for the farmer's daughter she pretends to be. The budding romance interferes with playwriting, and when the manager sends him a hurry call for the play he has nothing to offer. His spirits are further dashed by the farmer's gruff refusal to let "Nellie marry a city chap." When he meets her again—in the manager's office—she produces her diary, in which she has recorded their romance, and offers it to him as the material he needs for a play, which is to end in the good old-fashioned way.

THE BRIDGE ACROSS (Special—Two parts—April 6).—Old Colonel Randolph does not know that it is the hard work of his daughter Grace, an artist, and the girl's self-denial which maintain the run-down family mansion and provide his little luxuries of tobacco and toddy. Therefore he is conscious only of virtue when he tyranically refuses to allow his daughter to marry "a Yankee"—the term of infinite contempt which he applies to the young Northerner on the adjoining estate. Nevertheless, with the connivance of Pompey, the colonel's old body-servant, Grace and her lover meet clandestinely. The boy's mother in person invites the colonel and Grace to attend her daughter's party, but he refuses with stiff courtesy. On the appointed evening, however, Grace steals across the rustic foorbridge between the two properties, after having stirred the old man's deepest memories by her playing of Southern melodies. Later, when he comes upon Pompey in the attic, bending over a trunk filled with mementos of Mrs. Randolph, the colonel's eyes fill, and in husky tones he bids the old negro, who confesses having abetted Grace, to lead him also to the house across the bridge.

THE VINDICATION (April 8).—The detective's daughter is saved from a footpad by a passing stranger, and the acquaintance thus unconventionally begun deepens into love. One day she takes a snapshot of him and shyly shows the result to her father. She is dazed when the detective forbids her to continue the association, because the man has served a term for theft. He tells her sufficient of the story to prove that he is not mistaken. That night burglars break into the house, and one of them is wounded by the detective's pistol shot. The girl and her lover, who have met secretly outside, rush in at sound of the shot; and the man recognizes in the captured burglar his old office mate. The latter, impelled by conscience, relates how he ingeniously committed the theft and placed the blame on an innocent man.

THE MISER'S LEGACY (April 9).—Hiding from the police in an alley, two crooks see, through a winuow, the dying miser entrust to the doctor the fortune he bequeaths to his erring son. They trail the doctor home, overpower him and, in their search for the money, terrify his wife and child. The little daughter of one of the crooks has seen them enter the house and runs home to tell her mother that "father is sick at the doctor's." When the police arrive, they find one crook dying, shot by his companion in a quarrel over the spoils. The money box contains a portrait by means of which the doctor was to identify the miser's heir. Recognizing his own photograph, the younger crook claims the fortune, and this provokes the fatal quarrel. Dying, he leaves the fortune to his long-suffering family.

THE BROODING HEART (April 10).—The young daughter of the broker dies, and his wife is heartbroken. All his attempts to arouse her out of her brooding fail. At last he tries an expedient suggested to him by the lovable character of a waif who serves him with papers. He purchases suitable clothes for her and orders them sent to the River street house. His wife finds the bill and, believing that her husband leads a double life, determines to leave him. She returns for her dead child's playthings, sees the little girl asleep in the bed, swoons, and is revived by the touch of baby arms.

THE ROAD O' STRIFE, Part 2—"The Face of Fear (April 12).—Caleb Jerome is a private banker of the old school, most highly esteemed in the business world and considered a man of wealth. In striking contrast to the simple life of his father, Caleb's only son, Gilbert, is a libertine. Nevertheless Gilbert is his father's idol, and for his sake the old man has not hesitated at secret crime, though the son treats him with indifference. Caleb is paying a terrible price for the doubtful success which his greatest crime offered. Whereever he may be, an incredible horror dogs his steps. When his eyes rest upon a face, whether it be that of a stranger or a familiar friend or servant, that face suddenly becomes that of a dead man, Prof. Gershom. Realizing that his end is near, Caleb sends for his son, and tells him what he has done and the reasons for the act—that the fortune supposed to be his was originally for Alene, and that in an attempt to destroy the evidence whereby this girl, should she live to become of age, will recover her fortune and make Gilbert Jerome a beggar, Caleb murderously struck down old Gershom, the girl's protector, and threw his body into the river. The documents he sought, Caleb had been unable to find. Gilbert assures him that either the documents will be found and destroyed, or that Alene shall not live to become of age. Soon after, the horror of the face of fear becomes too great to be endured, and Caleb Jerome dies. Meantime, Alene has been tenderly cared for by Dr. Duncan and his wife, Martha, and Duncan has awakened to the fact that Alene is not mad, but as sane as any other perfectly normal person. With the frankness of perfect purity, the girl shows her instinctive desire for the love of a man and her choice of Robert Dane. Dane's love for Alene now completely fills his heart with soul-stirring passion, but he sternly represses his emotions, thinking that it would be unfair to Alene to marry her before a greater knowledge of the world enables her to choose a husband on the basis of practical affairs rather than to act merely on emotional impulse. Rather sadly he tells himself that as she has only a child's heart still, it means nothing that she turns to him now.

CLEANING TIME (April 13).—John Herringbone is a great man—at least he thinks so—and he has taught his wife to be a strong-minded woman. She proves to be more than that at house cleaning time by insisting on John doing the scrubbing. Poor John, try as he may, things will go wrong with him, so when he breaks up the family crockery and empties the dirty water into the family wash, it's too much for his better half and he gets the life pounded out of him. He is afterwards put to watering the lawn, an occupation which proves to be his downfall. For when he sees a young lady lift her skirts too high he gets so careless with the hose that he gives several people a drenching with bad results.

BLACK ART (April 13).—Mr. Color is only a janitor but he has aspirations for the artistic, and when he sees his artist boss receive a large sum of money for one of his pictures, he then and there decides to become a painter. He is quite successful, and receives a letter from an art company asking for a contribution to their exhibition. In the same mail he also receives a letter from his aunt, asking him to pay her a visit. He accepts both, and prepares a fine specimen of a Jackass picture for the exhibition; also a picture of his aunt, painted by himself as a present to her. In transporting the pictures to their destinations they got mixed, and the Jackass painting goes to auntie. His reception therefore is quite a lively one. He rushes to the exhibition building, followed by auntie and when she sees that her picture there has won first prize, she forgives her nephew on his explanation. They embrace, and the Jackass now hanging in auntie's place in the exhibition, smiles on them both.

A PRINCE OF PEACE (Special—Two Parts—April 14).—Jim Allen sends his oldest son, Lite, to inform Tom Hurley that he intends to foreclose a mortgage which is overdue. The law is the worst red rag anyone can waive in a mountaineer's face and the whole Hurley family resents the note, even including Rose, who is Lite's sweetheart. A quarrel takes place in which Lite knocks down Jud, one of the Hurley boys. Next Allen and his family remove to the city to take action on the mortgage leaving only Lite and little Billy, his brother, to care for the farm.

In the city the Allens and Hurleys are lined up for the case and, displaying much vindictiveness, the nerveless little lawyer throws up the job. The business unfinished, Allen and his folks go to his brother's house for the night. The brutal Jud Hurley and his cowardly brother, Ord, see this and, engaging the aid of a half-breed and a nigger, go to the Allen mountain home to kill Lite and his little brother. A battle takes place in which Lite overcomes the four would-be murderers. Ord reports to his folks that Lite ambushed them and shot Jud. This lie puts the fire of Hell into old Hurley's heart and the feud is on. Ord then, to escape, flees to Cincinnati. The Allens having returned, the Hurleys muster forces and attack the house. Lite seeing that his family are outnumbered goes for aid and collects friends to ride to the rescue, Lite following on foot. In the battle Lite is struck down by a stray bullet. Rose Hurley finds him and much as she hates the family the woman instinct dominates and she drags him to a doctor's hut, where she nurses him back to life.

The feud becomes more deadly and the Allens and Hurleys meet for a supreme struggle on the mountain. Lon Hurley, another brother of Rose, comes upon the scene and lays a mine of dynamite attaching an electric wire. The Hurleys then vacate their position and as the Allens advance the mine is fired with great havoc. The Allens then post upon a tree a note requesting a peace conference. The Hurleys turn the paper over and write a demand that Lite Allen shall be surrendered and the feud will end. The paper is torn down by the Allens and trampled in the ground, but Rose takes it to Lite, whom she finds sitting on the edge of his bunk in the doctor's hut. In the meantime, the cowardly Ord writes to Rose confessing that his tale about Lite ambushing Jud was a lie, but the letter had been delayed by Lon, who got the letter in town and forgot to deliver it. When Lite sees the demand that he shall be surrendered to the Hurleys; he is appalled. Rose has admitted her love for him and now life is doubly sweet. However he feels that he cannot sacrifice the family and crawls to the Hurley camp. They are about to kill him when Rose rushes onto the scene waving the letter of Ord's confession. The Allens are forthwith rescued from their hut which had been fired by the Hurleys and amid general rejoicing Jim Allen and Tom Hurley clasp hands.

RATED AT $10,000,000 (Special—Three Parts —April 15).—Samuel Ellis and May, his second wife, live by their wits. Sam has a daughter by his first wife who has inherited her ideas and beauty from her dead mother. The Ellis' concoct a scheme whereby they can use the girl to land them in the social swim. They take expensive apartments at the Savoy Hotel and send for Lily to join them. The girl leaves her school friends and takes a train for the city. As she enters the Pullman, "High Brow Joe," a crook, sees his chance to steal her handbag containing her ticket and money. When the conductor calls for tickets, Lily is much embarrassed, but quickly relieved by a good looking stranger on the opposite side of the car. Arriving at the depot the stranger loses himself in the crowd without having given his name or address. Joe follows the stranger and relieves him of his wallet, in which he finds considerable money, papers and cards bearing the name of Robert Leeds.

Later Joe reads in a paper that an immense fortune has been left to Robert Leeds and as the stranger has taken a connecting train for the West, Joe feels safe in impersonating his victim. He goes to the Savoy Hotel and registers under the name of Robert Leeds and is duly entertained as the young millionaire. Lily arrives at the hotel and as the news spreads the Ellis' lose no time in becoming acquainted with the supposed Robert Leeds and introducing their daughter. At every opportunity, Lily is thrown in his way with due instructions to make herself agreeable, but try as she may she cannot like him. Later she detects him in stealing from the guests and, Joe feeling that she will probably hand him over to the police, decoys her into a cab with one of his pals and takes her to a hangout run by "Frisco Fan."

There she is held a prisoner. She, however, manages to write a note stating her condition and throws it from the window. A gentleman passes and picking it up, carefully finds his way to her room and talking through the keyhole learns the true state of affairs. The girl pluckily declares that she will remain while the stranger goes for help. The man is no other than the true Robert Leeds; he goes to the Savoy Hotel and seeing his own name upon the register signs John Smith. The real Robert Leeds, secures the assistance of Farrel, the hotel detective, who quickly releases Lily from her prison and round up "Frisco Fan" and a number of crooks. Leeds then goes back to deal with "High-brow Joe," gives him the beating of his life and turns him over to the detective. The Ellis' are glad to get out of the hotel without paying their bill and it is a great pity they could not have been present when a happy bride and groom registered that night as Mr. and Mrs. Robert Leeds at the Savoy.

THE ACCUSING PEN (April 16).—John Howe, young owner of a small ranch, is in love with Betty Frost, daughter of Nathan Frost, owner of the adjoining ranch. Frost, however, does not favor a two-by-four-rancher and drives Howe away from Betty at the point of his revolver. A few minutes later, Frost finds Howe's young Mexican foreman throwing dice with the former's cowboys. Frost kicks the Mexican out of the yard. Both Howe and the Mexican register their rage and mortification.

Returning to his office, Frost is shot through a window. He writes a note before he dies. A hand thrust through the shutter tears part of the note from the death grip of Frost's fingers. The sheriff later pries the remaining piece of paper from Frost's fingers. It reads: "I was shot by John Howe ——." Howe is found at his house, cleaning his revolver, and is arrested. The sheriff, threatened by Frost's angry cowboys, takes refuge with his prisoner in the dead man's house. The cowboys break into the house. Then Betty, sobbing on the ground beneath the window through which Frost was shot, finds the other piece of Frost's note, torn, and crumpled. The full note exonerates Howe, and the real culprit is pursued and shot by the sheriff and the cowboys.

JUST LOOK AT JAKE (April 17).—Jake, a good-natured plumber, is a friend of young Dr. Bob Stone. Bob is engaged to Elsie, daughter of millionaire Bond. Old Bond, peeved at Bob, terminates his engagement with Elsie. Instead he plans that she shall wed Mr. Blossom, an effeminate society individual. On the night of the wedding, Bob, rather than see the girl of his heart married to a mush-head, goes to spend the evening with Jake. He finds that Jake has just been summoned to Elsie's home, a troublesome water-pipe leak, directly over the drawing room, causing the marriage ceremony to be postponed.

When Jake and Bob reach the residence, Bob, presumably there as an invited guest, secretly instructs Jake to make the leak worse, instead of better. Jake performs his part well. The butlers, footmen, maids and chauffeurs forming a bucket brigade to carry away the waste water are worked to death. The guests grow nervous and irritated. Bob sends up word to Elsie to feign hysterics. She does so and Bob, excercising his prerogative as a physician, bars everybody from the room, including the prospective bride-groom, while he and Elsie indulge in a carnival of hugs and kisses. Jake luxuriates in the bath-room while the leak grows worse and worse.

In desperation Elsie's parents decide to have the ceremony performed in another room. Elsie is forcibly taken down stairs for the wedding and Bob, realizing he is about to lose her, again appeals to Jake for assistance. Jake solves matters by disconnecting the electric wiring and plunging the entire house in darkness. In the general confusion and darkness he contrives to get Elsie and Bob up to her own room, where they are married by a minister. Jake then switches on the lights, showing everybody hugging some one else. The frantic parents locate Bob and Elsie too late. They are already man and wife—thanks to Jake.

A MIXED UP ELOPEMENT (April 13).—Father has the gout and is cared for by his only daughter. She is of a flirtatious disposition and father hires a detective to watch her. The detective watches the wrong girl, who is visiting at the same hotel with her father. While he is chasing this girl, the daughter elopes and turns the tables on the detective. In the end there is a double marriage and a general reconciliation.

ALL IN THE SAME BOAT (April 16).—Jack is in love with his employer's daughter, who reciprocates the feeling. Jack gets peeved when the old man calls him down and is fired. Naturally he goes to his sweetheart, Billie, for sympathy. She gladly receives him, but notices a long hair on his shoulder and accuses him of a flirtation. They part in a huff. Her father comes at this time and, seeing Jack in his house, has him thrown out. Jack, sore at the world, idly glances over his paper and sees Miss Dillpickle's advertisement for a husband in name only who is to be paid $100 a week, if he goes abroad with her. He decides to make an application for the place and is successful. He is wedded and all arrangements are made for a trip abroad on the first steamer.

Billie, after Jack's departure, repents of her jealousy and accuses her father of mistreating Jack. She tries to find Jack, but in vain. At last she learns that he has left his home and has gone for a trip abroad. She is inconsolable and her father, to relieve her mind, promises to take her abroad on the first steamer. Jack and his "wife" arrive on the steamer and are looking things over when Billie and her father come up the gang plank. He is suddenly stricken with illness and hides. He dodges Billie for several days but at last they meet and renew their pledge of love. Jack's "wife" arrives at this inopportune moment and he is "in bad" on both sides. Several amusing incidents occur when Jack attempts to keep his "wife" and his old sweetheart from meeting each other. Finally his wife denounces him and tells all present that he is her husband. Just at this moment her first husband arrives with a detective and arrests her for bigamy, thus making Jack's marriage illegal. Jack's trouble ends when he is forgiven by Billie and her father and he is given another chance to make good.

BIG "U."

THE OLD TUTOR (April 13).—Charles Stanton, a choleric old man, is warned by his doctor that sudden excitement may prove fatal to him. The old gentleman is anxious that his daughter marry well and chooses as a suitor for her a man nearly his own age, to whom he owes considerable money. The daughter, however, refuses the match, being in love with a younger man.

Upon her request, her sweetheart goes to her father to ask for her hand. This request so angers the old man that he dies in a fit of passion. His two children are left penniless. Their only remaining friend is their old tutor, who does his best to care for them. He secures a position as teacher in a country school, but on account of his age and infirmities, is unable to maintain discipline in the school and the post is taken away from him.

Ralph, the sweetheart of Agnes, who in the meantime, has gone away attempting to forget her, returns and on meeting the tutor learns of their impoverished condition. He buys a book store and sets the old man up in business, thus saving him the humiliation of depending upon another. In the end, he wins the girl and the story ends happily.

THE TROUBADOUR (Two Parts—April 15). Torquessa, a convent girl, has attracted the attention of Doyle Shannon, a bully, despite the fact that he knows that she and Joe are in love with each other. Shannon abducts Torquessa, leaving Joe heartbroken. A year later Joe, by accident, discovers Torquessa's whereabouts and finds her in a hut with a little newly-born baby, deserted by Shannon. Shannon, upon learning that Joe knows of his crime, has the latter indicted under the Mann White Slave Act. Joe's innocent complicity in caring for Torquessa, gives the authorities sufficient grounds for the application of the act.

Joe is brought to trial and in his desire to shield Torquessa states to the Court that she is his wife. As this is manifestly a lie, he is about to be convicted by the jury when in a fit of rage he shoots down Shannon, thus prejudicing the case against him still further. Torquessa, learning of Joe's peril, attends the trial with her little baby, and the sudden knowledge that he is a father superseding the evil in Shannon's nature, he makes a full confession of his crime, exonerating Joe. Joe and Torquessa are married.

WHEN THE "SPIDER" TORE LOOSE (April 14).—The Spider, an old jail bird, learns on being released from the penitentiary, that a slum worker, Helen Arnold, has been taking care of his wife, and also that she has rescued Amy Gray, a girl of the slums, from Gyp Carter, a noted crook. That night Spider, returning to his old trade, attempts to break into the home of Thomas Arnold, Helen's father.

In the meantime, Gyp, who plans upon again getting Amy into his clutches, telephones a frame-up, intended to bring Helen down to Spider's house. There Gyp and a pal kidnap her and convey her into a room in a near-by saloon, where he attempts to wreak his revenge upon her. The Spider, surprised in the act of burglary, learns through Amy of the telephone message to Helen. Quickly sensing Helen's peril, he snatches the gun from old Arnold's hand and hastens to Helen's rescue.

In the bar-room, at the back of which Helen is held prisoner by Gyp and his pal, Spider is stopped by the bartender, but by a clever ruse distracts the bartender's attention and breaks a bottle of liquor over his head. Spider gains the room above, and in a desperate fight with Gyp and his pal, rescues Helen. Arnold, Amy and the officers of the law arrive soon after. Gyp and his pal are made prisoners, and old Arnold's interest and financial assistance are enlisted in the sympathy of those who live in the slums.

THE THINGS IN THE BOTTOM DRAWER (April 18).—Mary, the daughter of the wealthy Mrs. Van Stark, married against her mother's wishes. As the story opens, the young couple are found in humble quarters with a sick child upon their hands. Their physician informs them that the baby's life cannot be saved without an expensive operation. As they have no money, Mary decides to visit her mother and pleads with her to assist them.

Mrs. Van Stark absolutely refuses to assist the girl unless she parts from her worthless husband and returns home. This Mary will not do and her mother thereupon refuses to give her aid. The child dies and its tiny clothes are placed in the bottom drawer of their humble little bureau. John, her husband, endeavors to obtain employment, but is unsuccessful. He is tempted to drink and falls. This leads to a separation and Mary returns to her mother who endeavors to interest her in Alberts, a foppish society man, really her own ally in connection with crooked society bridge games.

Mary's husband works hard and becomes successful. Later he joins a fashionable club. The man Mary's mother has chosen as her future husband meets him at the club and twits him with the threatened divorce proceedings, and boasts that he is to be the next one to possess Mary's heart. John is angered and knocks Alberts down. Mary thinks of the past and goes back to her humble little home. As she sits in the moonlight fondling her baby's clothes in the bottom drawer, her husband, John, who also has been thinking of the past, enters. He finds her crying over the clothes of her dead child. He calls to her softly and Mary casts herself into his open arms.

OLIVE'S HERO (April 1).—Tiny Olive has just been presented with the most wonderful kewpie in the world. She fondles it and kisses it. Suddenly she remembers that she has an engagement with her beau and commences to primp up, first slipping kewpie in her belt. Soon little Jimmy arrives and she shows him her wonderful kewpie. He admires it and stands it against a tree. In another part of the orchard is Skinny trying very hard to win the heart of beautiful Rose. But Rose will have none of him. He sees the beautiful kewpie reclining against the tree and determines to steal it and present it to Rose thereby gaining her favor.

Olive is broken-hearted and asks her "hero" to rescue her kewpie. There is a merry chase after Skinny who finally is cornered on a bridge. He spitefully throws kewpie in the river. Jimmy finds a rope and rescues the dollie and soon they are on their merry way. But the villain still pursued them.

And before they know it, kewpie is resting peacefully on the waves of the lake. Nothing daunted, our "hero" hastily slips off his outer clothing and before you can say Jack Robinson is in the water. But he soon finds that he cannot swim and just in the knick of time Skinny appears on the scene and rescues both kewpie and Jimmy. All are happy.

SWAN LIFE (On Same Reel as Above).—A scene showing the graceful swan swimming up the lake, Nest and eggs and then the tiny hatchlings just coming to life. The first swimming lesson shows the hatchlings being shoved into the lake by their mother. The little fuzzy beings take to the water "like ducks" and soon are scampering away with their haughty and beautiful mother floating majestically behind.

A scene showing swan life in the autumn. The lake is very rough and the swans fly hastily away from the apparent danger.

THE FATAL NOTE (April 7).—The wedding dinner would have gone off without a hitch had not the disappointed rival been present. He attempted to make disparaging remarks about the groom on a note, and pass it under the table to the bride. The groom got it, and wrote back for the rival to meet him across the hall. The rival thought it was the bride, and went gladly. He discovered his mistake when the groom followed him over and locked the door behind him.

Dumb bells, weights and other physical culture paraphernalia were some of the things with which the groom intended to chastise the rival. The rival, however, had some undiscovered bumps of muscle and the groom instead of punishing him, had to flee for his life. A man with the gout, a lady with a jealous husband, and a fire hose, were some of the impedimenta which delayed the groom's flight. These delays were also fatal to the bride's family, as they were drawn into the unpleasantness and things happened which were not quite proper at weddings.

UNDER THE TABLE (Two Parts—April 14).—Young husband and wifey had a quarrel right after the honeymoon. Hubby went out in the park and flirted with a lady who had black eyes. The lady was his mother-in-law, but he didn't know it. For spite, wifey also indulged in a flirtation and landed a doubtful looking fellow by the name of Hank.

Hank's wife also got into the flirting fest and picked up wifey's father. The whole crowd went to dine, but unfortunately picked out the same cabaret. In cabarets the logical place to hide is under the table, but when the six of them attempted to hide from one another under

THE WAY HE WON THE WIDOW (April 17).—The widow will not accept the drummer's proposal of marriage because he is "too sporty." She prefers old Doc. Smart. Now the widow has a son Aggie. She has made an awful pet of this poor chap, keeping him in short trousers and frills long after his twenty-first birthday. When Aggie shows the slightest sign of sickness, mamma is thrown into hysterics with worry. Aggie is now taken mysteriously ill. Doc. Smart is frantically called in. He shakes his head gravely and bundles the "dear boy" in heaps of blankets and feeds him awful medicine. The drummer calls. He also examines Aggie. "What your precious darling needs," he says, "is exercise." The widow is indignant and horrified at his suggestions. She shows the drummer the door.

The next day, however, the drummer gets his chance when Aggie is wheeled into the park by his nurse "to take the air." He hires some tough boys to abuse Aggie until they arouse the latter's ire. The scheme works. The drummer "happens along." "If I only knew boxing, I'd knock their horrid heads off," cries Aggie. This is what the drummer wants. He sneaks Aggie to his room and starts instructing the lad in the art of boxing and exercising until after a few weeks, he develops Aggie into a whirlwind.

Later, while the drummer and Aggie are attending a prize fight, Aggie has a bout with one of the principals and covers himself with glory. The next day mamma reads all about it in the newspapers and faints dead away. The lad now decides he certainly prefers the drummer as his "governor." He finally lays the matter before his horrified mamma, first, however, forcibly showing "that shrimp," Doc. Smart, the door. The widow soon realizes that the drummer's methods of restoring her "pet" to health are decidedly the most effective and gladly gives him her hand.

SKIPPER SIMPSON'S DAUGHTER (April 12).—Bill and Jed call to see Nettie Simpson. Both endeavor to propose to the girl but something happens each time they are about to pop the question. Bill is right in the midst of his proposal when the door opens and a very wet and shivering stranger with a handbag enters. He is promptly kicked out by Bill who is angry at being interrupted. The stranger makes several efforts to tell his story, which finally reveals he is a distant relative of the Simpsons, and that the object of his trip is to marry Nettie Simpson and thus fulfill the plans of an eccentric uncle's will.

Both Jed and Bill unite to crush this now common enemy. Nettie, though in love with Artemus, refuses to marry him as long as there is money involved. However, her stern father finally makes her accede to the wedding, and the wedding morn dawns with Jed and Bill arranging to play their last card. Artemus, too, has a change of heart and decides to leave and let Nettie marry whom she will. Bill and Jed kidnap the bridegroom and take him to an island in the harbor, where they are going to leave him get off as best he can. They, in the meantime, have persuaded a tramp to go to the Simpson house and pose as the real Artemus Boggs.

A note to this effect and presumably coming from Artemus's father, convinces the skipper. To her horror, Nettie realizes she must marry this awful looking tramp. However, the plans of Jed and Bill go wrong, and Boggs, escaping from them, leaves them on the island in place of himself. Nettie rushes away from the house and meets Artemus, who has escaped from the island and, knowing that only Bill and Jed can set them right with the skipper, they row out to the island and offer to take them off if they will confess to the skipper that the tramp stunt was a frame up. This they agree to do, the tramp is thrown out and Nettie marries Artemus in spite of the enemy.

THE STREETS OF MAKE BELIEVE (April 12).—Wall, who works behind the counter of a dry goods store, one day waits on Willie Astorbilt, who, when asked where to send his purchase, gives Wall his card. Wall puts it in his pocket and forgets about it, as his mind is just then occupied by one of the clerks who asks him to take down the articles in the next day's reduction sale. Wall, having no paper, writes the note on his cuff. On his way home that night he meets Katherine just as she is getting out of an automobile belonging to a chauffeur friend of her's. Wall thinking her an heiress, manages to scrape an acquaintance with her and, giving her the card he had received from Astorbilt, poses as that wealthy individual.

On his arrival home he puts his shirt in the laundry and Katherine who works in the laundry which Wall patronizes, sees the add, that he had written on his cuff and decides to take advantage of it. The next day she goes to the store and the first person she sees behind the counter is Wall. She leaves in disgust without buying anything. Wall, when he receives his laundry back, finds a note in it saying that the sender will take advantage of the information on the cuff. Wall goes to the laundry to expostulate about it and finds, bending over the wash tub, the girl of his dreams. Both exchange recriminations and accusations, which eventually lead to friendship and then love.

THE BOMBAY BUDDHA (Three Parts—April 16).—Barnard Powers, with two servants, enters his library after being aroused by a noise, to find his safe rifled. He sees a figure disappear through the window. Powers' revolver shots evidently have no effect. Powers advises the Absolute Protection Company in the morning that his golden statue of Buddha, which he insured with them for $100,000, has been stolen. Duval, the company's investigator, is mystified by seeing a number of Hindoos lurking about Powers' house, and also by the actions of Powers and his wife, who signal to each other when talking to him. Duval discovers that the revolver which Powers had used in shooting at the burglars contained blank cartridges.

Powers, while reading in his library, is spirited away by Duval and his men. Duval locks himself in Powers' bedroom. In the night, the leader of the Hindoos enters through the window. A fight takes place and the Hindoo escapes. Mrs. Powers, alarmed by the noise of the struggles, is told by Duval, who imitates Powers' voice, to see if the Buddha is safe. Duval, tracking her through the house, is astonished to see her fishing in the conservatory pool for the Buddha.

Powers is returned to his seat in the library by the detectives and gradually recovers consciousness. He is told by his wife that the Buddha is still safe. After going to bed, Mrs. Powers, nervous and restless, cannot sleep. To reassure herself, she goes to her husband's room. The room is a wreck. Powers is gone. In the hands of the Hindoos, Powers tells them that the Buddha has been stolen. At the pistol point they force him to telephone to his wife, and tell her to come to their rooms. Mrs. Powers arrives and also is made a prisoner.

Failing to force either prisoner to tell where they have hidden the Buddha, Powers is tortured. Mrs. Powers collapses under the racking strain of seeing a red hot iron about to burn out her husband's eyes, and confesses. Powers leads the Hindoos to his home and into the conservatory. Powers and his wife, grimly watched by the Hindoos, fish for the Buddha buried in the sand of the fountain. It is not there! Then the fountain figure jumps into life.

Duval's wet hands slips manacles on the husband and wife's wrists, while from the adjoining rooms rush policemen who give savage battle to the Hindoos and finally beat them into submission.

Then it comes to light that the Buddha, hidden by Mrs. Powers to effect the insurance swindle, had in turn been stolen from the Hindoos, who were wanted by the Bombay police for stealing it from the Scientific Institute in that city.

THE DOORWAY OF DESTRUCTION (Two Parts—April 17).—Colonel Freeney, his three brothers and their Irish regiment are stationed in India. The Irish regiment is the butt of all of the jokes of the other regiments. The general in particular has it in for Patrick because his daughter is in love with the young Irishman. The boys of the Irish regiment get a flag from "Dear Old Ireland" made by the loving hands of their mother and blessed by the old priest. The general's daughter insists upon flirting with the Colonel and is called down by her father. Angered, she goes to the Colonel's quarters, finds the well-loved flag of the boys on the wall, where the boys have placed it in the most conspicuous place. She pulls the flag down, throws it on the floor and sneers at the Colonel for hanging it up. She starts to trample on the flag when the boys come in and interfere. The Colonel takes the flag from her and puts it in his coat. The general orders him to be taken to the guard house.

Just at this time, a message arrives telling of the Sepoy Rebellion. The general tells the three to go and sends the Colonel to get his Irish regiment. All the other troops are massed except the Irish regiment. Finally all arrive and they set out to the relief of the stricken city. The English troops are sent on but cannot take the city gate. The general knows that the gate is almost impossible to take but sends the Irish regiment in, anyway. The gallant boys of "Old Erin" make three brave attempts but are forced to fall back. The general sends them a message not to return unless they take the gate. The Irish regiment makes another charge down the hill, falling right and left, and the line wavers. Patrick pulls out the flag and, waving it in the breeze, cheers his men on to redoubled efforts. The boys break the gate down, march in and give relief to the handful of people inside the walls.

Patrick places the flag above the door of the town, turns around and says, "March in, you cowardly devils, the Irish have laid the carpet for you." The story ends with the general, repentant, praising the Irish regiment. His daughter takes it upon herself to cheer the gallant Colonel and is ordered by her father to "capture" him.

WILD IRISH ROSE (Two Parts—April 13).—Rose Farley is a free-hearted Irish girl with slight regard for the conventions and other people's feelings. Upon the suggestion of the Rev. Thomas Noland, she is sent to an Irish country school for some sort of an education. Captain Roderick Allen, the new master of Wild Craig Manor, who lives near the school Rose is attending, arrives in the village. He meets Rose Farley, and is struck with her beauty. Rose has an unwelcome suitor in Terence McCoy, who pursues her and endeavors to force his unwelcome attentions upon her at every opportunity. She manages to keep him in his place, however, and her love affair with Captain Allen progresses. A cloud, however, rests over Captain Allen's life. His wife is insane and confined in an asylum. Her death is hourly expected, but finally the Captain receives a message stating that she will live on indefinitely. He tells Rose of the news that he has just received. She is, of course, broken hearted and he suffering, too, and anxious to be away from the old things, secretly leaves the manor.

Her great sorrow so affects Rose that she becomes nearly mad and wanders about the grounds of the manor in a daze. The village priest advises her to drop her apparently unworthy love and accept the attentions of Terence McCoy, who, he says, is not an altogether undesirable match, being wealthy in the world's goods as compared with his neighbors. Squireen McCoy hits upon a fiendish plan for winning Rose. He forges a letter addressed to himself, purporting to have come from one of the Captain's servants, bearing the news of the master's death. He contrives to introduce this false communication at an opportune moment, but it only serves to renew the old grief on the part of the girl.

McCoy conspires with Shaun, the carrier, who has been the victim of many of Rose's childish pranks and together they frame up a scheme. Shaun is about to have her arrested, when McCoy gallantly offers to assume the responsibility and save Rose. They arouse no feeling in her heart, however, but her willpower finally breaks down. The day for their wedding is set and the priest is ready to begin the ceremony.

Great is the consternation of all, however, when Captain Allen suddenly arrives. He tells Rose of his insane wife's death and again pleads his love for Rose. All is finally explained and Rose turns to her old lover. The old aunt does not like the Captain and is about to put an Irish curse upon her niece. The old priest finally dissuades her, however, and blesses the two happy re-united lovers.

SAVED BY A DREAM (Two Parts—April 12).—Lucien Archer, Jr., is in love with a girl of his own social set. While walking along the avenue, he loses his wallet which is found by the maid of Cora du Ford, a woman of questionable character. Cora's maid brings the wallet to her mistress, who, after finding the rating of young Archer in the Blue Book, decides to return the wallet, in order that she may relieve young Archer of some of his wealth. Young Archer, much ashamed of his visit to Cora, asks his father for a great deal of money. He calls and, much to his surprise, finds a beautiful woman entirely different from the unsophisticated girl whom his father would have him marry. He falls desperately in love while the woman leads him on and invites him to call again. Lucien pays another visit to Cora's after extracting from his father quite a large sum of money.

Lucien inquires of Cora the manner of her living and she takes him to her gambling room. Lucien is induced to play. He loses heavily. Cora, seeing her mistake, suggests that he never come back again. After a farewell kiss, in which Lucien takes her picture from her dressing table, he leaves. Upon arriving home, much to his surprise, he finds his father awaiting his arrival. His father upbraids him for coming home so late and in such a condition. Seeing the photo of the woman in his hand, he again tells his son the woman's reputation and forbids him seeing her again.

Quite an argument ensues, in which Lucien, Jr., is struck by his father and sent to his room, where he falls asleep and dreams the following: He sees Cora in her true light. He calls and tells her his father has cut him off. At first she is impatient, but upon second thought tells him she will marry him if he secures from his father's safe all the money therein. He is horrified, but so much in love that when she gives him the lantern, mask and a revolver, he leaves to "turn the trick."

While securing the money, his father comes in and switches on the light and Lucien, behind the curtains, covers his father with his revolver. They struggle and his father is killed. He then goes to Cora and explains what has just taken place. She, seeing the bag of money, dopes his whiskey and he falls into a stupor. She greedily counts the money. Upon awakening, Lucien finds Cora cold to him. When she casts him aside, he becomes enraged and chokes her. Just then a detective, who has been notified by the police, is heard without. Lucien hides in Cora's bedroom. The money is hidden when the detective enters. Being satisfied that no one is there, the detective starts to go, when he takes a look around and discovers the suitcase. Lucien, hearing the struggle between the detective and Cora, shoots himself in his dream and then awakens. Realizing that it all has been a dream, he goes to his dresser and tears Cora's photo into bits.

Cora 'phones Lucien. His father goes to the conservatory to call Lucien, but when he finds the contented boy, with his young and innocent sweetheart, playing the "Sweetest Story Ever

A MAN AND HIS MONEY (April 15).—Helen Clay is engaged to marry Herbert Warren, a wealthy young bachelor, who observes no limit in his expenditures. His dinners rival the days of ancient Rome and his millions are an open sesame to all the world and its goods. Helen sees a notice of the lavish dinner given by Warren in which he is practically accused of spending his fortune foolishly. She has had a chance to observe his extravagance upon many occasions and this new feature arouses within her a feeling of disapproval not to mention disgust. She endeavors to restrain him but he only laughs away her remonstrances. One day while they are out riding, Warren mistreats a little newsboy and this demonstrates to Helen one more phase of his nature.

Returning home, she has a hot argument with her future husband when he insists upon lighting his cigar with a bank note. She breaks her engagement with Warren on the strength of what she has observed of his make up. A short while later Helen learns that her fortune is involved in a bankrupt company founded by her father. Gradually Helen and her mother sound the depths of poverty until at last they come to live in a dingy pent-up tenement room. Helen is at last forced to pawn what jewels are left to her, but is able to raise only five dollars. The note is burned at one end and she realizes that it is the same one she rescued from the ruthless hand of her one time fiancee upon the evening that the engagement was broken. She uses the bill to pay her rent for her poorly furnished quarters.

Herbert Warren visits his place of business so seldom that his employees, especially the newer ones, scarcely know him. One of these, a collector, turns over the returns which he has collected and among the money, Warren discovers the charred bill. It recalls to his mind the eventful night when he was jilted by the woman he loved. He learns from his collector Helen Clay's address and, going to her, pleads for forgiveness. A reconciliation quickly follows.

THE GIRL OF THE NIGHT (Two Parts—April 18).—Nance is rescued when a child from drunken, abusive parents by Jerry, a thief with a kindly heart. Although Nance grows to womanhood in the company of crooks, she remains virtuous. Arthur Langham, a famous attorney, has obtained evidence enough against the Riley gang, of which Jerry is a member, to send them all to the penitentiary. Langham's close attention to his profession causes him to neglect his wife, Enid, who drifts into a flirtation with Clyde Herndon, Langham's best friend. About this time, Jerry is arrested on a charge of burglary and the gang are in terror for fear that at Jerry's trial, Langham will produce the evidence he has accumulated. Nance visits Jerry in the jail and he induces her to go to Langham's house to steal the evidence. Nance watches outside the Langham home and, seeing the Langham's depart in their limousine for the opera, believes the time has come to secure the papers. She manages to steal them and is about to depart as she came, through the library window, when the lights are suddenly turned on and she is confronted by Langham. He compels her to return the documents and then, becoming interested in her, asks for her history. She tells him her sad story which arouses his sympathy. He makes a compact with her, agreeing to use his influence in Jerry's behalf if she and Jerry will lead better lives.

The day of the trial approaches and the gang, becoming more fearful, plot to put Langham out of the way. Nance overhears their plans to lay for him on a lonely road during a contemplated auto trip. His wife and friend also decide to take advantage of this trip and arrange an elopement. Nance determines to warn Langham by placing a note on his desk, and for this purpose she steals into his house. Hearing a noise she hides and is surprised to see Langham's wife about to depart with another man. Herndon sends the wife back for her jewels. As Mrs. Langham leaves the room, Nance confronts Herndon and accuses him of his perfidy in betraying his friend. Langham reads of Jerry's escape from jail and hastily changes his plans and returns home unexpectedly. Mrs. Langham on re-entering the library, questions Nance as to how she came there; she hears her husband's voice giving orders to a servant. She and Herndon are dumbfounded. Nance grasps the situation and takes the jewels from the wife's hands. She motions them to silence as Langham enters the room.

He is surprised to see Nance and Herndon there so late at night, but before he can question his wife, Nance steps forward and tells him a plausible story which brands her as a thief, but clears Enid and Herndon. Langham is about to give Nance up to justice when his wife intercedes for her. He yields to her entreaties and leaves her alone with Nance. The wife begs Nance to accept recompense for her great service, but Nance at first refuses. When the wife urges her to take the money to start a new life, she consents and upon her return home, she learns of Jerry's escape and that he is in waiting to see her. She goes to his hiding place, shows him the money and tells him she earned it honestly and that they will use it for a new start on the straight road. Jerry acquiesces and for the first time tells Nance of his love for her.

RELIANCE.

THE INDIAN CHANGELING (April 7).—Robert Marsh, a wealthy young rancher, has an Indian sweetheart, Nona, who bears him a child. Already, however, he has deserted her for Vera Blanchard, a girl from the east, whom he marries. They have a daughter, who is the idol of her father's heart. While hunting the rancher's gun accidentally explodes and he is stricken blind. After this his only consolation is his baby girl. When the child sickens and dies Vera is distraught between her loss and fear of its effect upon Robert; so when she finds on the doorstep an Indian baby she stifles her grief and puts the foundling in her husband's arms. The red mother dies, and the Indian girl grows up as Marsh's daughter. Years later, a great specialist comes to perform an operation upon the rancher's eyes, and the girl, who has recently discovered that she is an Indian changeling tries to go away forever. By feigning that the doctor's experiment has not been a success, Marsh, who loves Nita, as the girl is called, and guesses her intention, causes her to stay with him. Soon after this, he finds her praying, and clasping a wooden crucifix which years before he had given Nona. He tells her that she is in very fact his daughter.

STATION CONTENT (Two Parts—April 10).—"Station Content" is so called because of the happy family life of Jim Manning, the agent. The employees buy a doll for Manning's child, which, broken, is left in the station. Later, the child dies, and, trying to forget her loss, Mrs. Manning learns telegraphy and assists her husband.

Several years later, Manning becomes general manager, and "Station Content" is closed and abandoned. A busy man, the general manager neglects his social life and, overcome with loneliness, Mrs. Manning, during his absence, decides to leave him. The night he leaves for home on a special she takes a train for another city. Missing connections at a junction where there are no hotel accommodations, she is forced to drive across country to a town on Manning's line. Halted by the wreckage of a storm she seeks shelter in the abandoned "Station Content." There she discovers the broken doll. Memories bring a desire to hear the telegraph instrument again and she "cuts in" in time to hear what seems to be Manning's death warrant. A bridge has washed out and the special has left the last open telegraph station. She flags the train and saves Manning. Her presence is explained by the doll. Manning realizes his neglect and her loneliness, and determines with her to start anew.

THE JOB AND THE JEWELS (April 14).—Kid Kennedy, after serving a light sentence for burglary, resolves to go straight. When his old pal, Spider Morrissey, suggests to him that he join him in making a rich haul already planned, he refuses and Spider goes about the job alone. Kennedy reads of it and knows it is Morrissey's work. He goes to his old pal's rooms, removes the stolen jewels and that night returns them to their owner. A detective, suspicious of Morrissey, searches his den in vain. The next morning the newspapers tell how the jewels have been found on a dressing table, "evidently misplaced." Morrissey realizes that Kennedy has saved him from arrest by the detective. He goes to his friend, and tells him that he has decided to lead an honest life.

A MAN FOR ALL THAT (April 17).—An ex-convict, James Guthrie, just out of prison, with the five dollars he has been given upon his discharge, helps a wayward boy back to his home in the country. The boy's parents, in gratitude, ask Guthrie to stay with them; and Miriam, their daughter, falls in love with the newcomer. The ex-convict, unwilling to couple his name, which is disgraced, with that of the girl's, goes away, leaving her a note of farewell. On the train the state detective, who had officiated at Guthrie's discharge from prison, sees him and recognizes that he is in trouble. He wins from him the whole story. Then, persuading Guthrie

WILD LIFE PICTURES

Unquestionably the greatest hunting and outdoor picture ever produced, portraying the wild life of animals, birds and fish.

In assembling this series of pictures Mr. Salisbury has chosen only those portions that have occurred to him as having an appeal to all. No phase of wild life has been neglected in the making of this astonishing series of films. From the thrilling episodes showing the capturing alive of great mountain lions, bear, lynx and many other animals, to the visits to the breeding ground of our migratory fowl and the catching of record weight trout with a light rod, no phase of active sport has been overlooked.

to return with him to the farm, the detective tells the family the story of the young man's past, showing them that he was a victim of political grafters. At last Guthrie finds love and a home which he can accept.

ROYAL.

BURGLARS BY REQUEST (April 10).—Jones is a nervous wreck. Every noise he hears he thinks burglars are in the house. Mrs. Jones makes light of his fears, ridiculing him as a coward, and her husband thinks he will prove to her his bravery by having a friend pretend to burglarize the place. She also, to convict him of cowardice, invites a friend of hers to break into the house the same night. Before they arrive, however, a real burglar enters. He is encouraged first by the husband, then by the wife, to do his worst. Meanwhile, the two friends, masquerading as thieves, meet and attack each other. They are caught by the real crook and tied into chairs. As he is making off with the silver he is waylaid by the police, who relieve him of his booty. The thief tells the policeman that his two pals are still in Jones' house, and then escapes from the officer, who rushes to arrest the two friends. Husband and wife by now are more than satisfied—and the innocent masqueraders are acquitted.

WHEN YOUTH WON OUT (April 17).—The deacon and Mrs. Brown quarrel when children. The breach never is closed; and years later when they meet again, she a widow and he a widower, they strenuously object to the affection which has sprung up between their son and daughter. Tom, the deacon's son, induces Lillian, Mrs. Brown's daughter, to pose as a cabaret dancer. He gets his father to the cafe and Lillian flirts with him. Tom notifies Mrs. Brown. While she and the deacon are fighting it out in the restaurant, the young folks run away and are married. When the belligerent parents see how happy their children are together, they are inspired to follow suit.

HUNGARY HANK AT THE FAIR (April 24).—Hungary Hank wanders into a county fair and tries to climb the greased pole. He is not a success. But, later, the Knock Out Kid failing to show up, Hank is engaged by the management to take his place. By means of electric plates fastened to the sole of his shoes, Hank's gloves are charged, and everybody he hits he knocks flat. At last, however, the manager who operates the electric switch, falls asleep. Then Hank gets the worst of the fight. But he ends with getting even with the manager.

MAJESTIC.

THE FENCING MASTER (Two Parts—April 11).—M'sieu' La Rogue, a fencing master, conducts a salle d'arme and is raising a young nephew. A woman dies in an apartment above and her daughter, a playmate of the nephew's, is taken in by La Rogue and they grow up together. When grown, they fall in love and the girl is studying music. At the studio, the girl meets one, Marode, a roue and an expert duellist, from Paris. The nephew is a bit of a swordsman himself, being an assistant to La Rogue. Marode is attracted by the girl and seeks her favor.

The nephew hears of it and knows of Marode's character. There is a quarrel, a challenge, and Marode is to meet the boy. La Rogue has been ill and is partly paralyzed. He is wheeled in his chair to witness the duel, during which the newhew is wounded. The old man, shocked into life by the sight of his boy's hurt, rises and engages Marode in the duel and kills him. The girl and the nephew then renew their love and are married.

THE HIGHBINDERS (Two Parts—April 18).—Maggie, daughter of Pat Gallagher, a brutal saloonkeeper, to escape being forced into marriage with a bully and protege of her father's, takes refuge in a shop in Chinatown, just around the corner from her father's resort. The Chinese merchant, who has given her shelter, at last persuades her to marry him. Thus she exchanges a miserable existence for another even more repugnant. Years later finds Hop Woo, the merchant, selling his daughter by his white wife into slavery. Ah Woo's brother, over-hearing his father bartering with the highbinder, who is a member of the powerful Hip-yi-tong society, runs for help to Jack Donovan, an attractive young Irishman, who keeps a gambling hall on the borders of Chinatown. The brother shoots and kills the slave dealer. Hop Woo is suspected of the crime and visited with the "blood atonement" by the infuriated Hip-yi-tong. Ah Woo is carried away a prisoner. Her brother and Donovan, who loves the beautiful Chinese-American girl, rescues her from the Third Circle, the lowest of the underground passageways in Chinatown and later, Donovan shoots dead the hounding highbinders. Maggie, the mother, meanwhile has committed suicide. The young Irishman sells his establishment and buys a ranch, where he takes his bride, Ah Woo and her brother.

PRINCESS.

THE REFORMATION OF PETER AND PAUL (April 9).—When Betty and Bessie were children they were held up as models to the other youngsters. The tiny sisters played together so nicely, they never did anything wrong and always obeyed their parents. Their next door neighbor had two sons, Peter and Paul. They were what might be called "regular children," that is to say, they were very mischievous, preferred getting their hands dirty to having them clean. They teased the "model little girls" next door. But as the children grew older their dispositions changed. The boys stayed home and became more subdued, the girls went to college and learned a lot of things. When they finally returned home they were "worth while girls," while the boys—

Well, they wore their hair long, preferred ill-fitting clothes and their idea of a real good time was to sit and try to solve the Fourth Dimension. They never went to theaters or dances, etc., and had very few friends for this reason. It was a fortunate thing for them when Betty and Bessie returned from college. The girls were so attractive that even Peter and Paul noticed it. In their own peculiar way they began to realize that life was not all sorrow. The girls enjoyed their society immensely, probably because they were so different, and vigorously taught them to dance and enjoy autoing at fifty miles an hour. When the boys proposed marriage, it was different; but Peter and Paul reminded them that they had been "regular fellows" when they were young, and gladly consented to try and be better and livelier men. So Peter and Paul were placed on probation and when they "made good" the girls they loved consented to make them happy for life.

KOMIC.

"BILL" SERIES NO. 20—ETHEL'S DEADLY ALARM (April 4).—Mr. Hadley censures Ethel for being late for work. Ed, her admirer, purchases an alarm clock so that Ethel will get up early in the morning. In the meantime Sylves, an excitable Italian, calls on Hadley, threatening to blow him unless he discontinues the divorce case that Hadley has started for Mrs. Sylves, because of Sylves' cruelty.

Sylves hurries home, and, using the alarm clock for an infernal machine, proceeds to load it. After tying his wife so that she cannot give the alarm, Sylves leaves for Hadley's office. On his way he meets a boy who delivers the clock. By a coincidence, Ed's clock and Sylves' arrive at the same time and get into wrong hands, Ethel getting Sylves' and Hadley getting Ethel's. About this time a broken-down opera singer calls on Hadley, trying to have his contract contested, but poor Hadley thinks his mission has something to do with the plot. After much suspense and suffering on the part of Hadley, Mrs. Sylves gains her freedom and notifies the police, who arrive two minutes before the time set for the infernal machine to go off. It is hurled through a window, landing in the back of the office where Sylves is waiting to hear the result of his villainy, and he gets his just deserts.

THANHOUSER.

THE MOMENT OF SACRIFICE (Two Parts—April 13).—Col Darrell, commander of an army post, lives there with his wife and son, Clyde. The son is a West Point graduate, and lieutenant at the post. He is engaged to Grace Baily, the daughter of Major Baily, also of the post. Van Vorst, a spy, is sent by the head of a secret service bureau maintained by a foreign government in a large American city to get the plans of the army post. He meets Mrs. Darrell, and by means of some secret hold upon her induces her to introduce him to her husband and son as a great friend of a relative from the West. The plans of the fort are stolen and cannot be located, but later in an attempt to secure more data the culprit is captured and turns out to be Van Vorst. He is about to be taken away by the guards, when he demands a hearing before the Colonel and his son. When it is granted Van Vorst declares that Clyde is his son. He is disbelieved and tells them to summon Mrs. Darrell. She confirms his story and it develops that Mrs. Darrell, knowing the Colonel's desire for a son, adopted the baby of Van Vorst when the latter's wife died. Van Vorst is taken away, but the Colonel, Clyde's sweetheart and the officers stand by Clyde. The latter, however, thinks of a plan to outwit Van Vorst and secure possession of the stolen plans. In the spy's presence the officers repudiate Clyde, to the spy's great satisfaction, and when they are purposely left alone, Van Vorst gives Clyde the address of the secret bureau, where Clyde, posing as a man embittered against his country, obtains employment.

Later, Van Vorst escapes from prison, and chances to overhear the Colonel and his officers toast Clyde for his bravery, and realizes that the young man whom they honor is his own son. He arrives at the secret rendezvous just as Clyde, having secured the papers, throws off the mask and they know him for what he is. He is hemmed in by his enemies. Van Vorst has a vision of the scene at the fort, and resolves to save him.

In the fight Van Vorst is badly wounded, but help arrives in time to save Clyde, who delivers the plans to the Colonel. The spy dies, after saving his son, and having won his respect.

THE SONG OF THE HEART (Two Parts—April 20).—Arthur Von Bauer's desire to forget the death of his mother and father, brings him to New York, where he secures a position at the Garden Cabaret. Arthur's inheritance of musical genius from his father makes him a popular musician. A panic on the Stock Exchange ruins Donald Ober over night and rather than face the ruin he commits suicide, leaving the care of his invalid wife to Mignon, their daughter, whose greatest accomplishment is a wonderfully cultivated voice. Their home is sold over their heads, and Mignon realizes she must do something to provide for her mother and self and finds employment singing at the Garden Cabaret.

Arthur is working on an expression of his loneliness which he puts into music and calls it "The Song of the Heart." On the other side of the wall in the next building, Stephen Richards, a degenerate and piano player, in a low dive hears and steals Arthur's composition and has it copyrighted under the title of "A Tuneful Melody." Mignon, who has taken rooms above, also hears the song and is charmed by it. After a few days at the Garden Cabaret, the proprietor, McChesney, sees in Mignon a different sort of girl as usually inhabits his place, and he makes plans to take advantage of her, which plan is frustrated by Arthur at the cost of his and her positions. He then composes a light operetta in which is incorporated "The Song of the Heart," in which Mignon sings the leading role and makes a greater hit than the opera itself. Richards, having stolen the melody, comes forward, claims authorship, and proves by copyright his claim. Arthur loses his position. Mignon makes every endeavor to prove him innocent even to the extent of visiting the dive to plead with Richards. A few nights later a scuffle at a card table near the piano being played by Richards, a stray shot finds its way to the piano player's back. He is taken away to the hospital where he is told that he cannot live. He confesses to having stolen "The Song of the Heart," and Arthur is restored to his position, and his reward is Mignon.

SHORTY TURNS ACTOR (Two Parts—April 14).—Shorty has been taking a correspondence course in acting from a couple of crooks in Kansas City. They announce that he will shortly be featured in the great Roman spectacle "The Gladiator's Triumph" and enclose Shorty his part. Shorty retires to the barn and there rehearses his part. He is stabbing wildly at the air and speaking of his hidden crimes when the cook discovers him and brings the cowboys into the scene. They think Shorty is crazy and prepare to secure him. A couple of them lasso him from the roof, but Shorty breaks the lasso and in a terrific struggle escapes.

He joins Ketchem and Skinnem the crooks and prepares to open the show. While the show is progressing Skinnem and Ketchem sneak out and rob the general store during which Skinnem is shot by the storekeeper. Ketchem escapes with the loot, returns to the theater and places it in Shorty's grip. The sheriff has been notified and hastens to the theatre. Meanwhile some cowboys, disgusted at the performance, throw eggs at Shorty who falls back through the scenery knocking down the stage director, also the sheriff who has arrived. The sheriff angrily steps on the stage and shoots up the place but not before he and the stage director and others receive a bunch of eggs between their eyes. Ketchem escapes out the back way but sprains his ankle. He is later arrested while Shorty escapes with the money which Ketchem has placed in his grip. Shorty returns to the town of Eagle Pass, meets his old cronies and flourishing the roll of bills sets all the boys up to a drink and poses as a great actor. The picture ends showing the cowboys bestowing congratulations upon Shorty.

THE WINGED MESSENGER (Two Parts—April 8).—Jack Dow and Jim Harris, two wireless operators, are both in love with Nell Wolfe. Jack goes to sea as operator on a vessel. The ship takes fire. Jack flashes a message back to mainland. Jim Harris receives the message asking for help but withholds it, thinking that if the ship burns he will be rid of Jack Dow and be able to win Nell. The ship burns but Jack and the captain are saved. Nell, thinking Jack has been burned at sea, consents to marry Harris. On the day of the wedding, Jack and the captain arrive in the village. The captain accuses Harris of withholding the message and Harris is arrested and placed in prison. Jack and Nell are reunited.

KAY BEE.

THE ROUGHNECK (Two Parts -April 9).—Avis and Franklin Hilliard are the spoiled, over-bearing children of a wealthy father who has just died. Lord Cecil Oakleigh, a fortune hunter, is Avis' fiancee, although there is no love between them, he marrying her for her fortune and she marrying him for his title. Mr. Hilliard has left the superintendent of his mine in full charge of his fortune. Hilliard's lawyer later writes the superintendent to come to New York as soon as possible as there are many things to be straightened out. Dave Page, the superintendent, leaves for New York immediately. Among Mr. Hilliard's papers is a sealed document for Mr. Page. Upon opening this, Mr. Page finds that Hilliard has left him his entire fortune, because, he has cheated Dave's father out of his share of the mine in years gone by. Dave, although he has been snubbed unmercifully by the Hilliard children, resolves to let them go on enjoying the money and not tell them the contents of the paper. Cecil Oakleigh, however, fearful lest Avis' fortune be not so large as he expects, insists that the Hilliards demand to know the contents of the paper, and without knowledge of their lawyer, a search warrant is obtained and they go up to Dave's room and demand to see the paper. Dave puts up a fight but he is overpowered by the sleuths whom the party has brought with them. The paper is found and its true contents learned. Avis, who has come to like Dave, is stunned with grief, as also is Franklin her brother. Lord Cecil proceeds to break his engagement with Avis.

A few days later Dave calls at the Hilliard home and offers to give Avis and Franklin back the mine on the condition that the next time Avis marries she choose a man worthy of her. Avis thereupon asks Dave if he will marry her and he says he will be glad to.

THE SPIRIT OF THE BELL (Two Parts—April 2).—Miguel Galvez, a sympathizer with the Federal cause, loves Dolores, whose sympathies are with the Rebels. Dolores loves Pedro, a young ranch foreman and rebel. Pedro recruits a company of Peons and leaves with them in the interests of the Rebel cause. A week later, Miguel, at the head of a company of Federals, marches in the direction of the ranch to demand that Dolore's father deliver Dolores to him. A peon warns the Don of Miguel's approach, and Dolores is sent to the Mission for protection. Miguel reaches the ranch, kills the Don and fires the ranch house. Miguel overtakes the peon who warned the Don and makes him reveal Dolores's hiding place. The peon is bound to his horse and taken with the Federals to the Mission. Miguel demands Dolores, but the father refuses to deliver her to him. He thinks to work upon the superstitions of Miguel by placing the Sacred Bell of Santa Maria in front of the Mission gate. Dolores, gowned in white, secrets herself behind the bell and at sunset she rises from it like a spectre. The peon soldiers, thinking it the Spirit of the Bell, cease fighting. Dolores delivers herself to Miguel in order to save the women and children in the Mission. The peon prisoner, who has escaped, warns Pedro of the danger to Dolores and the Mission, and Pedro goes to their rescue. Miguel is killed and his band routed.

AMERICAN.

HIS BROTHER'S DEBT (Two Parts—April 5).—After his brother's death, Arnold Downs, to save the reputation of his brother's sweetheart, Clara Myers, marries her—though he is in love with Sada Block, his employer's daughter. Five years later finds Arnold in business for himself and Block's competitor. The father of the girl never has been able to forgive the young man for giving up his daughter for Clara, and by bribing Arnold's bookkeeper he takes his revenge in driving Downs to the verge of bankruptcy. Clara's child, who is an adept at picture puzzles, takes some torn papers from the waste basket, matches them and shows them to her mother. Clara sees by them how her husband has been underbid by Block. That night she and her father, disguised as robbers, enter Arnold's office and take the traitorous bookkeeper prisoner. They present the evidence to Arnold who is saved from failure—and husband and wife discover that they have come to love one another.

THE POET OF THE PEAKS (Two Parts—April 12).—Lydia Lovell, a heartless society butterfly, is one of the guests at Philip Granger's shooting lodge in the mountains. Perched on one of the highest peaks is a solitary cabin, the abode of Dane Strong, who from his poems, has gained the cognomen of "The Poet of the Peaks." Lydia and Granger discover Strong at his cabin door. As they climb they come upon Strong, whom Granger introduces as an old friend. Lydia, inquisitive, wants to know about the lonely man and expresses a wish to visit the cabin, but Granger, fearing the coquette's desire for admiration would ensnare the poet, refuses. Next day, Lydia pretending to lose her way, knocks at the door of the solitary cabin. Lydia accepts Strong's invitation to rest awhile and begins to spin her web to captivate the heart of the unsuspecting poet. On leaving Lydia asks permission to take a copy of Strong's poems and the poet gladly consents.

A few days later as Lydia and Strong return to the shooting lodge from a mountain climb, Lydia explains clearly to Granger how she became acquainted with the poet and after Strong has left, Granger pleads again with Lydia to leave him alone. Lydia, flattered that her power is recognized, unheeds the plea and meets the now infatuated poet daily. Not satisfied to leave her plaything to his solitude, Lydia begs him to come to the city, promising that he shall become famous and happy as well. Granger wishing to enlighten Strong to read the character of his temptress interrupts the lovers and reads a poem of John Keats which he hopes will bring Strong to his senses. Lydia, realizing the intent of the verses, indignantly leaves and Strong, bewildered, seeks the solution from Granger who tells him that she is not what she seems and to beware of her charms. Strong, beside himself with anger, declares that Granger lies and that he knows she is as good as she is lovely and then ashamed of his action goes in search of Lydia.

Upon Lydia's return to the city she writes a note to Strong begging him to come to her, and he proceeds to the city arriving at his tempter's house as she is entertaining. As Strong's card is handed to her she laughingly pushes the guests into another room saying that her "poet of the peaks" has come and she must be alone. Strong's presence prompts Granger, who is present, to again implore Lydia to stop her flirtation with the young poet. As the weeks pass by, Strong in answer to Lydia's request that he has become famous by writing more and more, tells her that he cannot do so among the dirt and noise of the city. "You say you love me," he says, "then come to the mountains where we can be happy." But Lydia, picturing herself as the wife of a rustic mountaineer, bursts into laughter. Strong in leaving Lydia's house meets Granger who invites him to his home for a quiet chat. When they are alone Granger, determined that Strong shall be saved, tells him Lydia's past. Strong deeply affected by the story, returns to Lydia's home to learn the truth, but as he approaches the window is attracted by the voice of Lydia entertaining two guests with the description of their affair. Swaying like a drunken man, Strong takes a pad from his pocket and scribbles a note saying "Goodbye. I've gone back to the mountains. Phillip Granger was right; you are LaBelle Dame Sons Marci," and returns to his solitary cabin where to his maddened brain there appears the phantom form of Lydia which he follows to the edge of a cliff and, losing his balance, falls to his death below.

BEAUTY.

PERSISTENCE WINS (April 13).—Alice Langshore, an illustrator, lives an independent, Bohemian existence in her studio, satisfied with her work, her friends, and her life generally. Peter, an architect, is in love with Alice and untiring in his endeavors to persuade her to exchange her single blessedness for a home with his protection and love. He persistently asks her to marry him and she persistently refuses. Peter is of a buoyant, determined turn, and refuses to be discouraged, each refusal only making him more sure of winning in the end and he goes on making preparations for the happy day.

Alice, becoming disgusted with the attention and importunities of a man about town, Peter's protection and devotion begin to appear in a different light and when he proposes for the twenty-third time she accepts. He produces the ring and the marriage license and she is offended at his assurance but when she argues that they will have to find a home first, he produces a rental list and rushes her off to look at the houses. They find a little bungalow. Alice contrasts it with her luxurious studio and begins to have misgivings. Peter is delighted with everything which means Alice and a home to him. Returning to her studio, Alice decides she cannot give up her freedom and comfort and sends Peter a note, enclosing his ring. She then goes out to celebrate her freedom, writing a couple of her Bohemian friends. The cigarettes and cocktails of Miss Oldham, a bachelor woman, no longer appeal to Alice and she finds Helen Armstrong unhappy because nobody loves her. Then Alice goes to her friend, Mary Benton, who is happily married with a good husband and a baby. She tells Mary she has thrown Peter over, and Mary points to her happy home and family and urges Alice not to make a mistake. Alice decides again for Peter and the home and tries to get Peter on the 'phone, but cannot find him. She fears that he has committed suicide and rushes out distractedly. She goes on blindly until she comes to the bungalow where she finds Peter fixing up the house as though nothing had happened. Alice's revulsion of feeling has been so strong that she takes no chances on losing Peter this time, and drags him off instantly, without his coat, to the minister and they are married on the door step.

THE LONG SHIFT (Two Parts—Ideal—April 5).—Hughes is a gigantic Welshman who lives with his mother and little daughter, having lost his wife through a serious illness. Miller, his assistant, is a young American, athletic, and a good miner who is engaged to Bessie Evers a mine foreman's daughter. Both men are employed in the same mine.

Bessie is very fond of Hughes' little girl. One day Hughes happens along just in time to rescue Bess from the embraces of a drunken Mexican and immediately he falls in love with the pretty girl. He despairs upon learning that she is already engaged to Miller and soon finds hatred creeping into his heart for the young American, causing a breach between them.

Hughes' little girl goes to feed the mascot of the mine, a mother cat, and lingers to play with the kittens. An accident occurs in which a fuse prematurely explodes, imprisoning the little girl and many of the miners. All of the miners become exhausted in their struggle for freedom except Hughes and Miller, who work untiring until at last the way is opened. In their combined effort to preserve human life, the hatred vanishes and the two men become close friends.

THE MASQUERADERS (Superba—April 6).—Harry calls on his sweetheart, and unsolicited Lillie proceeds to entertain him by singing and playing the piano. This is disconcerting to Harry and he persuades her to accompany him to the home of their friends, Mae and Joe Joe and Lillie show a more than passing interest in each other, and Joe schemes to put one over by taking her to a masquerade. Harry learns of this and hurries to the hall with Mae on his arm. He recognizes Joe in the guise of a convict. A fight follows and Joe makes his way through the crowd and runs down the street with Harry at his heels.

In the meantime a real convict has escaped and is being followed by the guards. A lively chase follows in which the real convict finds Harry overcome by exhaustion and changes clothing with him. Later, he knocks down a policeman and repeats the performance. Tradesmen, women and children, who are following, land in a heap before matters are finally straightened out and Harry and Joe are carried to a nearby doctor. Well bandaged they return to their loves, but are handed the cold shoulder so they proceed to drown their sorrows together in a way which assures many a laugh to the audience.

THE HAUNTING EYE (Premier—April 6).—The political boss in an Eastern city learns that Malcolm Blevins, a district attorney is going to the West to draw up a report of incriminating evidence of the graft conditions of his city. Realizing that such a report would be detrimental to himself and his partners in crime he commissions Fred to obtain the report and to silence Blevins forever.

Lillian has two suitors, Fred and Jay, and after much consideration accepts Fred. Later, her father is mystified by the sudden disappearance of the report which he had placed in his safe. Seated in his office he feels conscious of the close proximity of another. Without changing his position, he grasps his revolver and wheels around just as a hand, which holds a dagger is projected through a picture hanging on the wall. He fires several shots. Lillian, who has fallen in a well while going to the sheriff for her father, and has crawled through a tunnel, comes upon a door she never noticed before, which she enters just as the shots are fired. She is shot but not seriously wounded. Fred, having received a mortal wound, smiles up to Lillian and confesses that he was sent to follow Blevins, and recommends her to Jay's loving care.

TAINTED BLOOD (Grandin, Two Parts—April 7).—Mrs. Van De Water gives a coming-out ball for her daughter, at which Crayton Coombs, a millionaire roue with an incurable disease meets and falls in love with the girl. The mother is flattered at the match with the millionaire, and though both Ethel and Dr. Holt, Coombs' physician, beseech the mother to break off the engagement. Mrs. Van insists on the wedding taking place. Dr. Howard, Holt's assistant is one day summoned to take care of Ethel who is ill, and the two are mutually attracted. Later Howard is called to a tenement district where he cares for Helen Grayson, the divorced wife of Coombs. He tells her of Coombs' approaching marriage, and she promises her assistance in helping him to win Ethel. After the marriage with Coombs, Ethel is taken to her husband's country home, and that night, when he is sitting all alone in front of the fireplace, his former wife appears, and after recalling their own wedding and telling him what a beast he has grown to be, advises double suicide. The frightened man consents, and soon after Ethel discovers the two dead bodies before the fireplace. She is then free to marry Dr. Howard. Ethel Grandin featured.

LOVE'S LUNACY (Starlight April 8).—Elsie, the central figure in a sensational runaway, is heroically and acrobatically rescued by a weird Dutchman. Elsie falls desperately in love with her heroic rescuer. Elsie's parents are determined to marry her to a millionaire scoundrel, while poor Dutchy is possessor of only a small bundle of trading stamps and a she dog. Elsie is locked up in Pa's private prison, she communicates with her hero by aid of a pet goose which carries messages back and forth. At the fatal wedding hour Dutchy, like Lochinvar tears the bride from under the nose of the groom. A dare devil escape. The leading parts are played by James Aubrey and Viola Brown.

PRETTY POLICEMAN (Luna—April 8).—Thinking it is time for women to mix into the police force, Mrs. Smith leaves hubby at home to care for the two babies, and Miss Burton, the old maid, says goodbye to her parrot and goes to the police headquarters for orders. Mrs. Smith is assigned to a fashionable district where she saves two girls from the clutches of a drunken brute, and succeeds, after a severe struggle, in landing him in jail.

In the meantime, Miss Smith trips over a little newsboy in her flight from two thieves in the lumberyard which she is policing. She hauls the boy into court, and is severely criticised for her pains. Their beats are exchanged by the sergeant. While parading Wilshire Boulevard in the fashionable district, Miss Burton recognizes the two thieves she escaped from the night before in the lumber yard. She follows them in to a house they are about to rob, is overcome with fright, and is left in an unconscious state by the robbers with a pile of dishes in her lap. She is discovered when the dishes fall and the police are sent for.

Mrs. Smith succeeds in handcuffing the robbers when they return with their loot to the lumber yards and on their arrival at the police station they are called upon to exonerate Miss Burton who has been put under arrest. Miss Burton leaves in disgrace. Mrs. Smith is the lion of the hour, but while she is being treated to a smoke, hubby rushes into the station, pushes the babies into her arms, and proceeds to tear up the police force. Mrs. Smith leaves. So does Mr. Smith. Miss Burton comes back with plunder from the thieves' den, and hands in her resignation in spite of an enthusiastic reception from the sergeant.

FOR A THOUSAND DOLLARS—(Premier—April 11).—Lillian learns that her father is short of money, and finds that a payment on his cattle will soon be due. So when she finds that Fred, a stranger whom she meets and becomes fascinated with, meets the exact description of an outlaw for whom a reward has been offered, she decides that causing his arrest and obtaining the reward will be the only way to save her father. She leads the sheriff to Fred, who confesses his guilt and a little later the reward is turned over to Lillian. But that night her conscience troubles her, knowng that Fred will be sternly dealt with. She manages to obtain the jail keys from the sheriff unnoticed, and releasing Fred, tells him to leave the country.

The following morning Lillian informs her father of what she has done, and while he does not blame her he realizes that the reward money must be returned. He and Lillian go to the jail, where the sheriff has just entered. They find Fred calmly smoking and behind the bars is another man—the real outlaw. Fred explains that he is a special deputy of another county, where he intends to take the outlaw, and with her consent he takes Lillian, too.

TICKET OF LEAVE MAN (Suberba—March 30).—Jack Dalton and Moses are known as slick professional crooks. They frequent a cabaret in which Lizzie is compelled to dance for her maintenance. Charlie arrives in the "Great City" with his carpet bag. With the idea of being real devilish, he visits the cabaret. He is the source of much amusement to the patrons. When he pays for his unfinished drink, he discloses a bandana handkerchief in which are rolled a quantity of bills, much to the interest of Dalton and his partner. Dalton, ever scheming, asks Charlie to change a $100 bill. Charlie, believing this to be legitimate, does so. Upon paying for Lizzie's drink he is arrested for handling counterfeit money. During his sojourn in the jail he becomes friendly with his jailer, and in a poker game wins the jailer's watch, his hat, then his coat and finally his freedom. He passes Lizzie's home just as the poor girl is about to be dispossessed. He proposes to her and she readily accepts him. Just as the ceremony is about to be performed Charlie as suddenly called away. Lizzie is heartbroken, but after many amazing incidents, she finds him and they are married.

OH! YOU POPP! (Starlight—April 1).—A mischievous boy, who is always causing trouble, pretends to have a sore arm and asks a worthy citizen to ring a door bell. The worthy citizen soon learns, to his discomfort, that the inmates of the house are tired of the boy's nonsense and he is the recipient of certain articles meant for the boy, which, of course, tickles the lad.

Ten years pass. The boy, a fine looking young man, falls in love with a girl and, upon being told to "ask papa," confronts the aforementioned worthy citizen who immediately recognizes the mischievous boy, who is unceremoniously ushered out. To gain access to the house he disguises himself as a handsome young widow and is annoyed to find the worthy citizen becoming "mushy." Many ludicrous complications arise, and the young man experiences grave difficulties before he finally wins the fair damsel's hand.

KRITERION SERVICE.

[The following are synopses of the pictures to be released on the Kriterion Program During the Week of Monday, March 29, to Saturday, April 3, inclusive].

THE COWBOY'S SWEETHEART (Two Parts—Kriterion).—Jim Lawson, a cowboy, visits the city and is trapped in a saloon by a bunch of gamblers. In a brawl which follows, Lawson is shot and wounded in the shoulder. He is taken to the hospital and there nursed back to health by Mary Denny. While convalescing, he tells Mary about the West and when the time arrives for Jim to leave the hospital the girl has fallen in love with the cowboy. Jim returns to the West and secures a position on a ranch as cowboy and through his skill and ability, gains the jealousy of the foreman on the place.

The ranchowner's wife becomes ill and Mary is sent for to take care of her. Mary arrives and she and Jim meet again. Jim and the foreman get into a quarrel from which Jim comes out victorious. The foreman is discharged and Jim put in his place. The ranchowner's wife recovers, and Mary's duties are

SURE SIGNS OF SUCCESS

When those petty schemers who prey on the popularity of a big Company's proposition come out and deliberately use that big Company's thunder, it is convincing proof that that Company must be big or its thunder would not be worth using.

Petty pirates are at work using the name "KRITERION" in connection with motion picture enterprises that have absolutely no connection with the KRITERION FILM CORPORATION which issues the

"DECIDEDLY DISTINCTIVE KRITERION SERVICE"

They are not fooling the exhibitor who has been watching the growth of "KRITERION" and its releases. These concerns are foisting a few commercial reels on a few unsuspecting theatre owners. But, with the fame that is preceding KRITERION pictures all over the country, it is evident that these petty pirates have nothing but the name—they cannot deliver the KRITERION goods in the honest KRITERION way.

A WORD OF WARNING

is all that this is intended to be to those exhibitors who really want the high-class "KRITERION SERVICE." We advise them if they are in doubt, to first write this office and we will refer their inquiry to the proper exchange.

over, but Jim resolves not to let Mary get away from him again. As prospects look good for him, he proposes to her and the two are married.

IRRESPONSIBLE SYD (C K).—Syd's wife asks him to feed the hog. He carefully places his cigar on the edge of the windowsill and does as he is bid. On his return to the house, he is greeted with the dishwater which his wife is just throwing out, and after an argument, Syd goes in to resume his smoke. His wife, seeing smoke coming out of the window, thinks the house is on fire and rushes for a bucketful of water which she throws in on Syd. Then they discover that the curtains have caught fire, and both run for more water. A nearby cop, seeing the smoke, arrives on the spot in time to get a good drenching and after a lively little spat between him and Syd, the cop is finally thrown out of the place.

Syd's wife then starts him out to buy a new pair of curtains. On the way, Syd meets a friend who is going fishing, and forgets all about the curtains and joins his friend. While waiting for his friend, who has gone to get some bait, a lady friend leaves her baby with Syd, asking him to mind it till she does some shopping. Syd's friend comes back and together they march off, taking the baby along with them. The mother returns, and misses her child and runs to Syd's house. She and Syd's wife start out on the warpath to find Syd, and arrive on the scene just in time to see the baby-buggy go over the edge of the pier. The mother faints and Syd makes a dive into the water to save the child, but comes ashore with no baby. While they are trying to comfort the mother, along comes Syd's friend holding the baby and explains that he had taken it out of the carriage and laid it in a shady place to sleep. The mother grabs the child, while Syd and the cop gives the friend a pommeling for having caused so much excitement.

A SMUGGLER'S LOVE (Alhambra — Two Parts).—John Kingsley while passing through a small fishing village meets a young fisher lass, with whom he falls in love and later marries. He insists that the marriage be kept secret owing to a stipulation in the will of his father, and for a time the two are happy. Business calls him back to the city and as time passes, he forgets his bride, who in his absence has given birth to a baby girl. The townspeople look upon her with contempt as they do not know of the secret marriage, with the exception of Luke Martin, a smuggler, who has been in love with her for many years. He takes the young mother and her baby and sees that they are well taken care of. One day while shipping smuggled cargo, he is attacked by revenue officers and leads them a chase. They fire several shots after him and a stray bullet hits the young mother who is killed. Snatching up the baby, Martin makes his escape and takes the child to a convent, where he leaves it to be educated.

Years pass, and Kingsley having learned of his wife's death, marries again and lives in luxury with his new wife, their two children and an adopted son, Tom Walsh. The little girl has now grown to womanhood and leaves the convent. She goes to the fishing village to seek Martin but is told that he is not there. She then goes to the city to seek employment. By coincidence, she secures a position in the Kingsley family as a governess. The family goes to the seashore on a vacation and while strolling with Tom, who has fallen in love with her, the girl comes upon the grave of her mother, and finds Martin bending over it. Kingsley comes to look for her, meets Martin and they recognize each other and explanations follow. Kingsley is told that the girl is his daughter, and he begs for forgiveness for her mother's neglect, swearing he will do everything to make her happy. Later, Tom and the girl are maried and all live very happily.

A MOTHER'S AWAKENING (Two Parts—C-K).—Thelma Monsby is in love with Agnes Cameron but her father, who is in financial difficulties and who has borrowed money from Jack Davenport, a wealthy young man who is in love with Thelma, is anxious that she marry Davenport. Finally, the girl's parents persuade her to accept Davenport and Thelma and he are married. Thelma, however, is not happy, even after the birth of her little girl, and does not take an interest in her home ties. She persists in going out into society frequently, and continues to accept the attentions of her former lover, Cameron.

On one occasion she wishes to go to a dance, but her husband pleads a toothache as an excuse to stay at home, whereupon she calls up Cameron and asks him to take her. That evening, Cameron calls and takes her to the affair. After she has gone, Davenport whose toothache has not grown any better, applies some poison on the gums to deaden the pain. While he is otherwise occupied, his little daughter picks up the bottle and drinks of the contents and becomes sick. A doctor is hastily summoned and through the night nurses the little one past the danger stage. Finally, the mother returns home and seeing her child almost at death's door, a sudden realization of her foolishness and the great wrong she has committed by neglecting her home duties dawns on her. As the crisis passes and her daughter extends her arms and kisses her, love is born in Thelma's heart for her husband and child, and she resolves in future to devote herself entirely to them.

THE EMIGRANT'S PERIL (Santa Barbara—Two Parts).—Donatello, an Italian musician agrees, to adopt the daughter of his friend who has died in Italy. The girl arrives and Donatello takes her to his lodgings. Julia shows great talent as a violinist and Donatello secures for her a position in the orchestra at a fashionable restaurant in which he is playing. Unknown to Julia, Donatello is at the head of a band of crooks who make it a practice to steal from wealthy people.

One night in the restaurant, Donatello steals a valuable necklace from a lady patron and places it in Julia's hair to escape detection. Frank Walsh, a man employed by the Secret Service is on the ground, and suspects the musician. He follows the two to their lodging and there, by a clever ruse, takes the place of one of the confederates. When Julia learns the true nature of her foster-father, she is shocked and determines to leave. He locks her up in a room but the next moment, Walsh enters followed by the police who capture the musician and his confederates and take them away. Walsh then liberates Julia and the two fall in love with each other, and after a short courtship are married.

WHEN BILLY STRUCK THE STAGE (Santa Barbara).—Billy is sure his girl loves him until one day when he takes her to a theater to see a show in which a particularly handsome leading man is the hero. Betty promptly gets stage-struck and falls head over heels in love with the actor. Billy finally hits on a scheme whereby he can regain her love. He applies for a position as an actor in a road company and, after a try-out, is engaged. Later, he induces the manager to give Betty a position in the same company and after some rehearsing, the company together with Billy and Betty takes to the road in search of fame and fortune.

Billy's first night, however, is not encouraging. He is greeted with dozens of cabbages, carrots and none too fresh vegetable matter, so he and Betty come to the conclusion that home is the best place after all, and take the next train back. Betty is now cured of the stage, much to Billy's delight, and she joins him in swearing "Never Again!"

THE TWO-GUN BAD MAN (Kriterion).—Handsome Fred, the boy bandit, is the thorn in the side of the village sheriff. Fred's secret abode is in an old deserted schoolhouse in the hills. Rena, a young schoolteacher, arrives to take up her work among the children of the mining people, and is escorted to her new home—the schoolhouse—by the sheriff. On their arrival there, he tries to make love to her and attempts to kiss her, but is foiled by the sudden appearance of Fred and his brace of forty-fours. Angrily, the sheriff leaves, vowing vengeance, while Rena, who has fallen in love with Handsome Fred, thanks him for his brave intervention in her behalf. Fred, finding his secret hiding place will now be occupied, leaves in search of another.

Later, he is wounded in a holdup and is forced to flee for safety. Almost fainting from his wounds, he drags himself to the schoolhouse, where Rena finds him and helps him into the house. The sheriff, in pursuit, trails him and breaks into the room, but Rena has hidden Fred in the fireplace, and the sheriff searches in vain. He is about to leave, when Fred, who has inhaled quite a quantity of soot in the fireplace, suddenly sneezes. The sheriff discovers him and is about to lead him away when Rena proposes shooting craps for Handsome Fred's life. The sheriff agrees and, having won the first horse, he feels that Handsome Fred's life is his, but while Fred attracts his attention, Rena adds several dots on her dice with the aid of pen and ink and throws five sixes twice in succession. The sheriff foiled, leaves in disgust. Fred vows to reform and he and Rena saddle the pet burros and start out across the continent to a new and better life.

RENA'S PET PIRATE (Thistle).—Ed and Jake, the fathers of Rena and Fred, are lifelong friends and desire nothing more than to see their children married to each other. Rena, however, is of a romantic disposition and dreams of elopements and brave deeds, and refuses to marry Fred on the grounds that he has never done anything worth while.

Her father tells Fred to leave the matter to him, and tells him of a plan which Fred agrees to carry out. Accordingly, Rena finds a note from her father telling her he has gone to the station to meet a wicked old pirate, Admiral Fritz Rocquefort, who is to visit him on business and warning her to have nothing to do with him. Rena's curiosity and sense of the romantic is aroused and she immediately gets busy and changes around the whole aspect of the house, giving it as nautical an appearance as possible. Fred arrives disguised as the Admiral, and Rena immediately falls for him. Her father furthers the situation by refusing to let Rena have anything to do with him, but not before he has given the two a chance to plan an elopement.

Dad then phones for his friend Jake, and the two arrange with a policeman for just sufficient interference to give Fred a chance to show up well. At midnight, the elopement takes place. After Fred has valiantly overcome all obstacles, he and Rena climb into the car and drive off, the old fathers perched upon the rear of the machine, tickled to death. They arrive at the ministers and are married, and then Ed and Jake walk in and introduce the Admiral as his real self.—Fred. At first Rena is angry but she is satisfied that at least Fred has shown some bravery in fighting off the policeman, and they all return home well satisfied.

THE MISER OF MONTEREY (Two Parts—Monty).—A miser lives with his two daughters Mary and Ellen in a lonely little hut in the midst of a forest, far away from human beings. Frank Johnson, a young author, is spending his vacation hunting through the forest and by accident happens to be lingering about the spot where the miser has hidden his money. The miser, catching sight of him, suspects him as a thief and fires a shot at him. Johnson falls to the ground wounded, and is later found by Mary, the elder daughter of the miser, who brings him to the house, nurses his wounds and takes care of him. Under her careful attentions, he soon regains his health, but Mary, who has fallen in love with the handsome young author, looks forward with dread to the day when he must take his leave.

Johnson has fallen in love with Ellen, the younger sister, and on the day he is to go back to the city, he tells her of his love and begs her to be his wife on his return in a few weeks. Mary, who has quietly entered, overhears the conversation, and her heart is filled with jealousy and sorrow as she listens to Ellen accept his proposal. Johnson takes his leave and Mary succeeds in concealing her emotions. The author arrives in the city and finds that his recent books have met with tremendous success. Many women seek his attentions, but he cannot forget the little girl in the forest who has won his heart, and in due time he returns to claim her. Mary accepts her fate with resignation, and Ellen and Frank are married, neither of them dreaming that Mary is heartbroken.

THE ONLY SON (Two Parts—Trump).—Chester Crane has grown up to manhood amid luxury and every indulgence from his devoted parents, with the result that he has become selfish, lazy and wayward. His time is almost spent entirely at the club, gambling or in entertaining chorus girls. Eventually, he falls

$500.00 -- TO ANY STATE EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION -- $500.00

If we cannot show undisputable records that we received last week—March 22nd to 27th—40 orders for Mirroroide screens, all of which were sold, made and shipped. Why! Read our ad in last week's issue of World. Read the week previous. Read the ads of others.

As Good as a U. S. Gold Bond

Mirroroide is sold under a five-year guarantee, backed up by an incorporated firm with resources and capital of over $75,000.00. Manufacturing screens under the same name for over six years. We guarantee Mirroroide not to crack, peel, or deteriorate. Washable with soap and water, acetic acid, turpentine or benzine. The cloth is 3000 drill canvas, not coated window shades. Put it to the tearing test. Mirroroide imitates none—but is imitated by all.

Infringements

Insist upon—when purchasing your screen against any loss through infringement suits as Mirroroide patents are being infringed upon and action has been taken against a number of infringers or imitators.

Large, Free Samples

Mirroroide is made in two grades—medium and heavy matt. Three tints—silver white, pale gold, silver flesh. Sold at 36 1-9 cents a square foot or $3.25 a square yard. Get our large free samples. Test against any screen on earth. Manufactured under patents No. 890,101, June 9, 1908; No. 1,128,867, Feb. 10, 1915. Other patents pending.

HUGO REISINGER, 11 Broadway, New York

in love with a notorious actress, Camille Yvonne, who leads him a merry pace. The father, hearing of his son's infatuation, warns the boy, but he takes no heed of his father's words, but continues his dissipations and attentions to the actress.

Finally, the father decides he shall teach Chester a lesson. He seeks out Camille, and without concealing his identity, gets acquainted with her and soons pays her ardent attentions, showering her with presents and pretending to be her most devoted admirer. Camille is soon entirely taken up with her new "find" and forgets Chester. The boy, finding that Camille is no longer interested in him, becomes desperate and determines to end his life, but is stopped in time by his chum.

The father plays the game well and arranges that his son should appear in a private dining room at a certain time that evening. The son enters the room just as his father and Camille are in the middle of a love scene, and is terribly shocked at the sight. The father then explains that he did this only for his own good and Chester, who is now thoroughly disgusted and cured of his love with the actress, leaves the place accompanied by his father, and returns home, where all is explained and everything forgiven.

THE HIDDEN TREASURE (Alhambra). - Rena and the housekeeper are bitter enemies, both striving to win their way into the good graces of the rich old man for whom they work. When old Scroggs dies, he leaves a will to the effect that both Rena and the housekeeper can have the right to occupy the house jointly, for a period of one month, during which time they may search for his fortune, which is hidden about the premises somewhere in the form of jewels.

Rena tells her sweetheart, Fritz, the butcher boy, about the will and they frame up a way to scare the housekeeper off so that Rena might have perfect right to search as she pleases. Fritz tries various disguises, but with no success. Finally, Rena gives up hopes of finding the jewels and decides to give a series of entertainments to her friends until the month is up. Accordingly, she invites all the hired help to a party that night. Fritz, however, decides to make one more attempt to scare the old hen off and disguises himself as a burglar. He breaks into the house during the course of a dinner and surprises the housekeeper searching for the fortune. Frightened, she rushes to the kitchen to summon help, and in her absence a real burglar enters, and when they return they chase him and he lands outside of the window beside Fritz, who is hiding.

Fritz makes a hasty exit, followed by the burglar and the party behind them, and the chase around the house ends only when Fritz climbs back into the house and seizes an old blunderbuss and takes aim at the burglar. His shot goes wild and strikes an old grandfather's clock in the library, smashing it, when suddenly out of the clock falls the jewels they have been searching for. Rena enters and claims her legacy. The housekeeper recognizes in the burglar a long lost husband and is more than compensated for the loss of the jewels in finding him, while he pays the penalty of his crimes by being taken back by her. Fritz and Rena are at last able to get married and the party, already started, continues as a wedding celebration.

Who Paid? Series Number One

THE PRICE OF FAME (Three Parts).—Fame, with her scorching finger touches lightly the forhead of Youth—then flits away, intangible and elusive. Sometimes—and this is rare—Youth comes up with Fame and clasps her jealously to him. But in every case, he who seeks Fame—he who would inhale the purer air of Art, must needs shake from his shoulders the ties that bind him to the Earth. Sometimes he is alone—then it doesn't matter Sometimes he has friends, on whom it is cruel; and sometimes there is a wife, on whom it is worse than death. But here is the tale: A young singer, aglow with the fervor of inspiration, eager for the social intercourse his art may open the way to, gets married. He marries a woman whose conception of ideal happiness is simple domesticity. Opportunity comes—no need to knock, he has been waiting for her. With his wife and child clinging, as it were, to his coat-tails, he follows the Gleam, and they are cast off in the swiftness of his flight. Fame is within his grasp! For one mad moment he is identified with Her—then something snaps. With the first blatant, brass notes from his silver throat he drops automatically back to Earth, his eyes still blinded with the light of other spheres. His wife has gone; his friends have disappeared. With a heavy heart he turns back into the highway of Life, to be swallowed forever in the flux of obscure humanity.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (15th Episode—The Serpent Sign Two Parts) (April 5).—Miss Elaine Dodge, daughter and heiress of the late Taylor Dodge, whose murder has attracted such world-wide attention, has again had her life seriously threatened. It appears that before the death of Perry Bennett, this modern Dr. Jekyll disclosed the hiding-place of his tremendous fortune to one Long Sin, a Chinese adventurer. Bennett formerly owned the house now occupied by Miss Dodge's Aunt Tabby. On a recent visit to her aunt, Miss Dodge was startled in the early hours of the morning by strange noises. Her aunt had already been aware of this condition, but, being superstitious, had put it down to ghosts.

Miss Dodge, whose life has lately been one continuous round of self-defense, immediately communicated with Craig Kennedy, the scientific detective whose apprehension of the notorious Clutching Hand caused such favorable comment throughout the land. Kennedy has lately come into the possession of Bennett's papers and his keen eye detected at once the similarity of a plan on one of these and the construction of Aunt Tabby's fireplace. A secret passageway was disclosed, through which the redoubtable sleuth and his assistant descended, only to be overcome by gas, and almost murdered by Long Sin, who had entered the passage from the mouth of a cave in an adjoining woods. Miss Dodge, whose nerve has been put to the test in a hundred cases, alarmed by the fumes, and fearing for the lives of her protectors, descended to the passageway where a queer sight met her eyes.

Interviewed to-day by a Journal reporter, Miss Dodge said: "I had no sooner turned an angle in the passageway when I was almost paralyzed by the sight of Long Sin bending over Craig and Mr. Jameson with a long, murderous knife. A safe imbedded in the rock had been opened, and the Chinaman had a small strong-box under his arm. Strength born of love then possessed me, and I closed with the heathen in a struggle that lasted for some minutes. Then I felt my strength desert me—the earth seemed to cave in and crumble all around me and (paper will here appear to have been torn).

IMA SIMP—DETECTIVE (Balboa) (Released week of April 5).—Slim Jim, a slippery-fingered crook, seeing a chance to make a good haul, takes advantage of the opportunity, robs a house and makes his get-away. At the same time the daughter of the victim decides to elope and joins her fiancee by means of the ladder-route. The eloping couple hire a buggy and hasten away to escape her father. They are seen by Ima Simp, almost a detective, who mistakes them for Slim Jim and his female accomplice. Ima Simp decides to do some sleuthing that will make Sherlock Holmes seem like a back-number and immediately gets on the trail. The chase that follows is a hummer and is funny enough to make the Sphinx laugh.

Does Simp catch the fugitives? Sure he does, but at that moment the girl's father appears on the scene and thanks the young man for eloping with his daughter, thus taking her off his own hands. Poor Simp then realizes that as a detective he's a lemon.

THE INTELLIGENCE OF APES (On Same Reel as foregoing) (Released Week of April 5).—Did you ever pay much attention to our Simian friends? Probably not, for the average business man has other things to claim his attention. But here is an opportunity to get closely acquainted with them. An unusual collection of views of the Gibbon, the least manlike of the Ape family and native of Southern Asia. From these views one get a splendid chance to study the physical make-up, habits and peculiarities of the Gibbon as well as the Orang-outang, another arboreal anthropoid which is shown. The latter is a native of Borneo and Sumatra and is more massive then the Gibbon. Much comedy is afforded by these two animals which are shown romping together and endeavoring to use various toilet articles which are given them.

THE QUALITY OF FORGIVENESS (Balboa—Three Parts, Released Week April 5).—This is the story of a woman who drank of Life's cup of bitterness to the dregs—who went through a hell-fire of treachery and deceit, and came out illumined with an unearthly light. Deceived by a man she adored, struck blind in the green spring of her youth, married to the man she mistakenly believes her lover, she lives a long life of darkness. Then comes the unmerciful light, and with the restoration of her sight the hideous truth of a life of lies is the first thing she visions. For a moment she yearns for the comparative happiness of her blindness; then with a soul-stirring struggle she throws off the cloak of injustice in which she has so long been mantled, and emerges radiant with the quality of forgiveness.

GULF OF ROSAS (Spain) (Released Week of April 5).—Many spots are shown along the rugged coast of Spain where now stand relics of great cities that once flourished as commercial centres. In other places are shown natural bridges that have been worn through solid rock by the action of the mighty waves. Like grim sentinels keeping watch over scenes of former greatness stand the ancient Castles of Catalonia. The ruins of the ancient city of Emporiae, which was built by the Phoenicians and later destroyed by the Saracens, give testimony of their former greatness. We see also, Cadaques, the scene of bitter fighting during the Peninsula War. This place is still a seaport of some consequence.

WIESBADEN (Germany) (On Same Reel as Foregoing) (Released Week of April 5).—Of exceptional interest at this time are the picturesque scenes of Wiesbaden, the world famed watering spot of Europe. Here we see the beautiful railway station, and the Wilhelmstrasse, the principal thoroughfare. Here also we see the noted Hotel Nassau opposite the beautiful Bowling Green with its flower beds shady walks and pretty fountains. A visit is made to the "Kurhaus" which offers many inducements to suit the varied interests of its patrons.

Of more than passing interest, on account of its quaint and odd design, is the latticed en-

Can You Afford to Take a Chance on Cheaply Made Machines?

Read Mr. Smith's unsolicited letter.

The Motiograph will not wear out with its ground and hardened parts.

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.

Dear Sirs: Find enclosed 30c. for two Film Tension Springs for my Motiograph Machine, 1909 Model.

I purchased this machine of you in May, 1909, and used it ever since, have paid out only 90c. for repairs and have never lost a show on any account. Consider it the best machine made.

Yours truly,
JOHN SMITH.

Can you afford to purchase a machine that will last 12 to 15 months and which will cost you 20 to 25 dollars per month when you can buy a machine at the cost of $2.00 per month that will project just as good and even better pictures?

Mr. Smith's machine is worth $100.00 today. At that rate his machine has cost him less than $2.00 per month.

When you install the MOTIOGRAPH in your booth your show is insured against machine trouble and the up-keep is small. Don't take a chance on a cheaper made machine. Get the best, it is the cheapest in the end.

TOO MUCH BULL (Released Week of April 5).—When Elsie Pamaque, leading lady of a travelling show, hits a "rube" town she realizes that she is up against a dead proposition. The rubes, however, think that she's a live one and they all endeavor to make a hit. Two of them are particularly persistent, but they get the cold shoulder like the rest. They decide to use diplomacy and proceed to get acquainted with the stage manager. He is invited to go on a hunting trip which turns out to be a "flivver." Reading in a magazine of a clever scheme whereby hunters used a figure of a cow as a "blind" to approach their game, the two swains set out to do the same stunt. They procure a "property" cow and sally forth, one as the hind-quarters and the other in the front.

All goes well until a real bull spies them, and then the two doughty hunters take it on the run. Up hill and down dale, right into the heart of the town, the blood-thirsty bull chases them with an ever increasing crowd bringing up the rear. They finally evade the bull and reach the town theater where they sink down exhausted. The barker for the show, seeing the immense crowd which surges around the fallen "hunters" takes advantage of the opportunity and loudly advertises that "this is only a small part of the show, the rest is inside. Step right up for your tickets and don't crowd." Too much bull proves to be the proper antidote for a bum show.

FJORDS AND MOUNTAINS IN NORWAY (On Same Reel as foregoing) (Released Week of April 5).—Nowhere on the continent of Europe has Nature been so prodigal with magnificent and awe-inspiring scenery. Characteristic of the wonderful coast of Norway are those long arms of the sea, called "Fjords," the most noted of which is the Songnefiord which runs over 100 miles inland. Many strange and wonderful scenes are unfolded to the eye of the interested spectator.

STOP THIEF (Five Parts).—Mr. Carr is a kleptomaniac and his two daughters, Madge and Joan, are to be married to Mr. Cluney and Dr. Willoughby, respectively. Pretty Nell Jones, a light-fingered maid, is engaged that afternoon by Mrs. Carr after promising her sweetheart, Jack Doogan, a crook, that she will assist him to do one last job. Peculiar and mysterious things begin to happen in the Carr home with the arrival of the happy bridegrooms-to-be.

A ruby suddenly disappears from the library table—into Nell's shoe—but the empty box is discovered by Cluney in his overcoat pocket a few minutes later! The family promptly suspect Nell and Cluney telephones for a detective. While he is in the act of 'phoning, Nell slips the jewel back into the box where it is discovered by Mr. Carr just as Cluney lays down the 'phone. Cluney is stunned by the discovery and confides in Dr. Willoughby, who unsympathetically informs Cluney that he evidently suffers from unconscious kleptomania.

The situation is further complicated by the arrival of Nell's sweetheart, Jack, whom she tells of the expected detective. This dignitary is met by Nell who, after deftly stripping him of star and watch, introduces him to Jack as Mr. Cluney. Jack sends him away on a mysterious mission and Nell then introduces Jack to the family as the detective from central headquarters. Cluney confides to him that he suspects himself of being a kleptomaniac and asks that Jack keep a close eye on him.

Complications set in thick and fast. With two kleptomaniacs and two real crooks and a double wedding pending, Mrs. Carr has her hands full. Wedding presents disappear and reappear in the most astonishing way. A burly investor leaves $10,000 in steel stock as security for a loan and when he returns with cash to redeem his collateral, both stock and money disappear—into Jack Doogan's pocket! This leads to the visit of a wagon-load of police but before the captain can read his search-warrant, even that vanishes through Doogan's nimble fingers into Mr. Carr's side pocket! Even cocksure Dr. Willoughby shares the general hysteria and finds himself possessed of the stock securities but unable to replace them without openly branding himself a thief.

The return of the detective adds a touch of drama to the evening. With an automobile liberally filled with movable valuables of all kinds ready for departure, Jack draws his gun and under its cover makes his escape, hurrying to the upper rooms of the building with faithful Nell at his heels. Believing him to have jumped through an open window, the police scatter out-of-doors and a second later Dr. Willoughby stops Jack and Nell in a hallway at the point of his revolver. This Jack deftly wrenches from the doctor's hand and again has the company at his mercy. But Nell longs for peace and the good-will of her erstwhile employers and so prevails upon Jack to throw away his gun. Then follow explanations and forgiveness. Jack shows his marriage license and the minister ends an exciting evening with a triple wedding.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 11, "In the Clutch of the River Thieves"—Two Parts—March 24).—On arriving at Bermuda, June and Blye's party leave the steamer for Blye's yacht, but Blye, the man with the black Van Dyke, returns to the dock, where he encounters Ned, the deserted husband, who was rescued by fishermen after jumping off the steamer to avoid capture. Ned violently attacks him and is getting the better of him when the local police arrest Ned on Blye's statement that he is a dangerous maniac and place him in a small jail near the water.

June escapes from the yacht at night in a tender and rows for the shore, but is discovered and pursued by the yachting party. Fearful of capture, June signals a sail boat, which is manned by an old Italian, Giovanni, who takes her aboard. He points out an old wreck and says he was wrecked there twenty years ago. She reminds him of Marietta, back in Italy. He tells her the story of Marietta and her two lovers, how she favored Tony, the one who spent the most money on her. Tony quarrelled with Beppo, another of Marietta's admirers, and in a duel with knives succeeded in killing him, after which he ran away with Marietta.

Blye's yacht gives chase under full sail, and Ned, who has escaped from jail, hires a motor boat and also gives chase. Giovanni steers his boat through a narrow opening into an inlet, where Bly's yacht cannot follow, whereupon Blye produces a pistol and shoots Giovanni. June grasps the helm and runs the boat into the inlet with the aid of Giovanni's negro assistant and lands near a house where some river pirates live. Among them are Tony and Marietta. They quarrel over a division of their spoils, in which one of the pirates stabs Tony and escapes.

As June rushes up, she, Marietta and the wounded Tony are all struck with the resemblance between the two women. Before he dies Tony tells June where to find his buried treasure for Marietta and she undertakes to do so. The other pirates pursue her. Marietta follows June to help her and as they get the treasure, the two pirates attack them. Ned rescues the two girls and Marietta starts after them, knife in hand, on vengeance bent. As they turn on her, Blye and his party interfere and save her, and learning from her of June's whereabouts, Blye arrives just in time to snatch June away from Ned and make a prisoner of him.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 12—Two Parts—March 31).—Ned, after a sharp, heroic struggle with Blye's hirelings, was borne off to one of the strongly barred cabins of the yacht. The next day he was brought, like a prisoner before a judge, into the presence of the man with the black vandyke, who promised the unhappy young husband that if he would leave June unmolested for five days, at the end of that time he should have her back safe and sound. Ned gulped and pledged his word. Then he was set free, to go and come as he pleased.

Meanwhile, June had made the acquaintance of Durban, the artist, who, with his rich wife, had taken a handsome villa in Bermuda for the winter. He made no secret of the fact that he had married this woman for her money. Also, in a cottage apart, he supported a pretty little model, Mimi, upon whom, for the time being, he had settled his changeable affections. The day before, Durban had had a rather upsetting scene with Amy, a girl of the neighborhood, whom he had engaged to pose for a picture that was not in Mimi's line. Because of this he was all the more willing to allow himself to be attracted to June; in her he could forget his recent chagrin. One morning early he chanced to come upon June as she stood drinking in the sun and air on the beach; and induced her to pose. Suddenly she found herself struggling in his close embrace. She fought herself free and fled. Realizing presently that he no longer was following her, she turned and saw that he had been caught in the quicksands. Nothing more awful than the end of this self-indulgent man ever was witnessed by the runaway bride.

The $20,000,000 Mystery—Episode No. 20—Final Installment)—Reels 39 and 40—"The Richest Woman In The World."—John Storm came into Mrs. Ramsay's library one afternoon carrying a florist's box containing a number of red roses for Zudora, who kissed him for his kindness.

As she drew back from his embrace, the locket at her throat caught on a button of his coat; the slender gold chain snapped and her mother's keepsake fell to the floor. Storm picked it up and Zudora examined it ruefully. The jewel in the old-fashioned setting was broken. They went to the jewelers to have it repaired. In order to properly mend it, the jeweler requested Zudora to remove her mother's picture. As she did so, a bit of paper, wedged into the cavity behind the portrait, was disclosed. It read:—"Your father's will has been left in charge of our trusted friend, Capt. George Radcliffe." They hurried at once to Tom Hunt's office.

They found him in conference with Marcus Villiers. Papers littered the table, and the two men were going over, for the third time, certain documents containing positive proof, that Zudora's father had located mines. But mention of a will there was none.

When Hunt saw the paper which Zudora and Storm had found in the locket he was galvanized into action. He made connections with Jim Baird, who presently arrived at the office. Then they formed a plan for getting into the Grecian Salon, the stronghold of Mme. Du Val and the conspirators, with the purpose of finding Zudora's father's will; and Baird departed to take up his watch outside the wily woman's villa.

In less than an hour Hunt received word that the coast was clear. It seemed that Mme. Du Val and the Captain had just left the house to go to the lapidary; if Hunt could come at once they might be able to settle everything. Leaving Villiers at the office, the young man tore uptown to the famous house on the Hudson.

"You can get in easily by going over the pergola," Baird excitedly told him. "The window of Madame's boudoir is just above, and it's open. I'll stay down here to give warning if necessary. If the will isn't in the boudoir, it must be in the Grecian Salon—probably in the secret table." Hunt being the lighter and quicker of the two, deftly made the ascent of the pergola and disappeared within. Madame's own room yielded nothing, and he cautiously made his way downstairs. Seeing the butler moving about in the hall, he hid for a moment behind a stone settee in the conservatory, and then slipped into the salon. This time he was able to open the top of the secret table—and presently he held in his hand the last will and testament of Zudora's father. Making his exit as noiselessly as he had come, he rejoined his friend; then hurried back to Villiers with the papers, while Baird went to get policemen to officiate in the arrest of the Captain, Mme. Du Val and the lapidary.

Baird and his assistants were just too late. They took the stone cutter into custody with all the diamonds he had in his possession—but Mme. Du Val and her companion already had returned to the Grecian Salon, where they had discovered that the secret table had been rifled. Realizing that Baird and Hunt were keeping close watch on the place, the conspirators were driven to devise a desperate ruse.

With Captain Radcliffe, Madame Du Val called on Zudora to invite her with Storm to an "At Home, with Dancing." In the midst of all the festivities the hostess and the Captain disappeared and amid intense excitement, a secret panel and underground passage leading to the garage were found, and the fugitives trailed to the dock, from which, already, Madame's private yacht was bearing them to sea. That same night, Villiers and Baird put in Zudora's hands the will establishing her ownership of the Du Val villa and the South African mines. At Easter time Storm and Zudora were married, and their wedding was celebrated with great magnificence in the Grecian Salon.

THE MAN WHO FOUND HIMSELF (Brady—Five Parts—April 5).—James Clarke, young cashier, robs his employers to provide medical attention for his sick sister. She dies and a fellow employee of Clarke's discovers his theft and blackmails him. Both are eventually found out, prosecuted and sent to prison. By a series of chances, James Clarke escapes from jail, gets a job, is earning an honest living and has won the love of a girl whose life he saved.

Payton, his fellow thief, after serving his full sentence, discovers Clarke and once more blackmails him, attacking the happiness of his fiancee and her brother and taunting Clarke with cowardice. From this terrible situation Clarke escapes by voluntarily returning to jail to serve the remainder of his sentence. He has "found" himself. He knows that when he finally leaves the jail, Catherine, who has promised to be his wife, will be waiting to help him start life afresh.

THE OUTCAST (Reliance—Five Parts).—Mae is a girl of the slums. Her antecedents are unknown. We see her working as a dancing girl around a rough dive. Bob, her sweetheart, is a waiter in the joint. Graves, a cheap sport, takes a fancy to Mae and asks the bartender who she is. The bartender tells him that nobody knows where she came from. When Graves becomes fresh with Mae, Bob warns him off. On their day off, Bob and Mae go walking in the park. They see young couples with their babies and they long for a decent married existence.

Judge Lewis, in his courtroom, is sternly sentencing a criminal, who is pleading for mercy. A second judge enters the room and is invited to the bench as a matter of courtesy. He whispers to Judge Lewis in favor of the criminal, but Lewis is firm and sends the prisoner away condemned to the limit. Court adjourns and the two judges depart. They come down the courthouse steps and walk away to the park. In the park they see Bob and Mae. The second judge recognizes Bob and stops him. The judge asks him questions and Bob replies that he is behaving himself. Bob is eager to get away. Alone with Mae, Bob explains that the judge is the one that paroled him after his last fight.

Back at work in the dive, Graves becomes offensive to Mae. He follows her to her room and is followed by Bob. A fight occurs in which Mae shoots Graves. Bob disappears, fearing the result of his parole if he should not obey the judge. Mae is to be tried before Judge Lewis. She is assigned a young attorney to defend her. The attorney sees her in her cell and gets her story. He can find no trace of Bob, who, however, keeps himself posted in hiding. The young attorney has secured from Mae, however, a locket given to her by her dead mother when she was a little child. The locket has a photo of her mother with the address of a photographer in a country town. The attorney visits the town, finds the old photographer, and is directed to old man Aitken as one who can tell about the woman of the photo. Aitken shows great emotion when he sees the photo, and on being told of Mae's coming trial before Lewis, shows great eagerness to go with the attorney.

The trial is commenced, and the attorney admits the killing, but pleads self-defense and the girl's irresponsibility. He places her on the stand, and she tells her story. The judge is cold and relentless. She is asked on cros examination: "Where is this man Bob?" She doesn't know. Bob, however, has crept into the back of the courtroom. He presents himself and is examined. He corroborates Mae, but the judge, recognizing him as the boy of the park, discredits his testimony by asking him: "Are you not a paroled prisoner?" Bob admits it, and the effect on the jury is obvious. Mae is found guilty, with a recommendation for mercy. On being brought up for sentence, the attorney calls Aitken to prove the girl's irresponsibility. The prosecuting attorney jumps to his feet and objects. The judge is about to rule out Aitken's testimony, when Mae's attorney interposes:

"It will not be necessary to mention the name of the father of this defendant, but I will ask the witness to identify this photograph as the girl's mother."

The portrait of the locket is passed to the Judge. He conceals his emotion with difficulty. Mae's attorney proceeds:

"I will prove by this witness that the defendant's birth and early life are responsible."

Aitken then tells his story, fading back to Mary Alden and Lewis, their love, the locket, Lewis' desertion to follow his career, sending her a letter telling her of his decision, the birth of the baby, and the disappearance of mother and child. After the story the judge faints, court is adjourned, and the judge is carried out. The next day another judge is on the bench—he who had paroled Bob. He suspends sentence on Mae and she and Bob go away free. Judge Lewis is convalescent at his home in the country. Aitken brings Mae and Bob to him and he expresses his interest in them and determination to devote his life to his daughter.

ENOCH ARDEN (Four Parts—Rel. in April—Majestic).—A hundred years ago in a little seaside village, lived and played three children, Philip Ray, Annie Lee and Enoch Arden, the latter an orphan. They grew up together and both boys fell in love with Annie Lee. She chose Enoch Arden. Philip, however, remained their friend.

Years passed. The son and daughter of Enoch Arden and Annie Lee grew to be seven years of age. One day Enoch was hurt and found it to advantage to sail on a long voyage, the only work he could find to support his family. For ten years Annie and the children waited for his return. Philip cared for her and her children, sent the latter to school and urged Annie to marry him, since Arden apparently was dead and would never come back. She finally consented and they were married.

On an island far away, Enoch Arden was alive, having been wrecked and was finally, after some years, picked up by a passing boat and sent home. Arriving there he discovers how good Philip had been to his children and how finally he had married Annie and took care of her.

Without disclosing himself to either of them, he goes away, first telling his story to an old woman of the village. At the close of the day, he dies on the seashore.

THE HEART OF MARYLAND (Six Parts).—Maryland Calvert lives in that section of Maryland divided against itself in the question of secession. Her brother, Floyd, is so strong a Northern sympathizer that he joins the Federal secret service unknown to his family and enlists in the Southern army to increase his efficiency. Her fiance, Alan Kendrick, takes a commission in the Federal Army, although his father becomes a general in the Confederate forces. One Thorpe, a discredited Union officer, is given an opportunity to serve the Federal secret service and in that capacity, joins the Confederate army, becoming an aide to General Kendrick, whose headquarters are at the Calvert mansion.

Alan Kendrick is among the Northern prisoners taken by the Confederates and when sent for exchange is recognized by Thorpe, whose bitter hatred has been aroused by the part the gallant Unionist had in his former discovery and degradation for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. Learning the Federal plans of campaign from Lloyd Calvert, who believes him to be a loyal member of the Federal secret service, he takes advantage of this knowledge to attempt the destruction of the Union camp to which Alan Kendrick has been sent, thereby hoping to encompass Alan's death.

Thorpe fails, but Alan, taking a desperate chance to visit Maryland Calvert, is captured in a Confederate uniform and sentenced to death as a spy. Maryland Calvert, hysterical over the death of her brother, Lloyd, who was shot down while trying to "run the lines" with information, is unconsciously responsible for Alan's denunciation and conviction as a spy. When she realizes his situation, Maryland braves the hazardous ordeal to reach the Union lines and secures from General Hooker a written request upon General Kendrick to delay Alan's execution until facts may be presented proving his innocence of espionage can be established. Her return finds General Kendrick dead on the battlefield, the treacherous Thorpe in supreme command and Alan imprisoned in a church awaiting momentary execution. When Maryland presents her letter to Thorpe he realizes his supreme opportunity for revenge is at hand. He orders a squad to dispatch Alan and proceeds to force his unwelcome attentions upon Maryland.

With her lover standing bound before her awaiting death, Maryland is driven to such a frenzy that she plunges a bayonet into Thorpe. He falls unconscious and she releases Alan, gives him Thorpe's hat and coat as a disguise and bids him fly for his sake as well as her own. A moment later when Thorpe regains consciousness and orders an alarm sounded Maryland recalls that the old church-bell is the agreed tocsin. Dashing up the creaking stairs she reaches the highest spot in the belfry and clinging to the enormous clapper swings from it in its dizzy flight, using her frail hands as a muffler to kill all sound. The deaf sexton tolls away at the rope unconscious of the fact his labor is in vain.

Maryland is made a prisoner and is about to be executed in her own home, when Alan appears at the head of the Union troops. Thorpe would use her as a shield to compel Alan to fire upon his beloved or abandon the attack, but at the crucial moment he is removed from command by order of General Lee, who has learned of his perfidy. Alan Kendrick grants the Confederates a truce to cover their retreat and the drama ends with a blissful reunion of the lovers.

Make Your Theatre the Coolest Place in Town

Put G-E Six blade oscillating fans in your theatre—as they swing from side to side they search out the stuffy corners and keep the air in motion—fresh and cool. They run silently, without rustle, rattle or vibration—there is no distraction from the full enjoyment of the show.

A cool place inside is a good investment—which is realized in the box office at the end of the day. Insist on the

Six Blade Oscillating Fan

See that the G-E trade mark is on the center. Then you will be sure of getting the fan that is built especially for moving picture theatres; you can be sure also of your fans lasting season after season without the slightest trouble or attention beyond oiling once a year.

Those are the kind of fans to get—that will be just as good five or six years hence as they are today. Every G-E Fan is like that, because it has G-E quality and over twenty-five years' experience and knowledge in fan building behind it.

Write to us today; give dimensions, etc., of your theatre—our fan engineers will be glad to lay out your plan for "The Coolest Place in Town."

REMBUSCH SCREEN TALKS

By F. J.

If I had all of the money that exhibitors waste every year in experimenting and smearing around, trying to make their own screens, I would be the highest salaried man in the United States, and again,

If I had with this all the money that exhibitors lose on account of using screens that do not give good results—Screens that make a good film look like slop—I could write my name J. D. R. instead of F. J. R.

It is those clouds, smears, seams, spots, wrinkles, and especially that poor reflection and improper distribution from your screen, that put the kibosh on your whole show and keep folks from repeating.

Don't get it in your mind that any old rag will do for a screen. I am the world's greatest screen expert. For ten years I have been making screens. I run six theatres myself and when I make a screen for you I make it just the same as if I was making it for my own theatre.

If you have a wide house get our wide house screen. We make every screen in nine finishes, according to your angle. It won't cost you any more to buy a Rembusch screen and you get in our screens a surface that is made to fit your house. Write me and let me tell you why.

I have got screens at any price and terms to suit, cash or payments. I am the only manufacturer in the world that makes every kind of moving picture screen.

Rembusch Glass "Mirror Screen," the World's Best; Rembusch Glass Screen for Rear Projection; Rembusch Goldfibre Screen, seamless, on rollers or stretchers; Rembusch Silverfibre Screen, seamless, on rollers or stretchers; Rembusch Mirrorcloth Screen, cheaper than the cheapest; Rembusch White Opaque Screen.

MIRROR SCREEN COMPANY, Shelbyville, Indiana

F. J. REMBUSCH, President

P. S. Advice on building, projection, equipment free. $1,000 on a bet that no screens on earth are equal to our surfaces.

Gentlemen:

In answer to yours of the 22nd, with reference to the arc controller, will state that our chief engineer reports that the two arc controllers you placed in the Harlem Opera House on trial, or to demonstrate its value some two months ago, has proven entirely satisfactory, and on the strength of his report as to the machine being able to do all that is claimed, we have decided to place them in our theatres. You will therefore send the following:

EASTER IS NEAR

To see, is to feel it. It is a time set apart for laying aside the old sombre garments and putting on apparel of clean, bright colors, betokening the freshness of springtime.

And while you think of your own new spring suit—if you can afford one—think also of the poor actors on your Screen. Do they look grimy and gloomy? Are their features indistinct, their motions hazy? Can you afford not to give them the white linen, the clean appearance, the clearness of expression, the beauty of well-defined action, so easily produced on the

Theatre Record Ledger System

For Every Exhibitors' Business

Have you ever thought of the necessity of keeping a correct and accurate set of books in your business? Hundreds of managers today do everything but keep books. That's the reason I compiled my Theatre Record Ledger System. With no trouble at all you can keep a correct and accurate record of all receipts, no matter what, besides a complete history of every expense. One complete week's business on each page; 52 pages, or one year's business to every book. Sent with privilege of returning if not satisfactory, upon receipt of $2.50 (plus 20c. extra for postage). There is simply nothing left of the tickets.

The mechanism is so durable that coins or metal checks can pass between knives without any injury whatsoever.

We also equip the No. 2 Security Ticket Chopper with an attachment called an agitator to force through strip tickets.

Made with or without foot power attachment.

All the improvements you have ever thought should be on a ticket chopper, ARE on our No. 2 Security.

It will save its price in a few months by mutilating ALL the tickets.

MOTION PICTURE MAILING LIST SERVICE TALKS

SELLING NEW THEATRES

I have analyzed the methods used by those particularly successful in reaching new "prospects."

The result of this analysis is the method we provide subscribers for indexing the daily reports furnished in connection with our Advance Information Service.

The fact that we report all information received, irrespective of whether it is an unverified rumor (which we use our best endeavors to substantiate later), or a verified fact, makes it of particular value.

Waiting until plans are filed or the ground is broken, is ofttimes the means of losing an order. The earlier the approach is made the fewer the "lines of resistance" to overcome.

Subsequent reports which we furnish, supplementing information already given, permit follow-ups to show that the writer is keeping posted.

This service is the result of several years' specializing in securing information regarding motion picture theatres.

Sturtevant Ready-to-Run Fans are largely used for cooling and ventilating operators' booths.

If a film catches fire the smoke is carried away instantly. It does not enter the theatre and tend to create panic.

In many cities a fan-ventilated booth is required by law.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service
To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:
Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.
Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.
Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

PERK UP!

FORGET THE BLUE MONDAY DOPE!

Blue Monday will be transformed to a prosperous Monday if you will book the Selig Program. Just get arm in arm with the honest-to-goodness gloom extinguishers put forth by the house of Selig and make Monday a gay day and a pay day. The Selig anti-blue Monday motion picture programs cause the dimes to tinkle on the box-office glass. They are also "safety-first" during the remainder of the week.

POETIC JUSTICE OF OMAR KHAN

A Selig Pictureplay in Two Reels, Released Monday, April 12.

Amir Pasha dreams of a white woman for his harem—Omar Khan supplies the woman and avenges the honor of his dearest friend. Guy Oliver, Stella Razeto, Eugenie Besserer and other stars appear.

Mrs. Murphy's Cooks

"Mrs. Murphy's Cooks" is a Selig Western Comedy in one reel to be released Tuesday, April 13. The story is away above the ordinary as a laugh-provoker. Mrs. Murphy conducts a boarding house in a small western town and has trouble in keeping a cook. Even Tom Mix tries his hand at baking biscuit. A strolling tragedian finally comes along—But see it and laugh!

Iole, the Christian

"Iole, the Christian," is a Selig drama in one reel to be released Wednesday, April 14. It is a story of ancient Rome. We have placed more care and thought in producing this one-reel drama than do many manufacturers in producing multiple reel features of similar character.

The Strength of a Samson

Selig burlesque comedy in one reel released Friday, April 16. A farce without a slapstick.

The Jungle Stockade

Selig Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal drama in one reel, released Saturday, April 17. A thrilling story with wild beasts.

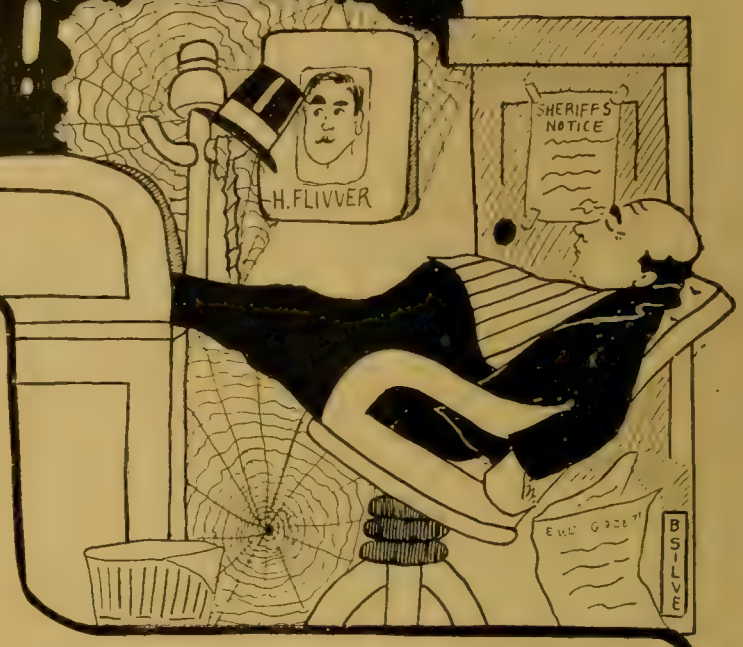
WHY THE LIGHTS WENT OUT!

BY EDWIN THANHOUSER



Horatio Flivver, the great film star, the idol and charmer de luxe of all beings in skirts, resigned from the Bingo Film Company, and the board of directors were having a tearful session. The sales on their other releases were very low, and Flivver's name was all they had to play on; true, even the pictures he appeared in were not so good, but Horatio's handsome face pushed them over. And now Horatio takes exception to the ingenue's remark about the length of his eye-brows and resigns—just like that!

So there's no use releasing only those other films on which the company is losing money, and that's what put the match to the Bingo! Also, it illustrates a big point I want to get over to you:

A chain is only as strong as its weakest link! Grasp that? A film must be powerful in every link and these links are story, action, cast and photography. A brand must be strong in every link, and that means every release, not a portion of them. Then it's bound to follow that the performers appearing in such a brand become great favorites, because all the other links that make good films are just as strong!

NOW! DO YOU SEE MY POINT? Just compare my idea of a film-making organization with the fate of the Bingo Company—then write me if I'm wrong.

If I'm right, you belong on my mailing list. You can't dodge that!

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 12

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

One of the biggest feature plays of the year is Clara Kimball Young in "Hearts in Exile." It has every element of a great picture, with a wonderfully interesting story, thrilling action, perfect staging and direction. It contains some wonderful scenes—an exciting race across a vast ice field in which some of the pursuers break through the ice and flounder in the icy water.

The New York Hippodrome, the greatest theater in the world, has the first showing of "Hearts in Exile" and will do more advance advertising for it than they have on any feature they have shown.

Watch for the opinions of the press and the public after this photo play is shown.

"Hearts in Exile" is one of the many pictures World Film has released, great enough to be specially featured in big theaters at high admission prices and for which we could in all justice demand a greater price than we get on World Film schedule.

The "wild cat" exhibitors who show "Hearts in Exile" will pay somewhere near the price than that feature is worth, but our regular contract customers will get it at their regular schedule rate not considering how big it is as a production, nor how much more it costs than the average good feature.

That is why we say that the World Film yearly contract is for the benefit of the exhibitor as well as ourselves.

It insures you the biggest percentage of good features in the film field at the same price. It insures continued patronage from the people who want to see World Film, which insures the "good will" the most important asset in every business.

THE UNIVERSAL

Scores Another Giant "KNOCK-OUT"

Presenting

JESS WILLARD

Champion of the World and the Man of the Hour in the ONLY Moving Picture (story) Ever Made of the Champion

Millions of People

all over the world are clamoring to see the New Champion. Here's your chance to "CLEAN-UP"

AGAIN the UNIVERSAL Scores another gigantic Knock-out in presenting Jess Willard, Champion of the World, in "THE HEART PUNCH," the ONLY Moving Picture (story) ever made of the New Champion. Here's simply another huge hunk of evidence for exhibitors proving for all time that the UNIVERSAL DOES what others dream about and hope to do. Proving that the UNIVERSAL with its huge organization, its talent, brains, foresight, and energy, brings home to Exhibitors the BIGGEST ATTRACTIONS, that mean capacity houses, that mean the KALE. All the Movie Fans in America and other countries are clamoring for a glimpse of the New "Champion." Here's your chance for a genuine mighty CLEAN-UP. Imagine what it means to YOUR HOUSE to advertise and to present RIGHT NOW, "JESS" WILLARD, Champion of the World, in a gripping Universal Drama in which "Jess" plays the leading part, and in which you see a genuine Ring Battle, full of lightning action, thrills and enthusiasm. A drama that will set your audience wild with joy. The picture shows not only Jess Willard but also Jack Curley, Bob Vernon and Tom Jones, Willard's manager, all of whom are NOW in the lime light.

BOOK IT

AND YOU'LL CLEAN UP BIG!

DON'T wait to write for booking. Race to your telegraph office and WIRE your Exchange for Booking. Reserve this rare opportunity within the next hour. The showing of this remarkable film NOW means MORE, far more, than packed houses and wads of the kale. It means added prestige to your house—added popularity—It will convince your fans that YOUR HOUSE is always FIRST with the BIG STUFF. It will incidentally serve to put your competitor on the blink. Like every other written or spoken word of the UNIVERSAL this advice to book and to sign up for continual Universal Service means COIN—real money—SUCCESS for all time. Here's YOUR mightiest chance to get the jump on your competitor. Get busy. Book this film instantly. Wire your nearest Universal Exchange or wire direct to the

A MISSTATEMENT

Ray Bagley of the Missoula Amusement Company is the manager of the Empress Theatre in Missoula.

Missoula sounds like one of the small 2 x 4 towns where nothing happens, but the fact that live exhibitors are not always found in New York City is proven by some of Mr. Bagley's stunts with World Film.

The Empress Theatre runs programs of two other feature companies, giving a day to each one. He runs World Film two days.

The trade papers of April 10th carried the excerpt to the left in the advertisement of a film concern.
The truth about the matter is told in the following telegram:

Mr. J. S. Johnson,
Advertising and Publicity Dept.,
Paramount Pictures Corporation,
110 West Fortieth St.,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

RE-Newspaper advertising.

Some time ago we received a circular letter from you asking about the amount we spend for newspaper advertising---please pardon the delay in answering same.

Our newspaper advertising will probably average $200. a month. In January it was $220., February was $177. and this month will go about $200. This amount, you understand, is for the entire month. Our Paramount Program is for four days a week, which would make the Paramount average about $114. a month.

I have to admire you for your persistance in urging us to us the Paramount Cuts more than we do in our advertising. I dont know why we haven't done this---just neglect I guess. But your letters have done us good and you may rest assured that in the future we will follow your advice.

We have found that "Paramount" means something besides good pictures---you've got a great organization. Your "follow-up" has got anything that I ever came in contact with. You are making EXHIBITORS out of men who have started a FLICKER SHOP. If an exhibitor can't make good with Paramount Pictures and the power behind them, he is letting the office boy open his mail.

Cordially Yours,

Empress Theater.

RR/R

Mr. Bagley runs Paramount FOUR days.

We regret the necessity for this correction, but—

The Paramount standard is: Stick to the truth in small matters as well as big ones.

Exhibitors everywhere like this standard and are profiting by it.

Write our nearest exchange and they will tell you about it.

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

THE LITTLE MOTHER (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, April 6. A very interesting child story telling how a little orphan girl at last finds a home with her baby sister.

THE FENCING MASTER (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, April 11. A well produced story of an old fencing master who regains the vigor of his youth, featuring delightful "Teddy" Sampson and lovable Thomas Jefferson.

BY FAIR MEANS OR FOWL (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, April 11. A rural farce with Fay Tincher and Elmer Booth. Not quite up to Komic standard in story or production.

THE LITTLE MATCHMAKERS (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, April 13. A delightful child love story featuring pretty Mildred Harris and Paul Willis.

THE HIGHBINDERS (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, April 18. A story of Chinatown with the real Chinatown atmosphere, showing how a beautiful half-caste Chinese girl was saved from slavery by a white man.

ETHEL'S NEW DRESS (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, April 18. This is No. 21 of the Paul West "Bill" stories, and is one of the best of the series.

Magnetic Mabel Trunnelle

in the

3-act Sensational Feature

"OUT OF THE RUINS"

One of the most skilfully produced fire films ever shown, with suspense strung out to almost the excruciating point as the maddened, helpless women are penned in the fiery furnace. Mabel Trunnelle, ever quick to win the sympathy in any role, here plays the victim shop girl with startling fidelity while Pat O'Malley, the daredevil, puts into the film a thrill unequalled in a rescue, daring and keyed with painful suspense. Not merely a fire picture but a brilliant and strong drama on political rottenness and commercial greed that grinds a mill with human blood. From the story of "Miss 318 and Mr. 37" by the famous novelist, Rupert Hughes. Produced by Director Ashley Miller. Released Friday, April 23—3000 feet.

The Clever New Edison Comedian

Raymond McKee, in "Sleep, Beautiful Sleep"

This is the comedy that rolled off so funnily that his first picture with Edison plumped McKee right into the Edison Stock Company. Paired off with the distinguished English comedian, Dallas Welford, the Broadway star, and produced by the new comedy director, Will Louis—a great conspiracy for fun. Slap stick that whisks along with its briskness. Released Friday, April 23—1000 feet.

Waddy and Arty (Wadsworth and Housman) in the comedy, "Martha's Romance"

These laughable twins with great, good-natured Jessie Stevens to pump in more funny stuff in the comedy of a quarter-ton miss quartered in a hungry boarding house, minus love and food, till she writes herself a letter of a fortune and then—Released Tuesday, April 20th—1000 feet.

"The Heart of a Waif"

A pretty story of a little foundling paying her oppressors with coals of fire. Released Saturday, April 24—1000 feet.

Facts and Comments

AN OBSERVANT exhibitor unfortunate enough to be located in one of the three censorship states recently pointed out to the writer that the public is very quick to discover the mutilating hand of the censor and to resent its work. One after another of his patrons would stop on going out and would want to know "what happened to that picture." One said: "Why that was a pretty good picture, but somebody has been taking liberties with it." Another old patron complained that it was hard to follow the picture because it jumped from one thing to another and one had the feeling that something important had been left out.'" Here is indeed a very serious consequence of censorship. When you strike at the entertainment of a film you threaten its very life. The exhibitor cannot do business with films that have been butchered by the whims of the censor. Producers of motion pictures spend their time and money in vain if they can never know "what the censor will do."

* * *

WE ARE extremely sorry to note that at least in one of the censor states one group of producers seems anxious to curry favor with the censor while the other groups maintain a firm and dignified position in their dealings with that official. Producers and their distributing agents in the censor territory ought to act in absolute unison and co-operation and look upon the censor as a common enemy. Kow-towing to the censor may bring a little temporary advantage over your rival, but in the long run it is poor policy. There is no telling when the censor may turn against you. To be the censor's favorite film company is a doubtful honor and not half as profitable as some people seem to think it is. "Leniency" bought at such a price never lasts very long. The censor of to-morrow may choose another favorite and then it may be your turn to feel the sting of the censorial lash. Let us present an united front against the censor. Let us not kiss the hand that swings the club. The "thrift which follows fawning" is degrading.

* * *

EXAGGERATED statements about the profits of moving picture men are making their regular rounds in the newspapers and magazines of the country. Most of them are just due to the desire to be sensational and to emphasize the paradox, but we regret to say not a little of it comes from sources that should know better. One enthusiastic press agent assures us that "95 miles of photographic film are reeled off every twenty-four hours which, when spread out to include a year, reaches the enormous total of 182,500,000 feet or 34,565 miles, a ribbon of celluloid which would stretch clear round the circumference of our globe with enough left over to connect Paris with Pekin. Ten years output at the present rate of manufacture would run a filmy path from the earth to its satellite, the moon, if that were possible. Taking 1000 feet to each reel the daily production is 500 reels or 182,500 reels annually. Assuming each to weigh 15 pounds the total is 1218 tons, etc., etc." The ebullition concludes with the statement that twenty million fans at an admission fee of five cents shows a total of one million dollars," which the press agent with remarkable penetration concludes would be $365,000,000 per year, "enough money to build a good-sized metropolis." What is the good of all this stuff? We used to call it "Flap-doodle" in the old days. It can serve but one purpose; heighten the popular delusion that there are millions in the motion picture business waiting to be picked up by the unsophisticated. As a matter of fact the motion picture business is much like any other business, in which hard work, experience and skill alone make for success. The element of luck has been greatly overestimated.

* * *

THE airdome will soon be in season. Every year a good deal of money is invested in enterprises of this kind, showing a spirit of optimism, which we are sorry to say is hardly justified by the experience of the past. To run an airdome and to make money with it is a far greater problem than running an ordinary motion picture theatre. It is said that movable roof has been invented which would protect the airdome against its worst enemy; the rain. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in the near future intends to give its readers the benefit of the experience of men who have successfully operated airdomes in different parts of the country.

Holding Up the Mirror

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

OH, there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise," particularly sweet ladies who go barefoot and in rags, yet have every appearance of having come fresh from the hairdresser, "players so strutted and bellowed that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably." But for a scarcity of yellow metal, purely temporary, I assure you, I would contrive to have Hamlet's comment inscribed in gold at Los Angeles, Fort Lee and other histrionic centers, with a Longacre electric display of an evening. Oh, there be players I have seen play, and there be plays I have seen played that "do such bitter business as the day would quake to look upon."

While watching a number of screen stories being shown to the National Board of Censors—I was there in a Diogenes-like search for an honest picture—I had my attention attracted by critics present to the fact that three productions in that one batch used the outworn plots of the young wife wrongly suspected by her husband when she goes to the aid of her erring brother. Too much! Once a week is enough for that plot, or twice at the utmost. Neck and neck with this yawn-provoking story is that of the much-deceived country girl. By careful estimate a very long proportion of our rural, sweet-sixteen population is going to the dogs. Somebody ought to write to "The Times" about it.

A certain amount of regard for the truth is essential to the sanity of a story, and not a narrow view of it at that. Human experience is in a broad way one of infinite variety. What may seem improbable to one man is the bitter truth to another. It is, of course, safer to present what can be recognized, or, at least, verified, but unusual events may, for all that, be the more interesting. The necessary truth is less that of events than of environment. It is on the general "atmosphere" of a piece that attention is concentrated.

Various explanations have been offered of realism, especially as distinguished from romance, and there may be deep-seated distinctions between these methods of telling a story, but few of them have been demonstrated in a scientific manner and still fewer are satisfactory. They may mean two different methods of accomplishing one purpose, such as that of telling an interesting story, and everything depends upon what application is made of the terms. A purely romantic story may depict characters "true to life" and the realistic story contain human creatures never seen on the earth below or in the heavens above. If in doubt, go to the picture show.

A great deal depends upon the point of view, even upon the class of society in which one moves. Many country maidens of today are fresh from Vassar and integral calculus. They are apt to deceive the city chap, even to blight his young affections. Farmers' daughters in this country ride in their own motor cars and spend the summer at Narragansett. The average city chap only gets as far as Coney or Asbury. His motor car is the Fifth Avenue bus. The intelligent young American wife who has an erring brother is quite apt to speak to her husband about it and advise with him as to what can be done for the boy. Only in stupefying photoplays due to an affliction of their producers, a form of cerebral induration, does Miss Youngwife get into trouble with her husband by embracing her own brother—in real life it is some other girl's brother.

Among the countless screen presentations of the poorer class there is a tendency to attempt realism by exalting the insignificant. This is a peculiarity of the modern printed story, the kind we have grown weary of in once-popular periodicals, most of them written by well-known authors to keep the pot boiling over and pay for the motor car. There is very little meat in such stories—they are composed largely of gas, enough to float a Zeppelin. It is this sedulous attention to the non-essential that makes the modern magazine story tiresome. The same effect is found in so-called "continuity" scenes on the screen, characters leaving one house, going down steps, entering car, riding along the road, stopping at another place, leaving car and entering another door. This is not realism, but padding.

There is another form of attempted realism which might as well be moderated, the "eyesore" kind, which casts undue emphasis upon the sordid and the ugly. A very little of that will suffice for purposes of contrast. Most of us prefer the mountains and the seashore to the slums. It is our drift to look out into the starry night, or into the fleecy cloud, rather than into the ash can. To visualize phases of life which are base in themselves may powerfully operate to enforce a point, but it is preferable to give a glimpse of such conditions rather than to dwell upon them.

Instead of fretting over the probability of a story, the director might bend his energies to giving it what he thinks it lacks, as he can easily do by convincing treatment. Convincing treatment does not mean the employment of stage costumes and stagey conventions, especially in the open. Can anything jar one worse than the silk-and-satin peasant girl of light opera on the dusty highway of a screen presentation, And yet it is shown by producers who really aspire to the "masterpiece" class. One of the essentials of masterly presentation on the screen is consistency, rarely a bright and shining jewel of stage plays.

At this stage of the game, those who select scenarios as a business have neither training nor ability for the vocation. The only realistic story possible is that of the writer's place and time—he reproduces life as he sees it around him—but that phase of existence may be wholly unfamiliar to the man who critically reads the scenario. The best judges of plays are often found among men of large and varied careers in both business and society, and they are as often modest about it. The more capable they really are, the more averse they seem to be to deciding upon the full merit of a play. The finest suggestions come from such men because of natural good judgment and a habit of depending on plain common sense.

Only capable critics and skilled writers know that holding up the mirror to nature is largely a matter of treatment. The author is true to his time when the general spirit of his product is humanitarian, when it concerns our deepest feelings, when it stirs the soul, offers food for thought, or charms with beauty. That is realism in the highest sense. The story that carries mental stimulus through emotional suggestion, holds up the mirror to human nature in all its fascinating and infinite variety.

Circus or Stage

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE RECEIVE quite a number of letters these days indulging in prophesies as to the future. Many of our correspondents seem to think that the day of a strict division into grades of service is close at hand, others believe that the line of cleavage will run between the single and the multiple reels, while one man even guessed that there would be three classes of films divided into A—films for general audiences, B—films for adult spectators and C—films for men only.

As a matter of fact the grand division has always been with us and is likely to be with us for the rest of our lives. I am speaking of the line that separates the idea from the sensation.

Herein lies the marvelous power of the camera. The screen is capable of recording every sensation and every idea with equal degrees of perfection. When I speak of "sensation" I do not use the word as the doctor uses it. I speak of it as the newspaper man and the exhibitor use it. Wonderful indeed are the achievements of the screen in the recording of sensations. We have seen volcanoes in destructive eruption, we have seen storms at sea and shipwrecks; terrible disasters, such as train collisions, fearful explosions and indeed all "moving accidents by flood and field." There is no doubt whatever that a very large share of the motion picture's hold on public favor and popularity is due to its spectacular qualities. Of course no one was quicker to realize this tremendous advantage which the screen enjoys over the stage than the producer and exhibitor of motion pictures. The result was that we were and still are "treated" to all kinds of "sensations." With a considerable percentage of producers the hunt after "sensations" became an obsession. For some time, if I remember rightly, various "dare-devils" would make the rounds of the studios offering to take a chance with their necks for the delectation of the sensation hunters. Surely we do not altogether blame the producers for their pursuit of the sensational. The masses like the sensational today exactly as they liked it two thousand years ago when "leopards and tigers bounded in the arena." It is said that when the late Lincoln Beachey went on his last flight he looked about him and seeing the gazing thousands said: "They have all paid for a chance to see me killed." Individually we may be ashamed to confess this instinct which antedates the caveman, but when we are in a crowd our sense of shame is apt to become callous. It is, alas, too true that in every crowd the level of the lowest individual is the level of the entire crowd. In this way alone can we account for the psychology of lynching. There have been crowds animated by noble purposes, but that has always been due to the fine qualities of a leader. The contempt that lies hidden in our own word "mob" is eloquent in support of our theory.

Hence the temptation of the producer and exhibitor to cater to the crowd by offering "strong sensations." We have seen hair-raising spectacles as a consequence of trying to cater to the "mob." The man bound hand and foot and moving nearer the buzzsaw every second; the heroine lashed to the wheel which in its next revolution must end in horrible death; the pendulum of Edgar Allan Poe's story; the serpent entering the library of the hero; tigers and lions chasing the "villian" through field and forest and some times even through his flat; all these spectacles are based on the audience's eagerness to see something happen. It speaks volumes for the optimism of the average audience that it never lets disappointment cool its hope "that the worst is yet to come." The rescue squad of the scenario department foils every "villian" and averts every danger. The audience looking for sensation pure and simple is after all satisfied with the probability of something horrible and tragic and the closer the producer gets to the probability the more he will please his audience. The circus is the proper arena for the sensation, though the screen is well able to portray and then improve the best the circus can offer.

Over against the sensation stands the idea. We prefer the sensation to the idea just as we are climbing down or up the ladder of evolution. To follow an idea as it is bodied forth on the screen requires considerably more brains to absorb one sensation after another. The rustics gaping at the elephant and sipping pink lemonade require but a minimum of mental exertion. They occupy no advanced place on the road of evolution. On the other hand the audience which attempts to grasp the plot of a play and to follow the art of the actors must have the ability to think. It is very difficult indeed to construct a play which develops a strongly dramatic idea and at the same time ministers to the inborn desire to look at the sensational. The circus cannot give such a show. The theater is incapable of pleasing the two kinds of audiences at the same time. The screen alone can do it. Even the screen rarely gives us a production which is rich in spectacular features and strong in the plot and logical in the development of the plot. It goes without saying that these rare plays are the best money-makers because they appeal practically to all, whether they are climbing up or down the ladder of evolution. There is not a reader who cannot put his finger on at least one or two such screen-productions.

The problem of the exhibitor is to find out whether his audience prefers the sensation to the idea or whether it would rather have the idea than the sensation. On the whole the idea will win out against the mere sensation. The accident such as collision, fire, etc., will shock us, but it cannot hold the interest very long. On the other hand the idea if it is cleverly embodied by the director and the actors and actresses will hold your audience. The spell is often far more potent than the shock. We are satisfied with one annual visitation of the circus, but we have the theater with us all the year round.

The motion picture is a silent drama rather than a silent circus. It is able to summon to its aid all the elements which make the circus possible and successful, but its ultimate design and destiny are much higher. It is in the field of amusements, the exponent of the drama rather than the imitator of the circus. Its future lies along the lines of the higher destiny. The greatest success of the screen has been in its dramatic work. The screen as a purveyor of real drama has developed as no other art known to mankind.

Its future possibilities stretch limitless before us. In the world of sense and in the world of intellect the most effective means of expression is the screen. It seems almost inconceivable that such a power is tampered with by the censor in the name of Morality. The screen is the property of all the people and not of a party or a faction. Eventually American statesmanship will recognize this fact. There are signs of such a recognition even at this time. These signs will multiply as time goes on.

Big Feature Exchange Launched.

Combination of Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay Companies Capitalized for Half a Million Dollars.

THE big new feature exchange combination, formed by the Vitagraph Company of America, Lubin Film Manufacturing Company, Selig Polyscope Company and Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, has been finally and officially launched. Tuesday articles of incorporation were filed with the Secretary of State for New York state at Albany, providing for a capital stock of $500,000 for a company to be known as the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay Motion Picture Company, with offices at 1600 Broadway, New York.

The object of the new company is to market the productions of the several interested companies, that is, the so-called feature pictures made by them which have not found a good market through the General Film Company heretofore.

The officers of the company are Albert E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company, president; Siegmund Lubin of the Lubin Company, vice-president; William N. Selig of the Selig Company, treasurer; George K. Spoor of the Essanay Company, secretary.

Full information regarding the locations of exchanges as far as the same have been determined up to date will be found in the company's advertisements on pages 408-417. The initial releases—four for each company—are also announced in the advertisements.

This sets at rest the numerous rumors regarding the proposed organization which have been circulating for several weeks, the main facts of which were published in the Moving Picture World of April 3. Further announcements will be made from time to time as the plans of the new combination develop.

Uncle Sam Bans Prize Fight Films.

Collectors of Customs at all Ports of Entry Instructed to Stop Them.

RUMORS are current that motion pictures of the recent prize fight in Havana are to be imported into this country to be exploited on the "state right plan." It is quite unlikely that these rumors have any other foundation that the hope "which springs eternal" in the promoter's breast.

More than three years ago Congress passed a law forbidding the importation of prize fight films and denying them the channels of interstate commerce. The custom officials at all ports of entry have been advised of this law and of the rules of the Treasury Department in enforcing the law. One of these rules requires the importer of a film to make an affidavit to the effect that the film he wishes to get out of the custom house is not a prize fight film. As if this were not enough Congress put a clause in the last tariff law conferring power on the Treasury Department to exclude any objectionable film and in particular film portrayals of prize fights.

Under the circumstances it is difficult to see how the prize fight films can be brought into this country unless smuggling is resorted to and smuggling is an occupation which Uncle Sam has always taken particular pains to discourage.

TEXAS COMPANY OF VITAGRAPH RETURNS.

After one of the most successful and extensive trips ever made by a company to take motion pictures, the players sent to Texas by the Vitagraph Company of America have returned. The trip, which covered 5,000 miles and embraced many parts of the Lone Star State; was for the purpose of making motion pictures to be used in several new features shortly to be released.

The determination on the part of the company to secure realism in the animated art was responsible for the long trip made by the company which included Eleanor Woodruff, Harry Northrup, Ned Finley, Eulalie Jensen, Darwin Karr, Logan Paul and Marion Henry. Lionel Belmore directed the making of the pictures.

POPULAR NOVEL TO BE VISUALIZED.

President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company has purchased the motion picture right of the novel, "The Girl from His Town," by Marie Van Vorst, from publishers, the Bobbs-Merrill Company, which will be produced as a multiple reel feature at the American Studios, under direction of Harry Pollard, with Margarita Fischer in the leading role.

STRAND CELEBRATES FIRST ANNIVERSARY.

New York's Big Picture Theater Finishes First Year with a Special Program.—Remarkable Record.

ON SUNDAY, April 11, the Strand Theater, Forty-seventh Street and Broadway, New York, celebrated its first anniversary. The house was handsomely decorated and the attendants were attired in new uniforms of blue and gray. The feature picture for the week was a Lasky production of "Snobs," with Victor Moore featured, a Keystone comedy and other interesting subjects. The orchestra rendered the overture from "William Tell" and the vocalists gave the quartet from "Rigoletto" and other operatic selections.

Here are a few of the statistics: During the past year 182,500,000 feet of film have been run through the picture machine. In all that time the machine has stopped but once during a performance for a fraction of a minute. The Lost and Found Department has returned $6,384.10, and of articles reported lost 78.65 per cent. have returned to owners. Eighty-six cases of illness have been treated, without any outside assistance, by the Strand's emergency and first-aid department. The theater staff, comprising 126 people, is the same to-day, with two exceptions, as it was the opening night. Two thousand, one hundred and ninety performances were presented at the Strand during the past year; 4,380,000 people have paid admissions to the Strand since the opening night.

Blaze In Betzwood.

Prompt Work by the Fire Corps Averted Serious Losses.—Business Uninterrupted.

A FIRE broke out late Tuesday afternoon, April 6, in the boiler room of the great Lubin plant at Betzwood, causing damage estimated at about $3,000. From the testing room the flames at one time threatened to spread into the shipping department and an alarm was sent out for the fire companies of Norristown and Phoenixville. These companies responded promptly and aided in putting the fire out. The fire was pretty well under control when the companies arrived. There was no panic and the girls employed in the place to the number of about a hundred, behaved with rare presence of mind and were quickly gotten out of danger.

Charles Dickson, a rewinder in the shipping department and a resident of Philadelphia, was burned rather severely about the face and hands. He was taken to the Norristown hospital. William Kulp and Frank Earl, who also work in the testing room, went to the rescue of Dickson and sustained slight burns. Others who suffered burns in fighting the flames were Charles Bowen, William Wilson, Frank Miller, Albert Hamilton and Frank Yeakle.

When Mr. Lubin was notified of the fire he hurried to Betzwood at once and helped in directing work of salvage.

Edward Simmons, the engineer and manager, said that the fire did not get beyond the shipping department and would not interfere with business.

W. V. Ranous Dead.

First Vitagraph Director Succumbs to Ill Health While in California.

WORD of the death in California of William V. Ranous, the first director employed by the Vitagraph Company and a pioneer in the field of motion pictures, was received at the Brooklyn studio of the company, Saturday, April 3. Mr. Ranous is survived by a widow.

William V. Ranous joined the Vitagraph Company at its inception, after a long career on the stage. His first work was in writing and then producing his own scenarios, under the direction of J. Stuart Blackton.

Mr. Ranous was responsible for many of the improvements that were made in the manufacture of motion pictures, and he was among the first to use a completed story in the animated art. Mr. Ranous, soon after joining the Vitagraph Company, organized his own company of players and adapted many stage successes for the camera.

Several years ago Mr. Ranous severed his connection with the Vitagraph and went into business for himself. This venture was not successful and after a short time he returned to the Vitagraph Company. His health failing, he was sent to the Pacific Coast with a company and produced many of the realistic pictures that the Vitagraph Company has presented.

Although he had been constantly employed by the Vitagraph Co., Mr. Ranous left his widow in straitened circumstances, and a fund has been started for her by the Vitagraph Players, headed by a subscription of $100 by the officials of the Company. Mr. Ranous was about 60 years old.

Looking Over Los Angeles

Blaisdell Circling Around Among the Great Motion Picture Producing Plants of the Coast.

By the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

Los Angeles, March 22.

HOW the screen prepares us for what we may see in far-away spots! Slipping across the Arizona desert eleven days ago the scene from the car window was one of deep interest. Altogether, it was not unfamiliar. Many time had we looked upon its counterfeit in the pictured drama of the west. But in the pictures you do not feel the sand—which in flying particles indescribably fine create a situation which leaves the much-coveted observation platform entirely deserted. Desert—deserted; the phrase doubly fits.

It was at Yuma that we left Arizona behind, but the desert continued. For a time it seemed as if the scant vegetation were getting even less. Great hillocks of sand, at a distance of a half mile looking in their smoothness like ocean-work rocks, paralleled the course of the train.

Then the Salton Sea, two hundred-odd feet below ocean level. Square mile of it after square mile, and not a craft of any description. In all the sixty or seventy miles I saw two small boats, and these at anchor. On into the Imperial Valley. Trees and green grass are now seen. Then follow rows of great palms and of poplars. Where the desert appealed to the imagination—with its countless unrecorded tragedies extending over scores and hundreds of years—this wonderful vegetation appeals to the eye—refreshing, satisfying.

The sun in a blaze of heat is going down behind the mountains. To the west the sides of the hills are in the dust. Overhead the clouds are in full sunlight. Off in the distance are the tops of a second range of mountains, snowclad. Then we pass within a dozen miles of the base of old Mount San Jacinto, 11,000 feet above us—and that apex sixteen miles still further away.

We may see higher mountains before we get back home, may even ascend them, but noble San Jacinto will live in the memory.

Activities at the New York Plant.

Ad Kessel, president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, looked good to me that noonday I called at the Keystone studio out at seventeen hundred and something Alessandro street, Los Angeles. He was wearing a summery suit, one matching the ninety-in-the-shade heat of Old Sol. The last time I had met Mr. Kessel was in his New York office some time around New Year's, when the weather was different—very much different. If any one attempts to tell you it is not hot in Los Angeles in the daytime just say sh-h-h on the cool stuff. Native pride will carry a man far. But the nights? Ah! The blanket is the thing.

In the two months Mr. Kessel has been on the coast he has done a lot of work. He has supervised the construction of additions to the stage area of Keystone—an increase of more than 100 per cent.; he has caused the erection of many new dressing rooms; more important still, he has acquired a large plot of ground opposite the studios. The land comprises a whole block front, over 300 feet in length, and in depth extending a good distance from Alessandro street. Here provision will be made for big special productions, and undoubtedly an electrically lighted studio will be a part of the new equipment. Building will begin immediately. Right now there are seven or eight Keystone companies at work, and it is intended to create several more. The present output includes three singles each week and a double every other week.

The New York Motion Picture Corporation's forces out in the canyon soon will be moved into Los Angeles, where they will take possession of the twenty-six-acre tract in Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, recently acquired. The players under Tom Ince are now working on a mammoth subject, to run perhaps ten or twelve reels, and the cost of which will go into top-notch figures. Among the stars already under special contract with the New York are Dustin Farnum and H. B. Warner, the latter of whom was last week seen in Los Angeles in "Under Cover."

Mr. Kessel showed the World man about the studio. Mack Sennett was at work on the big comedy which is designed to outdo "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Mr. Sennett is playing in it himself. The other principals are Owen Moore, Ford Sterling and Mabel Normand. When Mr. Sennett was asked if he was going to beat "Tillie" he shrugged his shoulders. "We hope to," he said. "We have a good story, and it is developing steadily." The star comedy director pointed out some of the sets he has been using and some in process of construction. They are worth while. Mr. Kessel indicated a village of forty houses now being built on a neighboring hill which will later be used as backgrounds in the big Sennett feature. Fifteen weeks, probably, will be the time devoted to the making of the subject, but delays were caused by bad weather.

While going the rounds we met Mr. Moore, Charles Orling, for four years with Pathe; Dell Henderson, new Keystone director and recently elected president of the Photoplayers, the fine big organization of west coast motion picture actors; Charles Murray, long-time A1 comedian; Ford Sterling, who incidentally told what happened to him when in a German comedy playing in Cleveland on St. Patrick's day it fell to him, attired in a yellow suit, to give utterance to his line of "Down with the Irish." Sterling was not killed, but his escape was a narrow one.

Mr. Kessel said that the canyon ranch, on which there is a lease for ten years, would be placed in charge of a caretaker and held ready for the making of unusually big stuff. On the ranch are 250 horses, 40 oxen, many hogs and hundreds of mountain goats among other animals.

Leo, a Horsley Lion, under Influence of Twilight Sleep, Is Operated Upon for Brain Pressure.

Mr. Kessel said he expected to remain in Los Angeles for another month and that upon his return to New York there would probably be considerable activity at the Fort Lee studio of the N. Y. M. P.

Where Blackwell Produces.

Just across the street and a block farther out is the plant of the Norbig Film Manufacturing Company, of which Frank E. Norton is president. The studio is under lease by Carlyle Blackwell's Favorite Players. We had the pleasure of renewing acquaintance with Mr. Blackwell, who said that things were going smoothly with him and that this week he would begin work on "Mr. Grex, of Monte Carlo," E. Phillips Oppenheim's latest story.

The Norbig does industrial and commercial work. Frank V. Biggy, the secretary-treasurer, escorted the writer over his compact plant, which includes a stage 60 by 50 feet. This will shortly be enlarged by the addition of twenty feet.

Horsley's Enterprise.

It is a corking good animal show David Horsley puts up at his big park out at Washington and Main streets. The site of the arena and jungle, as it is officially called, is but a few minutes' ride from the business center of the city. Here is a plot of ground 595 by 350 feet, more than half of which is given over to the housing and exhibition of sixty-three trained animals. The remainder, 225 by 350 feet, will be devoted to the manufacture of motion pictures. Plans are now being drawn, and it is expected ground will be broken during the latter part of March for the laying of foundations for the stages and laboratories.

Much money already has been spent on the park. On the main street side $1,600 has been laid out on a high cement fence. A like amount has been expended on shrubs and plants. An auditorium seating 1,600 persons slopes down to an arena which lies in the center of the semi-circle of cages of wild animals. Handsome brutes, and in splendid condition, all of them are, too—that is, all but Leo, who on March 20 was made the central figure in a twilight sleep party, at which time Dr. Alvin Shattuck, of Los Angeles, successfully removed a splinter affecting the big fellow's brain. There had been a real fight among the lions back in London about the time of the debarkation. Leo recently has displayed symptoms of brain pressure. The operation kept Leo in retirement for a few days.

In the construction of his stages and arenas Mr. Horsley will depart from orthodox methods. Instead of each set being laid out on a square or on an oblong section the floor space of each will conform to the angle of the lens, the camera or cameras being placed in the center of the group. This will enable the builder to construct permanent walls and windows, variety for different subjects being secured through shifting of pictures, curtains, furniture and rugs. In the case of the animal stages there will be twelve divisions in an area 140 feet square. The director and cameraman will occupy a central cage 10 feet in diameter. With the twelve sections Mr. Horsley believes he will secure great economy of time, as players and animals may be shifted from one scene to another without the great delay involved in striking one set and constructing another.

Mr. Horsley showed the World man his new camera. It looks like "the goods." The particular instrument is the hand-made model and is somewhat larger than will be its more compact successors.

"I have opened this animal show here for several reasons," said Mr. Horsley on Sunday afternoon. "In the first place, if the animals were not regularly put through their tricks they would in a few months revert to the wild. Their daily appearances keep them in condition and also enables their trainers to maintain form at the best. Then, again, the admissions, which are 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for children, go far toward the maintenance of the establishment. You know the meat bill for these lions is not small." And the owner pointed to the big dray loaded with beef and smiled. The feeding of the lions forms one of the features of the afternoon's entertainment.

There are in the show twenty-nine lions and fourteen bears, a half of the latter of the polar variety. Joseph A. McField is the supervising director and Harry E. Tudor is general manager. The list of performers include Captain Bonavita, Mme. D'Arcy D'Avilly, Herr Batty, Ora Cecil, M. Tietze, Clown Leo, Vera Robson, M. Gay, Mlle Ottawa and Marie Gavetto. Then among the animal stars there are "Fighting Fitz," the kangaroo who stands on his tail and with his hind hoofs plants a double solar plexus at the same time as he lands both "mits," while in his placid and serene eyes there rest a "shame to do it" sort of look that is irresistibly funny; "Skatrina," the grizzly who with skates strapped to his hind feet stands erect and whirls about the arena, and Tweedledee and Tweedledum, the comedy elephants.

For the making of animal pictures Mr. Horsley has a remarkably complete establishment. In his public show there are fifteen acts, the length of which compels him to divide his entertainment into three alternating weekly divisions. There can be no question that he has a combination of trainers and animals of the highest rank. His present intention is the production of one three-reel and one single reel comedy each week. BLAISDELL.

"POP" MANLEY'S PIG; CLEO MADISON'S COW.

"Pop" Manley, 84 years old, the oldest actor actually working, either on the legitimate or moving picture stage, is an epicure. So is Cleo Madison. Miss Madison likes nothing better than a glass of cold, rich milk of a morning, and in order that she may get it, uncontaminated and undiluted, Miss Madison has bought a cow. Every morning Miss Madison goes out to the little cow-garage in the rear of her home and milks bossy herself. "The Wild Irish Rose," a two-reel drama to be released by the Universal under the Gold Seal brand on April 13, bossy is photographed in several scenes, in one of which Miss Madison is shown milking her pet, and after drawing a pail of same pitching it over the hateful squireen who is pestering her with his attentions.

"Pop" and His Pig.

"Pop" Manley, on the other hand, says he has no time to be bothered with cows, although he admits that Miss Madison has the right idea. "Pop" has a litter of pigs. They are all lively little black fellows and "Pop" has spaded up a "wallow" for them in the back yard of his home in Universal City, Cal. When "Pop" learned that Cleo Madison was going to have her cow photographed in "The Wild Irish Rose," he immediately conferred with Bob Leonard, the producer of "The Master Key" serial in which "Pop" played an important part, and arranged to have the handsomest of his piggies photographed in "The Doorway of Destruction," Francis Ford's two-reel drama which is to be released under the Bison (Universal) brand on April 17.

JACK TUCKER JOINS LUBIN.

Jack Tucker, comedian, writer and artist and a member of the famous vaudeville team of Williams and Tucker, has joined the Lubin players and has gone to the Lubin southern studio at Jacksonville, Florida, where he will be featured in a number of his own comedies. Tucker will long be remembered as the creator of the slang classics, "Skinney's Finish" and "Driftwood," two playlets that were enormously popular in vaudeville for years.

Tucker has had a long theatrical training on the legitimate stage and in vaudeville and it will be under the Lubin bell that he will make his debut as a photoplayer. Tucker will be seen first in a number of one reel comedies written by himself.

PEARL WHITE BACK AT WORK IN "ELAINE."

Pearl White, heroine of Pathe's "The Exploits of Elaine," has just recovered from an attack of pneumonia, contracted through exposure while working in outdoor scenes in bad weather, and yet some people think the photo player leads an easy life!

Famous Players Anniversary

Pioneer Feature Film Company Celebrates its Third Year—Has Produced Many Notable Pictures.

APRIL 12th marks the third anniversary of the Famous Players Film Co., the pioneer concern in the presentation of famous stars and celebrated plays in motion pictures. To review the progress of this company from its inception to the present would mean virtually to chronicle the entire history of the feature film. Founded by Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Porter in April, 1912, this concern has steadily, and without interruption, maintained its supremacy as the foremost feature film producing company in the world, and though its policy has been adopted by a number of other companies, its prestige or standard have never been surpassed.

Adolph Zukor.

The instantaneous success of Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," the initial release of the Famous Players, was further extended by James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda." After these two productions the popularity of the Famous Players was so firmly established that exhibitors throughout the country demanded releases with more frequency and regularity. In compliance with this national demand, the now celebrated "30 Famous Features a Year," the first regular feature program was inaugurated. When at the expiration of this memorable feature year, the Paramount Pictures Corporation was organized, the number of Famous Players releases, again by unanimous demand, was increased to thirty-six features a year, and since the inception of the program, additional releases requested from the Famous Players to fill open dates on the program will bring the total number of subjects released by the end of the fiscal year to 48.

Daniel Frohman.

Shortly before the advent of the Paramount Program, the Famous Players effected affiliations with Charles Frohman and Henry W. Savage, whereby it obtained the motion picture rights of the great dramatic successes, several hundred in number, of these two prominent producers. These alliances further strengthened the impregnable position of the Famous Players.

Among the more important subjects produced by the Famous Players Film Co. since its inauguration are Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda," Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," Mary Pickford in "The Bishop's Carriage," Henry E. Dixey in "Chelsea 7750," Lillie Langtry in "His Neighbor's Wife," James O'Neill in "The Count of Monte Cristo," Mary Pickford in "Caprice," Carlotta Neilson in "Leah Kleschna," "A Daughter of the Hills," Cecilia Loftus in "A Lady of Quality," John Barrymore in "An American Citizen," Cyril Scott in "The Day of Days," Mary Pickford in "Hearts Adrift," "The Pride of Jennico," Mary Pickford in "A Good Little Devil," "Clothes," Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country," William Farnum in "The Redemption of David Corson," Malcolm Williams in "The Brute," Arnold Daly in "The Port of Missing Men," "A Woman's Triumph," Bruce McRae in "The Ring and the Man," Hazel Dawn in "One of Our Girls," Carlyle Blackwell in "The Spitfire," Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate," Jane Grey in "The Little Gray Lady," Paul McAllister in "The Scales of Justice," William Courtleigh in "The Better Man," "Aftermath," H. B. Warner in "The Lost Paradise," Henrietta Crosman in "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," Mary Pickford in "Such a Little Queen," Bertha Kalich in "Marta of the Lowlands," Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower," Maclyn Arbuckle in "The County Chairman," Mary Pickford in "Behind the Scenes," David Higgins in "His Last Dollar," John Barrymore in "The Man from Mexico," Gladys Hanson in "The Straight Road," Tyrone Power in "Aristocracy," May Irwin in "Mrs. Black is Back," John Emerson in "The Conspiracy," Marguerite Clark in "The Crucible," William Farnum in "The Sign of the Cross," Mary Pickford in "Cinderella," Edward Abeles in "The Million," Florence Reed in "The Dancing Girl," Marie Doro in "The Morals of Marcus," Mary Pickford in "Mistress Nell," Gaby Deslys in "Her Triumph," John Emerson in "The Bachelor's Romance," William H. Crane in "David Harum," "The Love Route," Alice Dovey in "The Commanding Officer," Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green," John Barrymore in "Are You a Mason?" William Elliott in "When We Were Twenty-One," "May Blossom," Hazel Dawn in "Niobe."

It will be seen from this list that the Famous Players have introduced to the motion picture public not less than thirty-five prominent stars, many of whom, such as Marguerite Clark, Marie Doro, Hazel Dawn and John Barrymore, have through this medium also become international film favorites.

Under the management of the Famous Players, under which she has appeared exclusively since her return to the screen following her appearance in David Belasco's production of "A Good Little Devil," Mary Pickford has attained the greatest distinction of her career, and has maintained a degree of popularity unparalleled in all the annals of stage or screen.

Not alone in the producing, but also in the distributing branches of the feature industry, the Famous Players have been a potent factor. The presentation of the "30 Famous Features a Year" marked a radical departure from the feature booking methods then in vogue, the efficiency of which plan has been paralleled only by the Paramount Program, which was in effect a broad amplification of the basic idea originated by the Famous Players.

Edwin S. Porter.

The policy of the Famous Players in effect in the United States has been duplicated with similar success throughout the entire civilized world, and the stars appearing on the Famous Players program, due to the manner in which they have been presented, have been popularized in every foreign country, where they to-day enjoy as great a vogue as they do in America.

Recently another important advance step in the distribution of important feature productions was taken in the creation of the Select Film Booking Agency, a national booking system, the purpose of which is to adopt accepted theatrical methods of the highest order in the booking of special photoplay attractions, for indefinite engagements over a circuit of important theatres, and graduating into the regular program after individual theatres throughout the country have been played according to their relative importance in their territories.

The future plans of the Famous Players cannot be definitely calculated at this time, due to their variety and scope. Certain it is that the leadership it has maintained for three years will not be relinquished. Such productons as "The Eternal City," and the series of important features of this nature to follow, produced regardless of the time, labor or expense entailed, will undoubtedly not only protect the supremacy of the Famous Players, but also that of the American feature throughout the entire world.

By an odd coincidence "The Eternal City," the Famous Players Film Company's greatest production, opens at the Astor Theatre for an unlimited engagement April 12th, the third anniversary of the day upon which the concern was organized.

POLICE METHODS IS VITAGRAPH SUBJECT.

In the detective drama, "The Girl Who Might Have Been," a Vitagraph three-part Broadway star feature, written by Charles Brown and produced by Lionel Belmore, there is a continual sequence of thrills that keeps the spectator on the "qui vive" of expectancy during its entire action. Two of the characters have a hand to hand struggle on the roof of a three-story building that is so terrifically realistic it is almost impossible to believe that one of them is not thrown off bodily as appears in the picture. Another of the characters is put through the police third degree, besides being beaten up and thrown around. A number of the most thrilling scenes were taken in the Rogues Gallery, Police Headquarters, New York city, and comprise the most interesting episodes of the picture.

"The Girl Who Might Have Been" employs a cast including Harry Morey, Ned Finley, Paul Scardon, Frank Currier, Edward Elkas and Betty Gray, and is scheduled for an early release with its initial presentation at the Vitagraph Theater.

INTERSTATE FEATURE CO. FOUNDED.

Kenneth MacDougall, vice-president and general manager of the Interstate Feature Film Co., with headquarters in Middletown, Conn., was in New York a few days ago and signed a contract with the Picture Playhouse Film Co., of 71 West 23d street., to release the productions being made by his company through that well-known distributing agency. The first picture is a four-reeler entitled "Bulldogs of the Trail," a sample print of which has already been prepared.

Mr. MacDougall produces and plays leads with the company, calling to his aid wide experience as a vaudeville actor, cow puncher, press agent, circus rider, deputy sheriff, and managing editor of a big daily newspaper. Miss Snyder Shields, leading lady in the first release, spent all of last season at Providence, R. I., as leading lady with the Albee stock company.

The Interstate people plan to make two features a month. The capital interested is that of New England business men who have great confidence in the ability of Mr. MacDougall to make a success in the feature film field.

WINCHESTER WITH PARAMOUNT.

Tarleton Winchester, whose work in the moving picture section of the New York Telegraph has attracted considerable attention during the past year, has accepted a position with the Paramount Pictures Corporation as director of advertising and publicity. Mr. Winchester took up his new duties on April 5, and hereafter it is expected that Miss Johnson will have more time to devote to the rapidly growing Paramount house organs.

FEATURE REELS STOLEN.

Harry Olsham, manager of the Crescent Theater, 36 West 135th Street, New York City, reports that two 2-reel feature pictures, in the custody of his messenger boy, were stolen from the office of the 23d Street branch of the Universal exchange on Wednesday, March 31. The titles of the pictures are "The Honor of Bill Jackson," and "The Little Rebel;" both two-reel features and both made by the United Film Service. Information regarding these pictures will be thankfully received by Mr. Olsham.

A CORRECTION.

In the Projection Department of the issue of March 20th, there appeared on page 1760 an item headed, "From Fort Worth, Texas," in which the statement was made that The Healy did not employ union men. We are advised that this was incorrect and that the non-union house was Healy Number Two.

CHANGE IN EDISON PROGRAM.

Beginning Monday, April 16th, the single reel which Edison has for some time been releasing on alternate Mondays, will be dropped from the program. This has been brought about by the adding to the studio's production a weekly three-reel feature upon which Edison is spending considerable effort to prove the contention that no play, no matter in how many reels told, can surpass the strength of compactness in the three reelers well produced. Every one of the Edison features is subjected to the most searching analysis and criticism of two boards of critics who have spent their life with the drama. If any part of the play, no matter how much or little of it, can be strengthened by doing it over, it is ordered done over, no matter what the expense. A feature which is remarkable from the standpoint that it passed both of these boards without an iota of change is "The Stoning," in which Viola Dana, the Broadway star, is featured and which was produced by Charles Brabin. The unusual praise that this called forth from Mrs. Whaley of the National Board of Censorship makes the Edison management feel more certain that the method of internal censorship is both practical and successful. Both men and women, players, men of business and of all ages, compose these boards, intentionally a mixed body in order to represent the mixed tastes of the public. Of course, the three-reel features which Edison has been releasing on alternate Mondays will not be affected by this new Monday program. Manager Pljmpton, in a recent interview, declared that one of the chief reasons for there not being a better class of plays at large was due to too many plays being turned out weekly by a studio. This change appears to be a practical application of that belief.

Vitagraph Theater Program

Varied List of Pictures on This Week's Menu.—Leading Players in Strong Roles.

A program of pictures that will suit all tastes has been arranged for the Vitagraph Theater for the week commencing Sunday, April 11. A war drama, "Pawns of Mars," a story of the clash at arms of the mythical people of two imaginary countries in which possession of a powerful explosive becomes necessary to determine the outcome of the war, is the feature. Donald Buchanan wrote "Pawns of Mars" which was produced by Theodore Marston, who selected a cast for its portroyal that includes Charles Kent, Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison, L. Rogers Lytton, George Cooper, Nicholas Dunaew, Charles Wellesley, J. Herbert Frank and others. While the atmosphere of war pervades the picture, the tension is relieved by a delightful love story that involves the pawns of the War God and in the picture of peace that closes the drama, the God of Love rises paramount.

Next in interest to the feature, the Vitagraph announces two dramatic pictures "Closing the Circuit," a stirring tale by the late Morgan Robertson, in which the workings of the Creator are made manifest during a terrific storm at sea, the principal characters being portrayed by Paul Kelly, Frank Currier, Harry Davenport, Ned Finley and Mary Maurice, and "Elsa's Brother," a dramatic story in which a man, supposed to have been murdered, returns to forgive the accused, presented by Norma Talmadge, Van Dyke Brooke, S. Rankin Drew and Donald Hall.

The remaining pictures of a long program are devoted to comedy and include one of Elaine Sterne's delightful "Sonny Jim" series, "Sonny Jim and the Valentine," in which Bobby Connelly, as Sonny, in purchasing a valentine becomes a Good Samaritan with the help of Tefft Johnson, Edwina Robbins, Helen Connelly and Ethel Corcoran, and "Whose Husband," an amusing story in which the strong arm of a strong-minded woman rules the matrimonial roost, introducing Flora Finch, Kate Price, Jay Dwiggins and Harry Fisher as the principal fun makers.

Frohman Making "Builder of Bridges."

The Frohman Amusement Corporation's "Builder of Bridges" company, which is making the famous Alfred Sutro drama, in which the late Kyrle Bellew starred some years ago, has returned from Atlantic City, where several scenes for the photoplay were made. A number of exteriors were made with the sea for a background, and that same well-known backdrop furnished by Dame Nature was employed in the taking of some interiors when the sun parlor of the Hotel Shelburn was used as the setting. The sun parlor scenes have turned out to the entire satisfaction of Gustav Frohman, president of the corporation. The breaking of the rollers on the beach is plainly seen through the large windows of the Shelburn's sun parlor.

The lead in "The Builder of Bridges" is being played by C. Aubry Smith, who is now playing the lead with Margaret Illington in "The Lie." Marie Wells is playing opposite to him. The company is now working on the remainder of the interiors for the picture at the Fifty-fourth Street studio of the company.

Lubin Opens Special Feature Office

J. S. Hebrew, Formerly Connected with the General Film, in Charge.

A MILD sensation was created in film circles in Philadelphia when it became known that Lubin had rented an office in the heart of the film district on Vine street for the purpose of renting his special features direct to the exhibitor. The offices on Vine street are only temporary and have just been opened, but evidences of interest on the part of exhibitors were plentiful. Lubin has been joined by three other producers of the old licensed group, Vitagraph, Selig and Essanay, and this office is a branch of the new company.

A World man found J. S. Hebrew, who had been in the employ of the Philadelphia branch of the General Film Company and who but recently made a business trip through the west, in full charge, assisted by other former employees of the General Film Company.

"We are putting out nothing at present," said Mr. Hebrew, "except 'The Eagle's Nest.' We have a goodly number of special features which we are in a position to release at any time, and ever since it became known that we are getting ready to rent them we have been overwhelmed with inquiries. I have a hundred days' booking on 'The Eagle's Nest' now, all of which practically came here without any solicitation."

Exhibitors' Booking Offices

Philadelphia Exhibitors Combine to Book on Co-operative Plan.

IN THE same building where the Exhibitors' League has its offices, 1339 Vine street, headquarters have been opened for a new enterprise, called "The Exhibitors' Booking Offices." This organization was formed by about a dozen exhibitors, who own some of the biggest motion picture houses in the city. The president is Samuel F. Wheeler. Michael J. Walsh is secretary and Jay Emanuel treasurer and general manager. The features are selected by a board of directors, which is composed of Samuel F. Wheeler, J. M. Delmar, Michael J. Walsh, Harry Green, William Gane, Solomon Hopkins and Carl Wolf Miller. The new company intends to operate in eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and District of Columbia. The officers say that their business is growing and that larger offices may soon become necessary.

J. Frank Brockliss Dined

Publicity Men and Newspaper Writers Guests of Doc Willat at Dinner Given in Honor of the London Film Magnate.

On Wednesday night, March 31st, a number of motion picture writers met in the lobby of the Hotel Astor as guests of "Doc" Willat to meet J. Frank Brockliss of London who is making one of his not infrequent visits to this side to consult with Siegmund Lubin whose product he handles in England. Doc Willat then took Mr. Brockliss and his guests across the street to Shanley's cabaret where a very pleasant evening was spent. Those who were there were Arthur Leslie, Sam Spedon of the Vitagraph Company, Hopp Hadley of United Film Service, Willard Holcomb, critic, playwright, etc., Hugh Hoffman, free lance publicity man, Paul Gulick of the Universal Company, Bennie Schullberg of the Famous Players, Tarlton Winchester of the News, and Mr. Lowenthal of the Star and others.

MISS HELEN WARE WITH COSMOS FEATURES.

Wide interest is attached to the announcement that Arthur H. Jacobs, President of the Cosmos Feature Film Corp., has signed Helen Ware to appear in one or more feature pictures. Miss Ware's remarkable work in "The Third Degree," which took this country by storm, will be remembered by young and old alike. Her equally wonderful histrionic ability portrayed in "Within the Law," which ran for two seasons in New York; her unsurpassable acting in "The Price," in which she appeared for sixty-two weeks in every large city in the United States, will leave no doubt in the mind of any theater goer to Miss Ware's right of being styled America's foremost emotional actress. Whenever she has seen fit to give her services to vaudeville, she has been headlined everywhere. Miss Ware has won for herself the unstinted admiration of both the press and the public; her remarkable acting having called forth acclaim by all who have seen her. The play selected by the Cosmos Feature Film Corp. in which Miss Ware will make her first screen appearance, will be announced as soon as a play capable of her abilities will be determined upon. Undoubtedly exhibitors and photoplay goers will look forward with interest and equal pleasure to this advent of Helen Ware as a screen star.

John W. Noble

JOHN W. NOBLE, who is coming to be looked upon as one of the real students of the art of motion picture directing now in the business of producing films, has had one of the most interesting careers in the business.

In the first place, "Jack" Noble, as he is known to a host of friends in and out of the business, is an ex-officer of the United States Army which gives him the experience of having seen trouble both in and out of the studio, and in the second place, his unbounded enthusiasm has brought results which would not have been achieved in a man with less of the push and go in him.

Mr. Noble first began his career as a director of pictures by putting on features as an independent producer. His work soon attracted the attention of several manufacturers, and he finally was engaged to start the "Mutual Girl" series, which was nothing if it was not a commercial success.

Long before that he had begun such a serious study of the art that he constantly turned his attention toward features with the result that he was soon back in the feature game, this time as director for the B. A. Rolfe Company, for which he made "The Three of Us," in which Mabel Taliaferro was starred.

His most recent picture has just been turned in ready for release, and will have the honor of being the first picture released on the new Metro programme. The film is a picturization of the story, "Satan Sanderson." Orrin Johnson is playing the title role. In this film, Mr. Noble has again shown his mastery of detail in some novel lighting effects and the careful timing of double exposure, both of which features make the picture distinctive.

But Mr. Noble has forgotten all about "Satan Sanderson." He is now out in California working on "The High Road" in which Valli Valli is being featured by the Rolfe Company.

RENFAX COMPANY WINS SUIT.

Circuit Judge Hunt in the United States District Court has just handed down a decision in a suit against the Renfax Film Company, manufacturers and distributors of musical pictures, for alleged infringement. The case was dismissed by Judge Hunt, who handed down a careful and elaborate opinion covering about a dozen pages, thoroughly reviewing the matter and sustaining the claims of the Renfax Company. The Renfax Film Company was represented by Attorney Wm. L. Morris, 2 Rector Street, New York.

NEW THEATER FOR HARRISON, TENN.

Plans for the erection of a $10,000 building, 42x150 feet, the lower floor of which will be devoted to a picture house costing $3,500, were completed recently by the purchase of a lot on Roane street, Harriman, Tenn., by five business men of that city. A commodious lobby of marble and glass will make the front attractive, and seats for 800 have been planned. Two projection machines will be used and while the structure has been originally designed for moving pictures, a stage big enough to accommodate vaudeville, should this form of amusement be sought, will be provided for.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

EXPOSITION AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Exhibitors of the Northwest Will Hold Five Day Meeting and Motion Picture Show.

ARRANGEMENTS are now under way for a five day convention and exposition of moving picture interests at Minneapolis, Minn., to be held at Arcadia Hall, South Fifth Street, on May 3 to 7. The event will be held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the Northwest, which organization includes exhibitors from the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Iowa and Montana. The attendance from these states will be augmented by a delegation from Chicago which will be marshaled by W. J. Sweeney.

For the convention an elaborate program covering the several days has been arranged, winding up with a grand ball Friday night at exposition hall. The exposition feature contemplates the assembling of representative exhibits to be made by manufacturers of motion pictures and accessories. Plans showing spaces and rates have been sent to all manufacturers and many reservations have already been made. Information regarding this feature can be obtained from William A. Steffes, secretary, 555 Temple Court, Minneapolis, or of William J. Sweeney, Chicago representative, 1400 Masonic Building, Chicago, Ill.

Numerous features for the entertainment of delegates and visitors have been planned. On Monday there will be an athletic entertainment at Convention Hall; on Tuesday there will be an automobile trip for the ladies in the afternoon and a musicale in the evening at the hall, finishing the day with a banquet at the Hotel Dykman at night.

On Wednesday there will be more automobile trips, a luncheon and a big costume and frolic and gambol at night. Motion pictures will be taken of this event. Election of officers will take place on Thursday and there will be further tours about the city prior to the grand ball in the evening. The grand march will be led by Francis Bushman and Beverley Bayne. Other actresses and actors will be present.

The event is in charge of a committee consisting of William A. Steefes, secretary and general manager; assisted by Harry H. Green, president; J. Gilosky, vice-president, and O. C. Stelzner, treasurer. The entertainment and reception committee are J. P. Agnew, chairman, Otto N. Raths, S. R. Thompson, St. Paul; Otto Meister, Milwaukee; D. W. Chamberlain, Thomas W. Saxe, C. E. Van Duzee, Minneapolis; William H. Carrey, Wilmar; Ralph W. Parker, Duluth; Mrs. J. V. Bryson, Mrs. Charles Thall, Mrs. Gallagher, Mrs. W. L. Merrill and Mrs. O. A. Rowe.

'RAH FOR READING.

President Zerr Is Boosting for the Big State Convention in June.

READING, PA., familiarly known as "pretzel-town," will undoubtedly be more popular at the conclusion of the annual convention and exhibition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, not only in the Keystone state, but in every state in the eastern section of the country. With the official announcement that the national convention is called for California, the Reading exhibitors have pledged themselves to go the limit. There is little doubt but that the Reading convention will exceed anything ever attempted in the state.

Convention Manager Ben. H. Zerr, president of the Reading local and of the state league, has let one of his secrets out of the bag when at Harrisburg last week by inviting a number of state officials to attend a grand ball and banquet. Mr. Zerr has arranged a surprise for each of the three days, June 7, 8 and 9, when the convention will take place.

The "pretzel" will play an important part in advertising the exhibit. While there will be an abundance of metal, cardboard and other material in the shape of the pretzel, the real article will be there also. The Reading exhibitors made themselves famous two years ago in Philadelphia, where a convention was held. Six barrels of pretzels were distributed among the delegates.

Several noted song writers are on the job assembling the best that is in them. A silver loving cup will be awarded to the composer of the best song on the pretzel. Monroe A. Althouse, conductor of the noted Ringgold Band, located in Reading, is working on a new march to be dedicated to the picture men.

The entertainment of the visiting delegates and their friends will play an important part of the convention. While ample time will be allotted for business sessions, the delegates' wives and families will be well taken care of. Sightseeing trips will be made over the beautiful mountains, of which Berks county is noted, and proud of.

The Reading Chamber of Commerce, of which Henry J. Hayden is president and Sherrard Ewing secretary, is greatly interested in the coming convention and have already generously contributed towards the affair. In addition, the Chamber has promised the local picture men several entirely new novelties appropriate to state conventions.

Julius G. Hansen, secretary of the Reading local, is busy communicating with various film companies arranging for the personal appearance of the most popular actors and actresses. This feature will interest the public more than the exhibit proper, and capacity throngs will doubtless assemble daily at the Rajah Temple, which will be the headquarters.

Among the Reading exhibitors active in the arrangements include Messrs. Carr and Schad, George W. Bennethum, Frank D. Hill, Smith and Kantner, Hen. Johnston, Charles L. Snyder, Charles A. Graul, Mr. Reinert, and Frank A. Gould. Mr. Gould is publicity representative of the state body.

CONVENTION COMMITTEE AT WORK.

Establishes Headquarters in San Francisco With M. E. Cory in Charge.

MARION S. PEARCE of Baltimore, and Mr. M. E. Cory of San Francisco, National President and Vice-President respectively of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, were in New York last week on business connected with the national convention and exposition which is to be held in San Francisco July 13 to 16. Mr. Cory has been made chairman of the committee in charge of all arrangements. He will be assisted by a committee of San Francisco exhibitors. The other members of the General Executive Committee are President Pearce, Secretary W. R. Wilson of Columbus, Ohio; Treasurer P. J. Jeup of Detroit, and A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles. Judge Tugwell will have charge of the arrangements for the entertainment of the visitors while in Los Angeles.

San Francisco has the reputation of knowing how and with the added attraction of the great exposition now open, and the great picture studios at Los Angeles, this should be the most successful convention ever held.

Mr. Cory has been successful in getting the Selig Company to alter the schedule of its coast special to arrive in San Francisco on the morning of July 13th. The train will remain the entire time the convention is in session, including the grand ball with which the convention closes Friday night, July 16th. This ball will no doubt witness the greatest gathering of motion picture stars ever known.

Headquarters of the convention committee will be established in the offices of the California Exhibitors' League, room 306, Mechanics Bank Building, Market and Mason Streets, San Francisco. There will be a general information bureau maintained and hotel reservations and all other matters will be gladly attended to for anyone who will address the committee. Full information will be published in this paper each week as the plans of the committee are completed.

Manufacturers of pictures and accessories and supplies are urged to take advantage of this opportunity of placing their business personally before large numbers of exhibitors who have never been able to attend any of the national conventions that have been held in the east. These western exhibitors on the whole are far ahead of their eastern brothers in every way. They have better houses. They get higher admissions. They buy more and better equipment. You will miss a golden opportunity if you are not at San Francisco with a big exhibit. If you have an exhibit at the Panama Pacific Exposition, it is especially to your interest to help get the exhibitors to attend the convention. You can maintain simply an information booth, distributing invitations to visit your exhibition and giving its location.

NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION IN APRIL.

President Wolff Advances the Date to April 21 and Changes the Place to Buffalo.

THE New York State Convention will be held at Buffalo, N. Y., on April 21, instead of in New York City in May as previously announced by President Wolff in these columns. The reasons for the change are stated by President Wolff in the following letter:

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City—

"Dear Sir: Some time ago I issued a call for a New York State meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, through one of the Trade Journals, which was to be held in Utica, N. Y., in May, but since the amalgamation of the New York Locals of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League I feel it my duty to hasten our State meeting, and I trust you will give the fact all the publicity you can in your coming issues. New York State officers have decided to call this meeting at the Statler Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, April 21st. Exhibitors throughout the State of New York are hereby invited, and asked to take part and respond to the call, whether they are members of the league or not.

"There are several dangerous bills to be acted upon in Albany, and there are other matters of vital interest that must be discussed and acted upon at once. This is going to be a get-together meeting that all harmony will prevail.

Yours respectfully,

A. N. WOLFF,

President New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

NEW LEAGUE QUARTERS AT ST. LOUIS.

Large Attendance of Exhibitors Compels a Change of Meeting Place.

THE Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, which was organized a few months ago, has grown to be a strong and vigorous body. Ninety per cent. of the exhibitors in St. Louis are members, and the weekly meetings, which are held at 10.30 on Friday, at the assembly rooms of the League in suite 312 Benoist Building, are always well attended by an enthusiastic crowd of managers and proprietors, filled to overflowing with the get-together and stick-together feeling that is the backbone of organizations of this character.

The League has done a great deal of excellent work and much good work is planned for the future. The financial statement shows a healthy balance on the right side of the ledger, and every member is proud of the order and what it represents.

At the meeting held on March 25th, a motion was made to secure larger quarters, a place that may be considered permanent, and can be fitted up in a style befitting the strength and importance of the organization, and a committee of five was appointed to investigate the advantages of a suite of rooms that is being considered for the purpose.

A booklet, substantially bound in boards, containing the by-laws, has been furnished to each member. The book contains, besides the by-laws, aims and intentions of the League, a list of suggestions which express the spirit of the League and are well worth remembering by exhibitors everywhere:

Do not waste time criticising your competitor.
The exhibitor who tends to his own business is wise.
Always meet your brother exhibitor with a smile.
Pay him a friendly visit; invite him to your theater.
Exchange of ideas is the source of education.
When business falls off, don't lose your temper.
Do not fail to attend every Friday, at 10 A. M.

TO REORGANIZE SAN FRANCISCO LOCAL.

The plans that have been under way for several weeks for a complete reorganization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of San Francisco have reached a stage where the success of the move seems certain. Officials of the State League have made a tour of the moving picture houses of the city and have enlisted the support of most of the prominent exhibitors, having interested many in the work of the organization who had heretofore refused to join the league.

President H. L. Beach of the State League recently issued a call for a mass meeting of exhibitors and this was held in the offices of the organization in the Mechanics' Building on March 24th. The situation was gone over thoroughly and a second meeting was called for March 31. This gathering will be held in the Pacific Building, where the use of a hall has been secured, and officers and directors for the ensuing year will be chosen.

NASHVILLE TO HAVE LARGE PHOTOPLAYHOUSE.

Nashville, Tenn., is to have another large photoplayhouse, 1,200 seating capacity. The Orpheum formerly controlled by Jake Wells, and J. Pink Lawrence, has been taken over by the Dixie Amusement Company, Inc. J. Pink Lawrence, who controlled the majority interest in the Orpheum, and one of Nashville's most prominent business men, has been appointed one of the directors of the Dixie Amusement Company. The Dixie Amusement Company of Nashville also operates The Strand, which was opened February 15 last. The Orpheum is comparatively new, costing $50,000. It is well situated for a big picture theatre being on Church street facing Seventh avenue, north, running back to the new Capitol boulevard. It is understood that the Dixie Amusement Company will change the front to face the new Boulevard, which is now the most prominent thoroughfare in Nashville. It will probably be ready to open in the next forty days. A nine piece orchestra will furnish the music. It is understood a large pipe organ will also be installed. The Orpheum with the management of Roy Shelton, who is vice president and general manager of the Dixie Amusement Company with its location and its ability to handle the people with high-class feature films, success seems assured.

THE GET TOGETHER CLUB MEETS.

The Get Together Club, composed of the employees of the World Film Corporation of Chicago, held a special session in honor of Mr. R. A. Bertschy, who is enroute to the Kansas City office of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Bertschy is representing the Sales Department, and hails from the executive office.

After the meeting Mr. Weiss entertained at the North American with a buffet lunch and a cabaret performance. The following were present: E. A. Bertschy, Harry Weiss, R. H. Fox, J. A. Salter, A. Rosenthal, C. A. Dickinson, Miss B. Isreal, Miss I. Jaffe, Miss F. Axman, Miss E. Boas, Miss L. Greenberg, Miss B. Pavey, Miss B. McGrail, W. R. Scates, H. Marensky, Paul Meltzer, Miss Elsie Stockhousen, Miss P. Groetzinger, Miss Kathryn McLaughlin, Morris Taitus and L. Goldberg.

WHARTON, INC., GETS PROPERTY AT ITHACA, N. Y.

The Pathe producer, Wharton, Inc., announce that it has leased with option of purchase, Renwick Park, a well known lakeside resort at Ithaca, N. Y. The property has been used as an amusement resort for some years and comprises 45 acres of land situated at the head of beautiful Cayuga Lake and lying between the Lake and the city. A city trolley line runs into the park and furnishes excellent service.

A number of large buildings such as auditoriums, pavilions, etc., on the place need only a little remodelling to make them very well adapted to picture work. There are frontier settlement streets, log cabins, all the locations necessary to western work, as well as a splendid 400 foot pier extending into the lake.

UNITED IDEAL IN NEW STUDIO.

The Ideal Company who had just moved their studios from Tucson, Arizona, are now making films to appear on the United Program at their new plant at Hollywood, California. In addition to the many new departures they are making to broaden their scope and their efficiency, they will establish an unusually large juvenile department and will make a feature of juvenile pictures. The picture made by the Ideal Company will be classified under three heads, Western dramas, melodramas and "punch stories," which will be directed by Webster Cullison. Frank Beal will have charge of those films classed under the head of "domestic stories and refined comedies" and Carl Leviness will direct the psychological and human interest stories.

Thanhouser's Triple Coup

Secures the Services of Three Well Known Picture Workers.

NOW the big announcements are beginning to issue from New Rochelle. The long arm of Thanhouser is reaching out for material and the first additions are there, at work. They are Miss Lorraine Huling and Messrs. George Foster Platt and Frederic Sullivan. The lady is an ingenue and the gentlemen are on the staff of directors.

Lorraine Huling.

Lorraine Huling is best known to the pictures through her work with the Famous Players in "The Straight Road," "Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," and "Bachelor's Romance," with John Emerson and Henrietta Crosman. She is a graduate of the legitimate, however, having appeared in "Prunella," "Help Wanted," and other successes. Mr. Thanhouser has selected her to head one of the regular companies of the New Rochelle organization.

George Foster Platt comes to Thanhouser's from the world of the speaking stage, having recently held the position of stage director of modern plays at the New Theater, New York. At this famous institution of dramatic art he produced "The Bluebird," "Strife," "The Witch" and other plays. He was chosen for that place because of a career remarkable for its succession of notable achievements. It is a peculiar coincidence that he should join Mr. Thanhouser for it was just about ten years ago that Mr. Platt was stage manager for the Thanhouser Stock in Milwaukee.

George Foster Platt.

Frederic Sullivan's appearance at New Rochelle is really a re-engagement, for until about half a year ago he was a producer of Thanhouser films. Previous to that he was with the Reliance forces and his stage experience is very much in support of the Thanhouser policy. In the legitimate he has directed such stars as Blanche Bates, Rose Coghlan, Blanche Walsh, John Mason, Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon. A great many of his plays were under Liebler and Klaw & Erlanger management, ranging from musical comedy to the drama, "The Candy Man," "In the Bishop's Carriage," "The Truth Tellers," "The Two Weatherbys," and others, reaching a total of four hundred plays that cover only his stock experience.

Frederic Sullivan.

It is said at New Rochelle that these announcements are only the beginning; that some of the moves in contemplation will be startling in the quality of talent which they will add to the Thanhouser roster.

Lasky in New Offices

Will Occupy Entire Fifth Floor of New Building on 41st Street—Many Improvements Installed.

DURING the coming week the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company will become established in its new and elaborate offices, 120 West 41st Street, where this organization will occupy the entire fifth floor of one of the most beautiful new office buildings constructed in New York City. This removal has more than a passing significance. It means that the old quarters have become absolutely inadequate, and that larger quarters for the handling of the executive departments in this constantly growing business have become an indispensable necessity.

The building is the first of its type erected in this city and is an example of what is known as the concrete cantilever construction. It contains special film vaults conforming with all the new rules of the fire department and also an automatic fire sprinkler system which is a marvel of its kind. The entire structure is of steel and concrete, with scarcely a stick of wood.

The suite occupied by the Lasky Feature Play Company, constructed especially to meet its needs, will take up the entire fifth floor and is divided into ten offices. There are no transoms and no glass doors, and this combined with the entire absence of vibration makes the offices absolutely sound proof. One of the special conveniences is an intercommunicating dictaphone system. The entire south side of the building is of steel and glass and over the centre is a large skylight which provides light and air for all of the ten offices.

One of the unique features of the structure on the ground floor is a private theater with one hundred and fifty seats. This theater, which is beautifully decorated and equipped with every facility for projecting a perfect picture, is provided with a Wurlitzer Hope Jones organ and will be at the disposal of the Lasky Feature Play Company for the private showing of its new productions to the press and invited guests.

One of the advantages of the new offices will be larger space for the publicity department, which will make it possible to deal more successfully with advertising and accessory problems heretofore rendered difficult by insufficient facilities. It is the purpose of the Lasky company to furnish to the Paramount exchanges, and through the exchanges to the exhibitors, the most progressive assistance for the proper exploitation of its feature plays.

Minusa Screen in Hippodrome

St. Louis Concern, With Anderson as Leading Spirit, Turn Out Biggest Projection Surface Ever Manufactured in Record Time.

The Minusa Cine Products Company, which began the manufacture of Minusa Gold Fibre Screens in St. Louis, Mo., not long ago, has just installed in the New York Hippodrome what is claimed to be the largest photoplay screen ever constructed. The screen measures twenty-four feet and eight inches in width and eighteen feet and eight inches in depth.

When the Hippodrome inaugurated its present high class moving picture policy, considerable difficulty was experienced in securing the projection results which the management desired. The first screen installed was considered unsuited for the work to be done and a hurry order was placed with the Minusa people through Louis Kalvin, general manager of the eastern sales division with offices in the Times Building, New York City. Mr. Kalvin advised the kind of screen which he deemed best suited for the house and the St. Louis factory was worked night and day to turn the product out in the time allowed. The screen was delivered in New York just one week after it had been ordered—instead of the usual ten days required, despite the fact that it was not only the largest screen the company had ever manufactured but also the largest screen ever placed upon an American stage.

The installation at the Hippodrome was personally supervised by Mr. Kalvin who found it necessary to reconstruct and reinforce the frame originally ordered in order to permit the screen's being moved once at each performance at the house to make room for one of the big spectacular displays which are featured in conjunction with the pictures.

The Minusa company has for its principal moving spirit E. R. Anderson, who has been engaged in the manufacture of photoplay screens for a number of years and has been responsible for the invention of gold fibre screens, other than the Minusa, which have given splendid results.

"Hypocrites" Starts Row

Corsicana Minister Seeks Injunction and Gets a Damage Suit.

A week or two ago the Majestic Theater, Corsicana, Tex., booked the "Hypocrites" for a two days showing, one day for men only and the second day for women only. Mr. Putz, manager of the house, having heard so much about the picture, decided to have an advance showing for the ministers, newspaper men and city officials. He did so, and seven ministers, the mayor, several aldermen and most all the newspaper men in town came out to see the picture. After the performance Mr. Putz had a vote to see whether "to show, or not to show." All were very much in favor of showing it with the exception of three ministers who voiced their sentiments in rather strong terms. "A disgrace to the State, the county and to the city," they said. "One of the most immoral pictures ever thrown on a screen. If that picture is shown in Corsicana we will denounce it, as well as you and your show, through the pulpit and press." Needless to say Mr. Putz did not show the picture.

A few days later the Texas Paramount Pictures Co. of Dallas, seeing there was no chance for a return engagement with the Majestic Theater, sent a representative to Corsicana to lease the Queen Theater (which had been closed for several weeks), to show the picture anyway. The deal was closed, the picture was billed like a circus, and on the advertised date the representative alighted in town with "Hypocrites."

The show was opened on schedule time, 1 P. M., and by 2 o'clock the house was full of ladies. (First day was for ladies only). At 2.30 P. M. the deputy sheriff entered the house, asked for the proprietor or manager, served an injunction on him, signed by the seven ministers who had witnessed the performance at the Majestic, and closed the show. The Texas Paramount Picture Co. are now suing the seven ministers for $50,000 damages. The outlook for the ministers is pretty dark and the feeling is pretty strong on both sides.

Edgar Lewis Gets a Horse

Moving Picture Actors Celebrate Director's Third Anniversary in a New Way.

Harry Spingler writes from Dahlonega, Ga., where Edgar Lewis is working with William Farnum and a big company, that an original celebration of Lewis' third anniversary of his advent into filmdom was held there on Easter Monday. In his search for location Lewis has been riding a handsome horse, which he rented for the purpose from a mining engineer who is about to move away. It was quite a blow when the director learned Monday that the owner was going to take the horse with him, not wishing it to remain on a rental basis.

Learning that this was a memorable day to their director, the company negotiated the purchase of the horse and presented it to Lewis. One minute speeches were made by Mr. Farnum, Spingler, Claire Whitney, the leading woman, William Riley Hatch, George De Carlton, Elizabeth Ayer and W. J. Gross.

Although Lewis has been in the silent drama such a short time he has had a remarkable record for the production of big and successful features, among them being "The Littlest Rebel," Capt. Swift's "Northern Lights," "Samson," "The Gilded Fool," "The Thief," with Dorothy Donnelly, "The New Governor," and now "The Plunderer," Roy Norton's drama of the gold mines, which he dedicated to his friend, Rex Beach. Before entering the picture field Mr. Lewis was for many years a prominent producer for the speaking stage.

A CANADIAN FRONTIER PICTURE.

A story of the Canadian frontier of the present day, entitled "From Out the Big Snows," is now in course of production as a Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature, in three parts, under the direction of Theodore Marston. In that part already photographed, a thrilling scene is enacted where a pack of wolves attack James Morrison, a young adventurer, who has been tied to a tree in the heart of a forest by George Cooper, a half-breed Indian, the villain. Scenes in which the Northwest Mounted police figure conspicuously, a pistol duel between Donald Hall, as a doctor, and the half-breed, and action in a realistic frontier dance hall with Dorothy Kelly as Marie, the girl in the case, will furnish added thrills while the atmosphere of the tractless forest, clad in the white robes of winter, will give the picture an air of mystic realism. Bobby Connelly and Lillian Burns are the remaining members of the cast that enact the principal characters in "From Out the Big Snows."

Marie Edith Wells

THE Frohman Amusement Corporation's second release (the first was "The Fairy and the Waif") will be entitled "A Builder of Bridges." The play of the same name by Alfred Sutro was a great success.

Marie Wells has had considerable experience in motion picture work and recently was put up for competition amongst several astute motion picture makers who wanted the girl for her singular grace and beauty. For Marie is willowy and sylphlike as well as pleasing to see.

Marie Edith Wells.

Jack Read of the Dyreda; W. L. Sherrill of the Gustave Frohman Amusement Corporation and Lewis J. Selznick of the World Film cast lots for the fair Marie, and Sherrill got her.

Miss Wells' cleverness and ability as an actress will surely add prestige to Gustave Frohman's screen offerings. George Irving, the director, thinks highly of the girl's work, and George Irving, who hath drunk deeply of the Belasco tradition, is credited with knowing a good actress when he sees her.

"The Builder of Bridges" is an English society drama with scenes in London and Egypt. Sutro, the author, was inspired by Pinero.

MANGAN INCREASES POPULARITY OF CRESCENT.

It is quite apparent from efforts exerted by Francis A. Mangan, manager of the Crescent Theater, Boston Road and 168th Street, Bronx, New York City, that he is trying hard to make his house the most talked of in that part of the city. When Mr. Mangan took the management of the Crescent on his hands, the patronage of the house was rather meagre. He at once raised the price of admission from 5 to 10 cents and put on a better show. Then the stage decorations were altered and many other improvements made. The public quickly began to notice a change in the Crescent, which met with their approbation, and the patronage began to increase steadily.

An entertaining show can now always be found at the Crescent, and on holidays and around Yuletide and Easter special features are booked with no increase in admission price. On April 4, Easter Sunday, Selig's eight part feature, "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach, was shown, and the result was that the Crescent had one of its biggest, if not the biggest, days in its career as a picture theater. Mr. Mangan had to stop the sale of tickets, and hundreds of people were turned away at each show. Proper musical selections were rendered by a ten piece orchestra which helped materially to accentuate the feature parts of the drama. Another picture was also shown entitled, "A Storm on the Yellow Sea," and it depicted the dangerous maneuverings of a Japanese torpedo boat on a rough sea. It was greeted with applause. For the rendition of the overture entitled "Poet and Peasant," Mr. Mangan had devised a pretty and effective bit of stagecraft. Actual water tumbled with the noise of a cataract over imitation rocks and soil, and formed a lasting impression on the minds of the audience. The illusion was made more convincing by the artistic arrangement of the stage setting with its green trees, flowers and walks. Taken as a whole it was an artistic as well as a financial success.

VICTOR MOORE IN "SNOBS" AT THE STRAND.

Jesse L. Lasky's photodramatic production of "Snobs," in which Victor Moore makes his screen stellar debut, will be the offering for the coming week at the Strand Theater. It is notable that Victor Moore in "Snobs" will thus have the honor of being the bill for the First Anniversary of the Strand, for the most noted of American photoplay institutions has now been just a year in existence.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Stricter Censorship of Films in Chicago Demanded.

IT LOOKS as if a new Chicago ordinance on film censorship will be introduced and passed in the near future. A double standard from the view points of adults and minors will be advocated in the new ordinance. Immoral photoplays which serve no good purpose, in the way of teaching a lesson, will be barred altogether.

Alderman Kjellander is the principal figure among the city fathers who is supporting leading women of civic and reform societies, in their fight for a stricter censorship. These women hold that Mayor Harrison's recent decisions favorable to certain films objectionable to them are all wrong. The mayor holds that films must be judged entirely by the acts protrayed and the words used to supplement these acts. If there is no immoral act presented in the pictures and no immoral thought presented in words on the screen, the pictures cannot be refused a permit for exhibition, with minors barred, the mayor believes.

"We are becoming Pecksniffian," says the mayor. "We are trying to lay down rules governing the morals of others that we do not observe ourselves.

"If we are to stop a picture based on a play that is being shown in one of our main theaters we will make ourselves ridiculous. It makes me think of the 'September Morn' incident, when Chicago was made the laughing stock of the country."

Alderman Kjellander is studying the situation so as to determine whether Mayor Harrison's ruling does not permit the showing of films, the stories of which are unquestionably immoral. "If I find that the ordinance for the issuance of permits for adults only has been the means of letting down the bars to pictures that ought not to be shown either to children or grown persons, I shall seek to bring about its repeal," says the alderman.

"When that ordinance was first taken up by the subcommittee this possibility was discussed. Because of that danger Miss Harriet Vittum, Mrs. Gertrude Howe Britton, and others were inclined to oppose the ordinance and I agreed with them. Our objections were overcome by repeated statements from Leon Hornstein, assistant corporation counsel, that the ordinance did not alter or lessen in the slightest the power of the censors to refuse permits to immoral pictures."

"Twilight Sleep," an educational film, according to the Twilight Lecture Association which had prepared for its exhibition in the American Music Hall, accompanied by lectures by certain physicians, has been barred by the Chicago censors. Physicians of the Health Department attended a private exhibition and reported to Major Funkhouser that the film was not sufficiently instructive to offset its objectionable features. The Woman's City Club and other woman's organizations were strongly opposed to this film.

More Throwing of Mal-Odorous Bombs.

Twice within the past week have the throwers of mal-odorous bombs wrought their spite on moving picture theaters. The Playhouse, at 1846 West Madison street, and the Palais Royal, at 1710 West Madison, were the scenes of the outrages on Tuesday night, March 30.

Two detectives were in the Playhouse, the evening mentioned, having been assigned by the police department, which had foreknowledge of such a happening. The lights suddenly went out, but the detectives used their pocket flash lamps to show the way to the exits. A search showed that the electric wires on the roof of the building were cut. At the time of the cutting two mal-odorous bombs were thrown into the lobby and exploded, and a panic was almost started. No one, however, was hurt.

A short time afterward two bombs of the same kind were hurled into the lobby of the Palais Royal, by two men in an automobile. The vandals escaped in both cases.

The outrages are attributed to one of two warring operators' unions. The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, No. 157, has made war on the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Workers, No. 102, because the latter organization has refused to merge with the former, according to an operator in one of the theaters attacked.

Why should the proprietors of moving picture theaters be made the victims of the disagreement between these unions? This vandalism should be peremptorily stopped by the authorities, before innocent women and children are made the victims of a fatal panic.

Three Reel Selig Diamond Specials to Be Released Shortly.

In the near future, the Selig Polyscope Company will release a series of three-reel Diamond specials through the regular service of the General Film Company. These three-reel subjects, it is expected, will be highly appreciated by exhibitors and their patrons.

Among these specials are "The Quarry," adapted from the novel of the same name by John Morasco, and arranged for the screen by Gilson Willets. It tells in dramatic fashion of "third degree" methods and of the futility of circumstantial evidence. Miss Grace Darmond takes the leading feminine role, her chief support being John Charles, Frederick Hand and William Wade.

"His Father's Rifle," a wild animal subject written by Joseph F. Poland, is another. Wm. Howard, Stella Razeto and Guy Oliver take the leading parts.

"Two Boys in Blue," written and directed by Tom Mix, should make a big hit. Here are shown a running fight with Indians, an attack on a stage coach and other exciting incidents. It is needless to state that daredevil horsemanship on the part of Mr. Mix is included among the spectacular feats.

"How Callahan Cleaned Up Little Hell," produced by Thomas Santschi from the story by I. K. Friedman, is a strong expose of corrupt politics.

Uncle Sam to Bring Moving Pictures to Country Schools.

A recent dispatch from Washington gave the news that Uncle Sam is making preparations to take moving pictures to the country schoolhouse and the country church. Special automobiles built for the purpose will be equipped with a dynamo large enough to supply the current needed for the projecting machines.

The new activity is to be undertaken in connection with the agricultural extension work authorized by the recently enacted federal law (the Smith-Lever act), which provides for co-operative agricultural extension work between the states and the United States Department of Agriculture.

The purpose for which the federal funds are to be applied are defined by the act as follows.

That co-operative agricultural extension work shall consist of the giving of instruction and practical demonstrations in agricultural and home economies to persons not attending or resident in colleges in the several communities, and imparting to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications and otherwise; and this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the state agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this act.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The Selig Polyscope Company has purchased world film rights to "The Garden of Allah," including both the novel and the play. Joseph M. Harris, of Chicago, who acted as the agent of Wm. N. Selig, closed the deal with Messrs. Sanger and Jordan, of New York City.

George A. Blair, of the cine department of the Eastman Kodak Co., paid a flying visit to Chicago early last week.

Edgar O. Brooks, representing Cosmofotofilm Co., New York City, arrived in the city early last week, and will remain for about two or three weeks, attending to the interests of his company. Mr. Brooks paid us a very pleasant call and impressed us by his pleasing personality and hustling proclivities.

P. J. Morgan, president of the Morgan Lithograph Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, stopped over in this city on his way back from the Pacific Coast, where he visited the San Francisco fair and Universal City. Mr. Morgan found things rather dull in San Francisco as the big tide of visitors has not yet set towards the beauties of the Panama-Pacific exposition.

The Pine Grove theater, on Sheridan road near Broadway, was opened under the direction of Alfred Hamburger, on Saturday, April 3rd. Fritzi Scheff in "Pretty Mrs. Smith" was the principal screen attraction, and this was supplemented by "The Vanderbilt Cup Race." The opening was marked by overflowing crowds of North Shore residents.

Jesse J. Goldberg, secretary of the Life-Photo Film Corporation, New York City, arrived in the city Thursday, April 1, and remained for a few days attending to business duties. On his return trip to New York he will stop over in Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and other points in the interests of his firm.

I have received a printed invitation to be present at an exhibition of the Kriterion program at the Alhambra theater, Milwaukee, on Thursday, April 1, at 10.00 a. m. The Kriterion product is evidently being pushed with fine vim and success.

F. G. Honeck, recently head of the booking department in the Chicago office of Pathe, Inc., and now president of the Treble-Cleff Musical Movies Co., reports good business and that his product is now being used on the Frank Thielen vaudeville circuit with considerable success.

H. P. Bartlett, owner and manager of the West Chicago theatre, West Chicago, Ill., made a pleasant call one day last week. This theatre was formerly managed by Porter Bartlett, son of the proprietor, who is now traveling representative for "The Spoilers" in the interests of F. O. Nielsen. Mr. Bartlett is a great booster for the World, which he says is read in his home every week with the deepest interest. He reports excellent business at his theater.

"When We Were Twenty-One" and the Chicago plan commission's film, "A Tale of One City," are the attractions at the Ziegfeld for the current week.

Alfred Hamburger will begin his second season of moving pictures at the Fine Arts theater, on Saturday, April 10, when he will present "The Avenging Conscience." This fine subject, in six reels, is considered one of D. W. Griffith's finest achievements. A. M. Eisner, of the E-L-K Film Co., with offices in the Mallers Building, this city, owns the Illinois state rights for this subject.

The Ascher Brothers, owners of several successful moving picture theaters on the South Side, have leased a magnificent new theater that will seat 1,000 people, on Lawrence avenue, near the Northwestern Elevated Terminal. This structure, which will be known as the Terminal theater, is being erected by A. P. Canning, and the architect is Henry L. Newhouse, of this city. The building will front 150 ft. on Lawrence avenue, and, in addition to the theater, will contain stores and offices. The theater will be constructed up-to-date in every particular.

The special invitation exhibition of "The Eternal City" at the Studebaker, Thursday evening, April 1, under the management of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, was very imposing and successful. The theater was packed, and on all sides one could hear nothing but words of praise for the big film subject. There is the distinct atmosphere of "class" about the production, and it is certain of an extended and successful run. The city press in most instances gave considerable space to criticisms of the photodrama, and nearly all agreed that the subject had been masterfully treated in directing, acting and photographing. The souvenir programs for the occasion were works of art, both typographically and pictorially.

The Louisville Herald announces that Miss Jessie Stinson is winner of the "Who Will Be Lou" contest, which closed Wednesday night, March 31, in Louisville, Ky. This popularity contest was held under the auspices of the Louisville Commercial Club. The winner's reward will be the leading part of "Lou" in the two-reel "Louisville Booster Photoplay." Miss Stinson's total of 221,607 votes was 50,000 more than those of her nearest competitor, Miss Allene Hughes. The pictures will be produced by the Standard Motion Picture Co., 5 S. Wabash avenue, Chicago.

Sidney Smith, juvenile of the Selig Western comedy company, who is now playing a strong part in "The Ne'er-Do-Well," was recently united in marriage to Miss Ruth Beckman, of Portland, Ore. They are living in a beautiful bungalow in the suburbs of Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has arranged for the special recognition of the forthcoming visit of the Selig Special which leaves Chicago, Ill., Thursday, July 8th, for the Golden State. A Queen of Honor and her Court will meet the Selig tourists on their arrival in Los Angeles.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" is the general title of a series of Selig two-reel rural comedies that will be produced shortly in one of the Los Angeles studios. "Bloom Center" is the name of a real rural villge in the Selig Jungle-Zoo, Los Angeles. It is built solidly of wood throughout and has created great interest among Los Angeleans and visitors. A perfect flood of applications for visitors' cards have been received since this village was added to the big Zoo studio. It has been pronounced the most realistic village ever built for moving picture purposes. The old village pump is there in all its pristine picturesqueness and, what is better, it pumps real water. Irene Wallace, who recently joined the Selig forces, will appear as Margaret Tate, editress, in the "Chronicles" aforementioned, and Ralph McComas, a delicate youth weighing 200 pounds, minus his wearing apparel, will be seen as the general assistant at the office of the Bloom Center Weekly Bugle.

NORMAN WALTER GUNBY.

Eleven pound son arrived at the house of Walter H. Gunby on March 24, 1915. Name, Norman Walter Gunby.

Picture Playhouse Gets Terriss

Tom Terriss Feature Film Concern Will Make Release Through Well-Known Distributors.—First Release, "The Pearl of the Antilles."

CONTRACTS have been signed within the past few days between the Terriss Feature Film Co., and the Picture Playhouse Film Co., of No. 71 West Twenty-third Street, New York, whereby the former company engages to make all of its releases for the United States and Canada through the latter.

The choice of the Picture Playhouse company by the Terriss people has been made after a careful investigation of the motion picture field. The Picture Playhouse policy, aggressive yet conservative, appealed to the Terriss people and it is not at all improbable that a clinching argument in favor of this policy was the fact that the company had recently declared a semi-annual dividend.

Mildred Deverez.

The operations of the newly formed Terriss company are likely to prove quite interesting to those who observe the result of conscientious effort as applied to the production of motion pictures. Mr. Terriss believes that the future of the business is being endangered by the efforts of producers to stick too closely to the lines of construction which have proved successful in the exploitation of the spoken drama or, in other words, by the "aping" of the legitimate stage in a field which is entirely different. It is this conviction, therefore, which has made him determine to "adapt" from recognized stage successes rather than merely reproduce their action on the photoplay screen. The base of the Terriss production will in almost every instance, of course, be recognized stage successes for which Mr. Terriss holds the rights in this country and in England.

The announcement of the contract between the Picture Playhouse people and the Terriss company is being made only a couple of weeks in advance of the release of the first of the new producing company's features. Mr. Terriss and his company have been in Jamaica, West Indies, for the past four or five weeks hard at work on this initial release which is to carry the title of "The Pearl of the Antilles." About six thousand feet of negative has already been received by the Picture Playhouse people. At least six thousand more will be used to complete the finished photoplay which will be released in either five or six reels, and, with final shipments of negative expected any day, the Picture Playhouse people expect to be able to announce the release date in the very near future.

Miss Mildred Deverez, Rienzi de Cordova, Lionel Pape, Charles Mather and Rodney Hickok are among the more prominent photoplayers who accompanied Mr. Terriss to Jamaica to work in the initial photoplay. The first release, "The Pearl of the Antilles," will introduce in the leading feminine role a little actress named Miss Tessie de Cordova, who is expected to create a furore. Miss de Cordova joined the company under quite unusual circumstances. Born in Jamaica, she had been educated in Europe and took up a stage career in London some years ago, finding her way eventually into one of Mr. Terriss' companies playing in the British Isles. When announcement of the arrival of the Terriss photoplay company from the States was made in the Kingston, Jamaica, papers, it came to the attention of Miss de Cordova, who had returned to her island home because of the unsettled conditions in Europe, and she immediately got in touch with her former stage "boss," who was in need of an actress of just her type and ability in the photoplay which he had gone to Jamaica to make. It is claimed for Miss de Cordova that she is possessed of that charm of personality which has been the most important factor in the making of big screen stars among the women during the past few years.

Doings at Los Angeles.

I CAME NORTH to Santa Barbara to be at that place with Mr. and Mrs. George Blaisdell and to visit the studios. The people here are the most hospitable in the world. Met all the old faces who have been recruited from the Los Angeles studios, and it was like a home coming. Mr. Blaisdell is telling about his experiences, so I will tell of mine. Harold Lockwood bought a King eight-cylinder and he said that he found out that the car will not climb a hill on the high speed with the emergency brake set. But anyway he can drive the beautiful car now.

We stayed at the Potter hotel, one of the most beautiful in California, and the manager told me that Vivian Rich, and many other leading folks of the Flying "A" took dancing lessons at the hotel, and that they were becoming very proficient in executing some of the latest imported steps.

The Harry Pollard Feature players returned from a trip to Los Angeles where they did scenes in a real theater, the Republic, with a full house, and the players working in the boxes. The audience liked being photographed.

* * *

Tom Ricketts blew up a house while I was here, and it certainly was a big scene. It was for "The House of a Thousand Scandals." A big mob scene added to the realistic atmosphere and the four reels ought to make quite a feature.

* * *

George Field of the Henry Otto players entertained a few notables this week, the first being Mrs. George M. Pullman of Chicago, widow of the late builder of the cars that bear his name. Mr. John S. Field, retired Chicago ice maker, was another distinguished visitor.

Wallace MacDonald of the Tom Ricketts company left for San Luis Obispo where he was to sing Easter Sunday at two Easter services. He was there last year and was asked to sing, which he did, and this year the request came by mail, and he answered it by going north. His baritone voice is well known to photoplayers everywhere.

Lottie Pickford, working in the big serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," finished work one day here at 1.30 and found that she would not have to work the next day. She left home at five minutes of 2 and made the 2.15 train for Los Angeles to visit her sister Mary, and their mother. Up here they go to town in a hurry.

Bob Daly has been elected president of the Film Club here and is working hard on the new organization which has rented a bungalow and grounds and installed everything to make the club one of the best in the south. The members are all working with the one idea of making the club a regular place for everyone connected with the film industry here. We saw the new quarters and the club is to be congratulated.

Now for a little Los Angeles news. Irvin S. Cobb, the noted humorist and war writer, appeared at the Trinity auditorium to lecture to his many friends and admirers. It was his only appearance on the coast. He used some war scenes to illustrate his talk which had never before been run in America.

Again we say a word for "The Clansman." Nine solid weeks. Packed. Also "Hypocrites" has done three weeks, every six shows a day packed. Manager Freidlander of the Majestic inaugurated the new plan at the big Majestic theater by putting on a feature, Bayard Veillers' big play, "The Fight." The first run was made at 11 o'clock Easter Sunday. The policy of the show house is to exhibit only big reels of big features.

Thomas H. Ince has added an artist to his big staff of workers at the canyon studios. This time it is a youthful sculptor, Paul Zombardi, who came west as a poor young man to search for work with George Beban in "The Sign of the Rose." He failed to get in the picture work so asked for any kind of work, and he demonstrated his ability by making a madonna, using Bessie Barriscale as his model. (The whole story sounds funny, but Kenneth O'Hara vouches for its truth.)

"Damon and Pythias" are having their first showing in the city at the Alhambra theater at 15 and 25 cents. Every performance draws one of the biggest houses of the season and the picture is well received by the fans.

John Noble, directing "The High Road" with Miss Valli Valli starred, did one of the most gigantic scenes ever attempted in this city last Sunday. The script calls for the burning of a big factory where many girls are at work. The set selected was a real factory downtown. The scene was done just after church and you can draw your own imaginative picture of the scene that followed the fire alarm. Smoke pots aplenty, with black fumes and white puffs of exploding chemicals, 35 mounted police and 50 regulars on foot, a hook and ladder truck, a real smoking, screeching fire engine, streams of water plying on the building, and twenty girls jumping into fire nets. Real jumps, too. The mob scene was the big one too with several hundred extras, with the immense Sunday crowd as a background. Mr. Rolfe's enthusiasm is unbounded and his one motto he says is "More people, big scenes," and he surely had them that day. Noble exposed 3,100 feet of film and got 81 good scenes in the day. The interior of the factory was duplicated at the studio and then fired.

Since the birds have come and spring is here a number of new faces are to be seen at the wheels of fine looking motor cars. Among the latest are Lloyd Ingraham, Mutual; Harold Lockwood, American; Eddie Dillon, Mutual; Olga Gray and Tod Browning, Mutual, and George Larking of the Features Ideal is being pestered by a salesman for the Scoot Arrow or some sort of speed vessel.

Fay Tincher is being copied. Some Oklahoma squaws saw her in a Komic picture and the exhibitor bought one of Fay's famous contrast dresses and now the women of the Indian reservation are wearing them gleefully. Bennie Lubinville says it is not a press yarn, but he ought to be made to prove this one even if we did tell the story as he did.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Julius Steger

AMONG the most popular stage stars who have recently been induced to appear before the camera, none is better known than Julius Steger, who will soon make his debut in the World Film release of "The Fifth Commandment," a story replete with heart interest, based on his famous vaudeville offering of the same title with which he has scored the most remarkable success ever known in that branch of stage entertainment.

Julius Steger.

Mr. Steger's career on the American stage has been as varied as it has been prosperous. Born in Vienna, where the light operas come from, and educated in that city, he came to New York when not more than a youth. He first attracted attention on the stage as the leading support of Marie Tempest, and since then has created the principal part in many of the most prominent musical productions on Broadway. His last appearance in light opera he made in Victor Herbert's "It Happened in Nordland," with Lew Fields. Soon after he appeared in vaudeville as a serious actor, presenting "The Fifth Commandment." This was a remarkable transition, but made so successfully that he has held a most conspicuous place among the headliners in high-class vaudeville for the past seven years. The verdict of vaudeville audiences has been approved by the discriminating critics from New York to San Francisco. Among his several worthy contributions to the vaudeville stage, "The Fifth Commandment" has been singled out by editorial writers of the country as the most striking example of what a fine offering and a fine artist has done toward the elevation of modern vaudeville. Mr. Steger is gifted with the rare dramatic talent that reaches the heart, always perfectly natural, and therefore the more impressive; and he is also the possessor of a fine voice which has long ago made him famous.

Early Motion Picture Days in London

A Few Reminiscences of Men and Pictures When the Cinema Business Was Young.

By J. Frank Brockliss.

CHANGES have come so fast and conditions that obtained only a decade ago have so entirely passed away that they seem already lost in the long ago. But the development of the cinema business has been absorbingly interesting. To have had a part in it is no small fate; for, looking at it broadly, one finds in it things of deep significance even in the social progress of the world. No other business has ever been like it. As several have pointed out, the commodity we deal in is marked through and through with the local personality of the country that puts it on the market; it comes like a new adventure to people of other lands and we are busy carrying it all over the world. No one can foresee what the final effects of it will be; but we feel assured that it will be wholesome.

J. Frank Blockliss.

The Moving Picture World has asked me for an account of my experiences in the cinematograph business. As Tennyson's Ulysses found, the things we see become a part of us, and the personal pronoun is necessary to making our experiences seem real. If things dissatisfy us, it is a blessing to have them so unsatisfactory that we are impelled to better them. My first experience of the business world was in the "County Fire Office" in London, one of those respectable but quiet positions in which one gets to the office at ten in the morning and leaves at four in the afternoon. It had little outlook towards advance and didn't use very much of my energy. So I didn't put up with it long. Two friends of mine in Paris were on the point of launching a business of their own as photographic and optical manufacturers and I went in with them. It was necessary for me to learn this new business and to speak French. I went to Paris for three months and returned to London having acquired the necessary knowledge. We sold all kinds of lenses and optical apparatus. It was just at this time that cinematograph business was born, and we were called upon to furnish lenses for it. The handling of this part of the business brought me into personal contract with the cinematograph people. I soon saw that there was more money in the cinematograph film business than in optics. One day Mr. Popert of the Pathe Company, a friend of Mr. Romanet, was in the office and told me that he had just returned from America where he had sold all the films he took with him just like hot cakes. This and many other incidents proved to me that the business promised a growing and lucrative field, but I could not persuade Romanet and Guilbert to take it up.

It happened at this time that Charles Urban, who, after leaving the Warwick Trading Company, a pioneer of the business, had become one of the important film manufacturers of the day, was handling in London the pictures made by George Melies of Paris. He decided to lower the then prevailing price for film of 12 cents a foot to 8 cents a foot, but Melies would not consent to follow suit. The London Melies agency was thus left free and, after negotiations with Mr. Melies, I secured it and started out in the cinematograph business on my own account, trading under the title of the Star Film Trading Company. Shortly after my debut with Melies films I altered the title of my firm to my own name and added to my program other films, among them the "Le Lion" and "Mendel" pictures of Paris, which business, together with the exploiting of a conical solid lens I had invented for motorcar headlights, called the "sylverlyte" lens kept me busy.

The exchanges in London were few at that time. Among the chief of them were the New Bioscope Company, run by Griffiths, the Jury's Company, run by W. J. Jury, the Gaumont Company and the New Century Company. Several others were doing good business at that time. I was located at 7 Rupert Court, Picadilly, not far from Cecil Court, which old timers will remember as the original center of the business, and which was known among the boys as "Flicker Alley." In still earlier days the films, they were shorter than now, were sold outright and mostly to traveling showmen. These traveling showmen, some of whom have become very important men in the business, found that they were collecting a number of pictures that were of no further use to them and one or two of them started the plan of putting the films, that they had bought for themselves, out to hire. It was at once popular and the beginning point of an immense business. These films were, for the most part, made by Pathe, Gaumont, Eclipse, Lux, Hepworth, Williamson, Cricks and Martin, Eclair, Itala, Ambrosio and a few other European manufacturers. American-made pictures had not been thought of. But they soon came with their stories of Indians, cowboys and the thrill of western adventure. They were different; there was new life in them and they just filled the bill with those who wanted novelty and excitement. They swept everything before them. The earliest were of Vitagraph make, but very soon Lubin, Kalem, Selig and Biograph films also appeared.

Shortly after I opened my office I met Mr. Swett who had brought cinematograph pictures to advertise the Canadian Pacific Railway, I think it was, at one of our big expositions and used a Motiograph machine which interested me a good deal. Through him I began a correspondence with A. C. Roebuck of the Motiograph Machine Company of Chicago, and acquired the European agency for that machine.

I had not been in the business long before I noticed in the American papers advertisements announcing other American brands of pictures. I immediately got into correspondence with these manufacturers and, through the influence of my friend, A. C. Roebuck, I secured the agency of the Imp and Powers films. After this I made my first of many trips to America where I always received such a welcome that I often think that I would like to live here. My first trip brought me the Rex agency and I have never visited this side of the Herring Pond without returning with some addition to my business. On one of my early visits I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Siegmund Lubin and was invited to inspect his factory at Philadelphia. I was greatly impressed by its size and all the facilities it had for making pictures. The go-ahead policy of the Lubin Company also struck me forcibly and when some two years ago, the proposition of my connecting up with the Lubin Company came, I gladly jumped at the opportunity, and immediately reconstructed my business, by which I may describe a turning myself and my whole European business over to the handling of Lubin films. This was about the time when Mr. Lubin acquired his magnificent estate of 500 acres at Betzwood, where his additional facilities are enormous. At that time he was already making such tremendous productions as "When the Earth Trembled." I felt that in lining up with Mr. Lubin I was connecting myself with the greatest picture maker in the world. My judgment was amply justified for I immediately started out selling an average of 200,000 feet of Lubin film every week, but that is as ten years ago and conditions are very different now. They are very encouraging, however, when one considers what burdens the war has imposed on us. My average sales this month are a little over 100,000 feet of Lubin film every week. Considering the rapid strides the Lubin Company has been making and judging by what I saw when in Philadelphia, I shall considerably increase this average shortly.

In England to-day we want the very sensational or the highly amusing; audiences want to be made to laugh heartily or be thrilled. Military dramas are especially in demand. Bookings of single and two reel pictures are strong on what is termed the "open market." For the "exclusive" market we want three and four reel pictures and generally cut longer ones down to that length. We can not profitably use many of the long feature films of five or six reels, for which there is such a great demand here, and I think that it is because we have few theatres with big organs and big orchestras and no houses that are run quite like your Strand theater in New York. But I expect that we will shortly have them and believe that they will prove profitable investments.

I am returning with the feeling that I shall soon be able to realize my ambition of seeing the Lubin films at the top of the European market.

Horsley Entertains Picture Men

Special Reception to Principal Film Producers of West Coast—Discusses Point of Vital Interest to the Progress of the Industry.

ON SUNDAY afternoon, March 21, David Horsley gave a reception at Horsley Park in Los Angeles, where his new MinA studios are being built, to the prominent people of the film world whose interests are now represented in Los Angeles, California.

The function turned out to be one of the most important that has ever been held in the history of the industry. Intended as an informal gathering of the fraternity to signalize the return to the scene of his former triumphs of the man who opened the first studio in Hollywood, it developed into a highly significant business meeting—the first of its kind that has ever been held between the principal employers of both the licensed and independent interests, their department heads and leading actors.

It is probable that similar meetings will be called from time to time, which will eventually develop into a board of trade for the protection of the industry. The gates of the Bostock Arena and Jungle were closed to outsiders for the day, and the entertainment was offered exclusively for Mr. Horsley's distinguished guests.

Long before the specified time the "film-folk" began to arrive in a constant stream of automobiles and the entrance constituted an "Old Home Week" scene in the happy meeting of Mr. Horsley with hosts of his friends of the Southern California film world.

The celebration served a dual purpose in re-uniting Mr. Horsley, in persona, and his Los Angeles interests and in bringing him in direct contact with the entire filming interests of this section of the country. It also formed a most excellent opportunity for the expression of his views and sentiments relative to the standing and prospects of the business, which he did in a carefully worded speech. A most noticable effect of the "speech" was apparent in the many congratulations tendered to Mr. Horsley in appreciation of the sound sense which he expressed and which tended to the furthering of the interests of all those connected, in both a major or minor key, with an industry that now stretches along the whole coast of California.

A delightful afternoon was passed in viewing the collection of wild animals.

During the intermission Mr. Horsley had motion pictures taken of the crowd, the happy laughing children indulging in the elephant rides, the polars disporting in their "Arctic Bath" and other hundred and one features that have assisted to make the name of "Bostock" famous throughout the world. On being reseated a still picture was taken of the mass of faces in the commodious pavilion and the remaining portion of the arenic program was watched and cheered with an unflagging enthusiasm as act after act was given. The feeding of the entire collection of animals closed the program of an afternoon that will stand out as an "event" in the annals of filmdom of the West.

"Road o' Strife" a Model Serial

Lubin Production Brings Installment Story to High Degree of Perfection.

THE new Lubin serial, "Road O' Strife," written by Emmett Campbell Hall, produced by John Ince, featuring Mary Charleson, Crane Wilbur and Jack Standing and supported by the strongest and largest cast that has ever appeared in a Lubin production, will undoubtedly attract wide attention. These stories, the first of which was released on April 5, bring the installment story to a high degree of perfection being in form the concrete result of regarding every serial and series heretofore produced as an experiment and, by analysis and deduction, reaching a logical and absolute conclusion, both as to dramatic possibilities and the basic elements of popularity.

The release is a true serial, and illustrates clearly that between the serial, the serial-series, and the series are fundamental differences, and that an installment story should decisively come under one of these classifications, each of which possesses its own peculiar merits, but which should not be confused.

The plot of "Road o' Strife" concerns only the principal characters, whose participation in the action is practically continuous, a fact which will afford satisfaction to the many admirers of Miss Charleson, Mr. Wilbur and Mr. Standing. The story is of a highly dramatic nature, the suspense being maintained until the very end, and many startling situations serve to keep the interest intense. At several points in the serial the main issues of preceding action are clearly conveyed to the spectator for the benefit of those who may have missed the first installments. As in the case of a skillfully constructed magazine serial, and for the same sound reason, each installment of "Road o' Strife" ends in acute suspense of such nature as will cause speculation, and a fixed determination on the part of the picture patron to see the next part.

NOTED CHARACTER LEAD RETURNS TO AMERICAN STUDIOS.

George Periolat, formerly with the American, has been reengaged by President Hutchinson and will fill a character lead in the $20,000 Prize Continued Story, which will be produced by the American Film Manufacturing Company.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

DISCRIMINATE.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., is just now passing through the common experience of all towns where the moving pictures secure a foothold.

Of course the ministers are most properly on the alert and are swiftly condemning the existing and surrounding evils, but, unfortunately, they fall into the too common error of making sweeping denunciations of moving pictures themselves, while trying to deal with the attendant evils.

The experiences at Jamestown are by no means new. They are those of ten thousand cities and towns all over the country, so that in dealing with the criticisms in this particular case is to deal with them all everywhere. Clergymen as a rule make the one great common mistake of a sweeping denunciation which condemns the whole system of kinematography instead of dealing only with the attendant evils. A general lack of discrimination is the one great fault of unrestrained criticism, besides which, to those of us who are as familiar with the moving pictures as we are with the alphabet of our own language, it is both astonishing and painful to notice how little is known about the moving pictures by those who are called upon to deal with their public appearances. By reason of the positions they occupy they rightly become judges and censors of public morals, but a wider and deeper knowledge of the whole realm of kinematography is one of the greatest needs among clergymen today, indeed much of their lack of this knowledge —which becomes ignorance—is almost as unpardonable as if a physician were not acquainted with the causes of the disease which he tries to remedy. Without doubt if one takes upon oneself to correct abuses he must be thoroughly acquainted with the causes from which those abuses spring. Educational moving pictures reveal the truth that the moving pictures are one of the greatest blessings of our current times and to denounce moving pictures in general is most absurd, if not short sighted, wilful ignorance.

It appears that in Jamestown the poster evil, dark and ill-ventilated picture houses are the real causes for a tirade against the pictures themselves. If the Jamestown critic knew the inside—as we know it—he would know that those in the heart of the moving picture business are bitter opponents of both improper places and alluring posters. The best houses have neither of these evils.

Is it not a fact that the lesser good basks in the light of the greater good? We do not denounce the great circus because of the tawdry side shows, or belittle the great exposition, with all its manifold good works, because of its "Midway," or the prolific country fair because of the "fakers." Neither should the moving pictures be blamed for the evil poster, the ill-ventilated, poorly lighted, non-fireproof building. Let the critics strike at the abuses and the uses will soon manifest themselves.

There is all the difference in the world between talking a thing "UP" and talking it "DOWN."

Talking Up the Moving Pictures.

All over America, in colleges, schools, training institutions, settlement houses, hospitals and prisons, the good work of the moving picture as an educator is one constant theme.

Whole pages could be filled with quotations from authorities among all classes as to their great results and value.

As the poor man's theater they have revolutionized amusements, and made the humble family life better. As a proof the hysterical complaints of the saloonkeepers is the grandest. There is less drinking, besides a decrease in crime from drinking, because of the diversion of the nickels from the saloon to the picture house.

The brewing industry is suffering a great loss, while tens of thousands of people are being employed in the moving picture industry, which bids fair to take a second place behind the great automobile industry.

Street lounging is greatly decreased and the consequent evils resulting therefrom diminished as city police and court records testify. As the people become better acquainted with the pictures, their taste and discrimination being educated, they demand better pictures, better subjects, with the attendant better surroundings. That this is so is proved by the nature of the demand as compared with but five years ago. In distinctly educational work it is enough to say that it is agreed that the discovery of the educational value of the moving picture is second only to the discovery of printing.

Talking Down the Pictures.

By looking upon and exaggerating the abuses by baser minds of the moving picture business a critic is unjust The fact that evil things and evil persons are diverted from their beaten tracks by the pictures does not mean that they are converted. To point out evils and declare them as samples of the whole is dishonest. To speak of one nickel going to the picture house instead of the bakery, and yet say nothing of the ten nickels going to the picture house instead of the saloon is dishonest.

To parade the minimum of vices of the pictures and ignore the maximum of virtues is misrepresentation and is dishonest. To make great speeches to parade an evil result of a moving picture fault rather than to cloak it and remedy the defect is highly improper. It requires the trained mind presumably to be found in the public teacher, censor and guide to rightly present vice and virtue in their repellent and attractive proportions. Sweeping declarations in either case are dishonorable.

In Brooklyn last week a boy returning from a very proper "safety first" lecture put into practice—again very properly —the lesson he had learned. But, being too juvenile in his knowledge, he and four others were blown to their death by an explosion. Would any one denounce the "safety first" lectures? Surely not.

Analyze, discriminate, separate the good from the evil, "let both grow together until the harvest." Don't sweep all into the fire, but garner the good, re-sow it, and it will bring much good fruit. The educational power of the moving picture is the greatest servant of every good and great teacher today.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

In the Pathe color process the Strand Theater is showing some interesting and beautiful educational series pictures. The latest are of Buddhist Temples, whereby one is transported back through the centuries to these marvelous relics of distant times. One of these imposing and magnificent temples is now occasionally used as a residence of the Dalai Lamar, or high pontiff of the church. This film also contains other scenes of Oriental splendor the perfection of which is largely attributable to the beautiful color process effects.

* * *

The topical series continue to include scenes from the battlefields of Europe. These being authentic—a fact which is self evident, making unnecessary the guarantee—give much insight into the actual nature of the conflict and are most instructive as revealing the differences characterizing the nations involved. Some splendid night pictures of the Panama Exposition, showing especially the Jewel Tower when illuminated, are very attractive. There are also pictures of the Vanderbilt Cup races, all of which are by the World Film Co.

LOUIS B. GOULDEN RESIGNS.

Louis B. Goulden of the Imperial Films Corporation of Milwaukee and Minneapolis resigns as general manager. Mr. Goulden states that he has something up his sleeve that will surprise every exhibitor in Wisconsin as well as the entire moving picture business in general, but at the present writing is unable to give any further information.

Mr. Goulden is a pioneer in the feature game, as well as in the moving picture end of the business. He will be remembered as being the organizer of the Northern Feature Film Service of Chicago about three years ago, he has also organized various feature exchanges in other large cities.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THIS Column is in receipt of a letter from Sing Sing (N. Y.), prison written upon the letterhead of the "Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing." The letter encloses "copy" on "an appeal to reason," and the "copy" is directed to the question of parole. The letter states that "we desire that you exploit and illustrate the same to the greatest advantage and get it before the public at the earliest possible moment." But one signature appears upon the letter accompanying the "appeal." This appeal is signed "The Mutual Welfare League." The signature to the letter has beneath it a request for confidence. The letter states that the appeal is made to the Moving Picture World "reaching the great heart of the people, who are the power that has brought about all great forms of reform, and to this end we appeal to them through you as a medium."

The appeal accompanying the letter asks "The Moving Picture World and the moving picture houses throughout the State to use their powerful influence in our behalf to obtain simple justice for many deserving men now confined in prison who might well be released on parole." It then continues with the statement that judges hand out sentences in terms of years as if they were days. The appeal asks if the people are aware that to destroy or diminish the value of property to the extent of $50 is punishable in this State by four year's imprisonment; that to feed or shelter a sparrow is punishable by one year's imprisonment and a fine of $500; that to blow smoke in another's face is assault. The appeal concludes with "reduce your taxes by relieving yourself of the burden of keeping healthy, strong men in prison." Again the appeal says: "Do it now. Moving picture houses are requested to flash a slide, the 'Remedy,' pointed out above." Again the appeal says: "These are only a few of the silly criminal laws that make us criminals and fill the prisons and jails for you to support by heavy taxation."

* * *

In the language of the motion picture director we wish to make an "insert" and say we believe that the entire communication—letter and appeal—has been written or inspired by a well known bank wrecker, or his immediate friends, and the object is to excite in his behalf through the motion picture screen a sympathy which the courts felt it could not allow him.

* * *

As the involuntarily appointed promulgator of the appeal we see no ground upon which to make a sane argument. If judges are reckless in the handling of sentences they are accountable to the laws under which they take oath of office and fill that office. On this score the Bar Association is fully equipped. The fact that to destroy $50 worth of property is punishable by four years' imprisonment does not prove that there is a lesser penalty; nor does it justify or mitigate such destruction; nor does it carry much weight in behalf of those appealing for better parole laws when they confess knowledge of such existing laws. No man has been sent to Sing Sing for blowing smoke in another's face. The offender is generally sent away in an ambulance, or a taxicab. As to the sheltering and feeding of sparrows and the penalty provided therefor we plead ignorance. We doubt that prosecutions have been made in recent years under such a law. The authorities have been kept too busy looking after the sheltering and feeding of "chickens."

* * *

But, aside from all this, why should the Moving Picture World and the moving picture exhibitors be appointed the champions of the alleged sufferers under the present parole system? The province of motion pictures is and their aim from the beginning has been, to deter crime, to keep people out of prisons, not to liberate them. The motion picture entertains and instructs the uninitiated; it warns the criminal. Every picture thrown upon a screen tells either a story of the reward for righteous living or the penalty due those who live to the contrary. The Moving Picture World advertises and comments upon such stories in accord with the desire to prevent crime. There its mission ends. After a crime is committed the matter lies with the law and its contingent organizations. If the parole laws are inadequate or unjust the flashing of slides upon moving picture screens will not make them perfect. Such campaigns are more likely to create an undue feeling on the part of people who are always too ready for the application of the torch, especially when they are instigated by culprits.

* * *

The appeal for a more sensible and reasonable parole bill from a point of taxation and the saving of taxes is weak. In the first place the greatest burden of taxation comes from the vast expenditures required to prevent crime and put the offenders behind the bars. A certain bank wrecker now in Sing Sing put New York County to more expense to convict him and fight his appeals to the goal of final imprisonment than it would cost to keep him in Sing Sing for all time to come. And do not forget that the motion picture people stand their full share of taxation.

* * *

Only recently the so-called reformers declared that the moving pictures had taken the place of the reformatories and prisons in making culprits. Probably the Sing Sing correspondent failed to learn of this accusation. It has been made, nevertheless, and when confronted by "an appeal to reason" the moving picture people find themselves hors de combat.

* * *

The Moving Picture World is devoted to the interests of the moving picture industry. It is a trade journal advocating the advancement and protection of one of the greatest entertaining, instructive and scientific dispensers in history. In doing this it has found opposition only in the ranks of so-called reformers and grafters. Its sphere is well defined and it cannot step aside to take up the complaints of any special class that has a remedy in appeal to people and organizations paid for the purpose. Thousands of dollars are appropriated annually for inquiry into, and remedying, such complaints as are made by "an appeal to reason." Why not appeal to them? On second thought, why should an appeal be necessary. Thousands upon thousands of moving picture people are paying heavy taxes annually for the support of boards of pardons, prison reform associations, societies for the amelioration of the unfortunate, chaplains, visiting rectors, crime suppressors and hundreds of other kindred associations and individuals who are supposed to look after such people as the "appeal to reason" covers. What is being done with the money?

* * *

The truth is that sand is being thrown into the eyes of the contributors to the funds of many of these reform movements and the money is not being spent where it might do the most good. Thousands of dollars have been spent in the last few years in senseless persecution of the moving picture business, and it is a safe bet that much of the money has been derived from a diversion of the funds from the course intended by the contributors.

* * *

It is about time that an appeal to reason be framed by the motion picture interests and that laws be framed by which some account may be kept of the funds so lavishly expended by the so-called reformers. We hear much about investigations of lobbyists, the amount they spend, where they get it to spend and who got it. But the investigation is always directed against the recognized political lobbyist. You never see the so-called reformer on the anxious bench. He shields himself behind "a righteous purpose." He bribes, spies and persecutes with impunity under the guise of detection of crime. Any organization or body of people that raise and dispense funds in movements that affect the general interests of the public should be subject to laws requiring them to account for the dispensing of such funds, and such account should be made to the public. If the net is to be drawn let it be equally taut. If funds are donated for charitable purposes, or for the aid of such people who might be affected by an appeal to reason like that which comes from Sing Sing they should not be diverted to junkets for attacks upon the motion picture industry and other foreign purposes. Too many confidence games are being worked under the guise of reform. Reform is producing too many grafters. Reformers are not doing their work. It is time the motion picture people took a hand in framing laws that will bring these people to a realization of the facts that they owe a duty to more than themselves.

* * *

It is regretted that more encouragement cannot be given the Sing Sing appeal to reason. We cannot ask the exhibitors to enter into the fray. The so-called reformers should do this. Better still, let them do what they are paid to do.

ARTHUR BACK IN STUDIO.

Walter Arthur, the head of the Vitagraph camera department, has assumed his place at the studio after a long siege of illness.

British Notes

THE EUROPEAN conflict has been mainly, if not entirely, responsible for the exploitation of a kind of film which does not by any means appear to find the same favors with the American producer. I refer to the biographical picture, a new and master specimen of which was unspooled for the first time yesterday (March 11). This production, created by the British and Colonial Company, centers around the life history of Florence Nightingale, the "lady of the lamp" of Crimean fame, and treating as it does a military theme of topical import, should stand a reasonable prospect of commercial success. Only a few weeks ago the "Life of Lord Roberts" was released by the Samuelson Film Company, while we have had several biographical picturizations of non-military celebrities since war was declared. Retrospection is reputedly a national characteristic of the Briton, and it may not be too much to anticipate that the usual press notice upon the demise of a notability will in the future be invariably illustrated by its motographic equivalent.

The Walturdaw Company, of Gerrard street, London, have secured the world's picture rights for the important sporting event at the London Opera House at the end of this month when Frank Moran (American champion) boxes Bombardier Wells (English champion) for the world's heavy-weight white championship.

The Railway Clearing House, the Metropolitan exchange of all our different railroad systems, has notified the Film Renters' Association that in future films will not be conveyed by passenger trains unless in special boxes. The boxes specified must be unpainted rectangular wood-lined metal cases to hold not more than six spools. The only lettering permitted beyond the name and address of the owners is "Cinema Films. Keep in a cool place."

Verily, truth is stranger than fiction. A Liverpool exhibitor gives me this as gospel. One evening last week a policeman entered the auditorium for the customary daily inspection. The time was ten past nine and the picture on the screen—well, I forgot for the moment the name, but it was a Thanhouser featuring little Helen Badgley. At this point I should explain that one of the conditions under which Liverpool shows are licensed is the exclusion of children after nine p. m. Turning to his uniformed confrere the strong limb of the law was overheard by the manager to seriously query whether the provisions relating to children being in the hall after nine embraced the pictures on the screen. And Liverpool is still called the Mersey City.

Bunny is to have a new role in the moving picture theaters here in a few days' time. Mr. Geo. H. Smith, the London Vitagraph representative, is preparing an assortment of lantern slides depicting the inimitable and ample John appealing for contributions to the Belgian Relief Fund.

A Well-Known producer is instituting arrangements with the object of preparing a feature film revolving around the career of King George V. As this has been the ambition of not a few producing luminaries any development will be watched with the keenest interest.

At the last meeting of the "Authors Society" (Cinematograph Committee) a communication from the Essanay Company asked for the co-operation of the society, in the alleviation of infringement of author's titles. While not guaranteeing that any list of titles submitted were in order the society gladly agreed to render what assistance they could. Similar assistance, it is understood, will be accorded to other firms.

A deep interest is already manifesting itself amongst students of motographic technique in the researches of Dr. C. E. Kenneth Mees of the Eastman Kodak Company's laboratories, Rochester. When, upon the absorption of the London firm of photographic specialists, Wratten & Wainwright, into the Kodak Company, Dr. Mees removed to Rochester, England lost one of her foremost authorities upon photographic color values. A few evenings ago specimens of his new "Kodachrome" results were submitted to the members of the Royal Photographic Society and I have since been privileged to see these. As, presumably, they have been similarly exhibited in America it will be superfluous to describe the discovery, but although the process is at present confined to the limitations of ordinary photography, one thing above all is significant. This is, that "Kodachrome," like "Kinemacolor," is a two-color and not a three-color process. Modern experience has taught that if only upon account of the screen-rulings three-color processes are not the most suitable means of achieving perfection in natural color reproduction. The salient feature of the "Kodachrome" positives shown here is that screen-rulings, marks or dots are absolutely minus and this improvement, coupled with the easy duplicity of both negatives and positives, will undoubtedly strongly commend the new process for motographic exploitation. Beyond the foregoing distinction "Kodachrome" is not markedly dissimilar from "Kinemacolor" in chemical construction and treatment.

Operators of the Gaumont Company have been very heavily fined at Newcastle for taking moving pictures of a battleship on the river Tyne without permission. Despite the evidence that the films, intended for the "Gaumont Graphic," were not exhibited fines amounting to £35 and an order for the confiscation of the films were imposed.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

Mme. Malvine Lobel

ANOTHER star has been lured from the legitimate by the promise of even greater success on the photoplay screen. This time it is Mme. Malvine Lobel, known abroad as well as in this country as an emotional actress of extraordinary ability, who has measured talents with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt by reason of her work in Alexandre Bisson's "Mme. X," and also achieved distinction in such plays as "Everywoman" and the masterpieces of Shakespeare.

Mme. Malvine Lobel.

Mme. Lobel's venture onto the screen is to be conducted by the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., of which company Ivan Abramson is the managing director. The script is a five-part photoplay carrying the title of "The Unwelcome Wife," and preparations for its production have been in progress for many months. Mr. Abramson has written the photoplay and at the present time is engaged in supervising the actual making of the picture for release the latter part of April or early in May.

To support Mme. Lobel in the new production Mr. Abramson has engaged a number of well known screen players, among them Miss Vivian Prescott, to whom has been entrusted a part which is equally as strong as that provided for the principal member of the company. Miss Prescott will be remembered as an able player whose past performances with other companies in the motion picture industry have given great promise for the future. William B. McNulty, who has played leads with Essanay, Biograph, Pathe, and others, has been secured for the leading male role. Other principals are Edward J. McKim, Pearl Ganz, and D. L. Dunn.

"The Sins of the Parents," and "Should a Woman Divorce?" previous Ivan Film productions, have been quite successful, and even better things are expected from "The Unwelcome Wife," which is claimed to have a much stronger story than either of the previous photoplays.

"His Jungle Sweetheart" is a Selig Jungle-Zoo wild animal story directed by Giles R. Warren and in which Miss Edith Johnson enacts the leading role. She fondles wild animals during the action of the story as if they were house pets, and the one-reel picture play is certain to create a sensation. There is an arena scene in which Miss Johnson compels the jungle beasts to perform to her will.

Personal Criticism.

OCCASIONALLY some exhibitor writes asking for a personal criticism instead of through the paper. Unless we are exceedingly busy we are glad to comply with the request if a return envelope accompanies the letter, but we think that this attitude of the writers is a trifle selfish. If you fear adverse comment, ask that the name of the house and town be suppressed and this will be done. If you want a comment more quickly than can be gotten from the paper, send a return envelope and a carbon will be made and sent you, but please do not ask for personal letters. We want to give all the help we can to exhibitors, but if you ask help, be willing to pass the help along to others.

Class A.

The New Fillmore theater, San Francisco, in its announcement, says it is "absolutely Class A." By way of proving the fact they send out an opening announcement that is in the same class. As a last detail each announcement is signed with a real pen and real ink by Louis R. Greenfield, who seems to be an equally "real" manager. It is a rough card of excellent stock, ten inches long by four and a quarter wide. About two and a quarter inches at the top is folded over on itself. This carries the name of the house and its location and a small cut of a scene from Du Barry, the opening attraction. This is in a countersunk panel. This not only adds greatly to the effect, but this ironing down ensures the perfect printing of the fine screen half tone, which would not be possible on the stock without this treatment. It adds to the cost, just as the turning down of the flap adds to the cost of an extra printing, but it all serves to give emphasis to the fact that the house is to be "Class A" in every respect. Two tickets are sent for the opening night "or any other evening that you may desire to use them." That is another of the little touches. The limiting "good except Saturday and Sunday" has no place on an opening invitation. Even at this distance we feel that we would like to visit the New Fillmore, but up to date no one has shown any signs of inviting us to visit the fair.
